the master took and paid for his ticket, for such an action does not depend upon contract but on the common law duty of the defendants to carry the goods safely (i). As in the case of a carrier of goods, a general notice limiting the liability of the company is of no avail; but the company are entitled to all the protection afforded by the Carriers Act; and special contracts may be made (k).

General notice.

Secondly, as to the persons of passengers. Carriers of passengers are not, like carriers of goods, insurers against all injuries except by the act of God or by public enemies, and their undertaking is not an undertaking absolutely to convey safely (l). The rule appears to be, that carriers of passengers are required to carry safely those whom they take into their coaches, as far as human care and foresight will go; consequently they are liable for the result of any accident which may arise through negligence (m). Thus it has been laid down, that every stage-coach proprietor impliedly undertakes that his coach shall (k) See ante, 511, 513. Where by a bye-law made by a company, and allowed by a judge, in pursuance of the special acts, every passenger was allowed a specified weight of luggage free of charge, but it was also intimated "that the company will not be responsible for the care of the same, unless booked and paid for accordingly," and a passenger who had not booked her luggage lost it, it was decided that the company were liable for the loss, it not being shown that the passenger had any notice given to her of the existence of the bye-law; and semble, per Maule, J., that the company could not, by a bye-law, repeal their common law liability as carriers. Great Western R. Co. v. Goodman, 21 L. J. (C. P.) 197; 12 C. B. 313. The opinion expressed by this learned judge has been subsequently affirmed. See Williams v. Great Western R. Co., 10 Exch. 15. It seems, however, that the company may make a special contract, by a proper notice that they will not be responsible for the due arrival of trains. See, however, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 2, ante, 455. And see

Denton v. Great Northern R. Co., 5 E. & B. 860; 25 L. J. (Q. B.) 129, where the company were held liable for damages sustained by plaintiff in consequence of false time tables published by the company. In Hamlin v. Same, 26 L. J. (Exch.) 20; 1 H. & N. 408, it was held that plaintiff, who was detained a night at Grimsby on his way to Hull, in consequence of inaccurate advertisements of trains on defendants' railway, was only entitled to recover hotel expenses at Grimsby and fare to Hull next day, and no damages in respect of not being able to keep engagements at Hull and other places. And see Warlow v. Harrison, 29 L. J. (Q. B.) 14. Excursion tickets were issued by defendants at B., to convey passengers to L. and back, by any train advertised for that purpose, within the following fourteen days. B. was not on defendants' line of railway, but on that of another company, which joined the other line at D. Two trains a day (morning and evening) were then advertised for the conveyance back from L., in pursuance of the notice on the ticket, but B. was not mentioned in the advertisement as one of the stations at which either of these trains would stop, although D. was so mentioned. Plaintiff, who had taken one of the tickets at B., and had been conveyed to L., returned within the fourteen days by one of the evening trains, and on arriving at D. next morning, found that there was no train for B. on that day; he thereupon posted to B., and sued defendants for the expenses, which he recovered. *Hawcroft v. be sufficiently secure to perform the intended journey, and he ought to examine its sufficiency previous to such journey; and if he did not, and by the insecurity of a coach a passenger is injured, an action is maintainable against the coach proprietor for negligence, though the coach had been examined previous to the journey before the accident, and though it had been repaired at the coachmaker's only three or four days before (n). So, if an accident happens from a defect in the original construction of a coach, the proprietor is liable, although the defect be out of sight and not discoverable upon ordinary examination (o). And a railway company warrant that their rolling stock is roadworthy as far as human care and foresight can provide, and it is no answer to an action for damage sustained by a passenger through defective making or construction that the railway company employed a competent manufacturer (p). Where an action was brought against a railway company to recover compensation for injuries received by the plaintiff by the breaking down of a bridge over which he was passing in a passenger train, it was said that the defendants would not be liable for the accident if it could be shown that they employed an engineer fully competent to undertake the erection of the bridge, who used the best materials and adopted the best method of construction; but that negligence was not disproved merely by showing that the bridge had been constructed under the directions of an eminent engineer (q).

In an action against a coach proprietor for negligence, it appeared that the plaintiff became an outside passenger for hire; that there was luggage on the roof of the coach, and no iron railing between the luggage and the passengers; and that the plaintiff, being seated with her back to the luggage, was by a sudden jolt thrown from the coach, and her leg was thereby broken: the learned judge directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, if they were of opinion that the injury sustained was occasioned by the negligence of the defendant. The jury found for the plaintiff, and stated that they so found on account of the improper construction of the coach, and of the luggage being on the seat; and it was held, that the case was properly submitted to the jury, and that the facts found specially by them amounted to negligence in the defendant (r). So, it has been decided, that if through the default of a coach proprietor, in neglecting to provide proper means of conveyance, a passenger be placed in so perilous a situation as to render it prudent for him to leap from the coach, whereby his leg is broken, the proprietor will be responsible in damages, although the coach was not actually overturned (s). Passengers are entitled to a reasonable time to alight, and if they are injured in consequence of not being allowed a reasonable time, the company will be liable (t). The liabilities of the company attach although the passenger who is injured is travelling by means of a ticket which he possessed as one of a staff of reporters for a newspaper who were allowed to travel free (u). And although in one case it was ruled otherwise by Lord Denman (x), it seems now to be

(x) Carpue v. London and Brighton R. Co., 5 Q. B. 747; 3 Railw. C. 692. A railway company, although a corporation, may be sued in trespass for the tortious acts of their servants; and it is not necessary that the servant should be appointed under the seal of the corporation. If therefore a servant of a company commit an assault by their authority, an action of trespass may be maintained against them, as if he should, when acting on behalf of the company, imprison a passenger to compel him to pay his fare, Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom, 20 L. J. (Exch.) 196; 6 Exch. 314; 6 Railw. C. 743; or remove a drunken passenger with undue violence, Seymour v. Greenwood, 30 L. J. (Exch.) 189, 327; or take a passenger into custody for mutilating a ticket, Wilson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire R. Co., Farren v. Same, 27 L. T. 204; 30 L. J. (Exch.) 192; or for travelling without a ticket, Goff v. Great Northern R. Co., 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 148. But the company will not be liable for any such tortious act committed by one of their servants, unless it be shown that the servant had authority to do the act complained of, or unless the company subsequently ratified the act of the servant. Thus where the superintendent of a station unlawfully ordered a passenger to be taken into custody for not paying a fare, and the passenger sued the company in trespass for false imprisonment, the plaintiff was nonsuited because he did not show affirmatively that the superintendent was authorized to arrest, either by general or particular instructions, or that there was a ratification of the act by the company. Roe v. Birkenhead R. Co., 21 L. J. (Exch.) 9; 6 Railw. C. 795; 7 Exch. 36. But see Goff v. G. N. R. Co., supra. So a railway company, like any other partnership, are liable on all contracts made by their servants, within the scope of the servant's authority. The extent of a servant's authority is not easily to be defined. But the general rule is, that the employment of an agent gives also the powers usually exercised by similar agents, and thus a guide is furnished for ascertaining to what extent the employer is liable. The law on this point was discussed in a case, where the superintendent of a station on a railway directed that "every attention" should be paid to a passenger whose leg was broken in consequence of the moving of a truck on the railway, and a surgeon having performed the operation of amputation, he brought an action against the company to recover the amount of his charge. It was decided that he was not entitled to maintain the action, on the ground that it is not incident to the employment of a station master or other servant, that they should bind the company by contracts for surgical attendance on injured passengers. Cox v. Midland Counties R. Co., 3 Exch. 268. If, however, it can be shown in such a case, that the company had given a special authority to the station master to provide such assistance, then the company are liable for his contracts. Ibid. 3 Exch. 278. When a company are responsible for acts done by the superintendents and servants of a railway, see Taff Vale R. Co. v. Giles, 23 L. J. (Q. B.) 43; 2 E. & B. 822; *Slim v. Great Northern R. A master is not in general liable to one servant, for damage resulting from the negligence of another of his servants. Priestley v. Fowler, 3 M. & W. 1. All the cases on this subject are collected in Smith's Law of Master and Servant, 2nd ed. 135. Where therefore a collision happened on the railway through the negligence of the servants of the company, and another servant, who was guilty of no negligence, was killed, it was decided that his representatives could not maintain an action against the company clearly established, that, in order to render the company liable for negligence, it is necessary to give affirmative proof of negligence on their part (y), and it is not sufficient merely to prove the occurrence of an accident and rely upon that as prima facie evidence of negligence. In some cases, res ipsa loquitur, the accident may be of such a nature as that negligence may be presumed from the mere occurrence of it (z). But when the balance is even, the onus is on the party who relies upon the negligence of the other to turn the scale (a). Where, under Lord Campbell's act. The principle is, that a servant, when he engages to serve a master, undertakes, as between himself and his master, to run all the ordinary risks of the service, and this includes the risks of negligence upon the part of a fellow-servant, when he is acting in the discharge of his duty as servant of him who is the common master of both; yet this must be taken with the qualification that the master shall have taken reasonable care to protect him from risk, by associating him only with persons of ordinary skill and care. *Hutchinson v. therefore, plaintiff went to defendants' station at night, for the purpose of going by train, and asked a stranger to tell him the way to the urinary, and he pointed out a part of the platform on which there were two doors, one marked "For Gentlemen," with a light over it, and the other "Lamp-room," with no light over it, and plaintiff, who was in a hurry and could not read, entered the latter door and fell down some steps and hurt his head, it was held that there was no evidence to go to the jury of negligence by the company, and plaintiff was nonsuited (b).

And so, where plaintiff, being sent to the station to receive a parcel by daylight, was with a crowd of people waiting for a train, and in proceeding with them caught his foot against the edge of a weighing-machine, the base of which was raised a few inches above the level of the platform, and falling broke his knee-cap; the machine was of the usual description, in its usual place adjoining the end of a counter on which passengers' luggage was placed on arrival of trains, and was used for weighing luggage; it was also held, that there was no evidence of negligence by the company to go to the jury (c).

Cornman v. Eastern Counties R. Co.

Actions against railway companies for injuries to passengers by negligence, being in reality founded upon a breach of their duty as carriers to carry passengers safely, are not the less actions of tort because there happens to be also a contract with the passenger (d).

Actions for injuries are actions of tort.

But the company would not be liable for injuries caused by their servants' negligence to a passenger, who might by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the consequences of the negligence of the company or their servants (e). It is not however sufficient, in order to exempt the company from responsibility, to show that the party injured did by his own act contribute to the injury, but it must be shown that he did not use ordinary care to avoid the consequences of the negligence of the company (f). Whether or not he did use ordinary care would be a question for a jury. But if he did not he would have no right to recover compensation from the company for what, properly speaking, was the effect of his own want of caution.

Company not liable to passenger who omits to use ordinary care.

which a collision had taken place, whereby plaintiff was injured, a plea by defendants that the injury was caused in part by the negligence of the persons who had the care of the train in which plaintiff was riding, was held bad, as it was consistent with all the facts stated in it that plaintiff, or those who had charge of the train in which he was riding, could not by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the consequences of defendants' negligence. And Lord Wensleydale said,—

"The rule of law is laid down with perfect correctness in the case of Butterfield v. Forrester (h); and that rule is, that although there may have been negligence on the part of the plaintiff, yet, unless he might by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the consequences of the defendants' negligence, he is entitled to recover: if by ordinary care he might have avoided them, he is the author of his own wrong."

And where plaintiff, a child of five years old, was under the care of his grandmother, who purchased tickets for both from A. to B. on defendants' railway, and while crossing the line at A. to be ready for their train, they were both knocked down and injured by another train; the accident was partly owing to defendants' negligence, but there was also such negligence on the part of the grandmother as would have prevented her from recovering against defendants; it was held by the Court of Queen's Bench, and affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber, that there was such a complete identification of plaintiff with his grandmother, that by reason of her negligence he could not maintain an action against defendants (i).

We have already seen (k) that a company issuing a "through ticket" to a place beyond their own line are liable for injuries sustained by the passenger at any part of the journey.

Death of plaintiff after action brought, and before judgment.

If a person injured through the negligence of a railway company brings an action against the company and dies before the action is terminated, the maxim of law, actio personalis moritur cum personâ, applies, and the action cannot be proceeded with by his representatives, either under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act or under Lord Campbell's Act (l). If the case is one in which an action would lie under Lord Campbell's Act a fresh action must be brought.

The Rights and Liabilities of the Company as Carriers of Passengers.

Lord Campbell's Act.

Sect. 1 enacts, that whensoever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect or default, such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to recover damages in respect thereof(n), in every such case the person who would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony(o). By sect. 2 every such action shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband(p), parent(q) and child(r) of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and shall be brought in the name of the executor or administrator(s) of the person deceased; and the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought(t); and the amount so recovered, after deducting the costs not recovered from the defendant, shall be divided amongst the before-mentioned parties,

Sect. 2.

(n) This has reference not to the nature of the loss or injury sustained, but to the circumstances under which the bodily injury arose, and the nature of the wrongful act, neglect or default complained of. Pym v. Great Northern R. Co., post, 537. Funeral expenses and mourning ought not to be allowed. The subject matter of the statute is compensation for injury by reason of a relative not being alive, and there is no language in the statute referring to the cost of the ceremonial of respect paid to the deceased in his funeral, or in putting on mourning for his loss. *Dalton v. (o) It may be useful to notice, that by the "Railway Passengers Assurance Company's Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. cxxv, s. 35, it is enacted, that no contract of that company, nor any compensation received or recoverable by virtue of any such contract, either under that act or otherwise, shall prejudice or affect any right or action, claim or demand, which any person or his executors or administrators may have against any other company or any person, either at common law or by virtue of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, or of any other act of Parliament, for the injury, whether fatal or otherwise, in respect of which the compensation is received or recoverable. It may be also useful to notice, that in many of the Railway Acts passed in 1864 (ante, 474), which contain clauses compelling the companies to run cheap trains for the labouring classes, there is also a clause limiting the liability of the company under any claim to compensation for injury or otherwise in respect of each such passenger to a sum not exceeding 100*l.*, and the amount payable in respect of any passenger so injured shall be determined by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Board of Trade, and not otherwise. See "The London, Chatham and Dover Railway (New Lines) Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. cxcv, s. 137; "The Metropolitan Railway (Notting Hill and Brompton Extension) Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. ccxci, s. 46; "The Great Eastern Railway (Metropolitan Station and Railways) Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. cccxiii, s. 83; "The Metropolitan Railway (Tower Hill Extension) Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. cccxv, s. 25; "The North Western and Charing Cross Railway Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. cccxxiii, s. 95.

in such shares as the jury by their verdict shall find and direct (u). Only one action may be brought, and it must be commenced within twelve calendar months after the death of the deceased person (x); and the plaintiff must, with the declaration, deliver a full particular of the person on whose behalf the action is brought, and of the nature of the claim in respect of which damages are sought to be recovered (y).

When action may be brought.

"We conceive," said Lord Campbell, in Senior v. Ward (z), "that the legislature in passing this statute intends to give an action to the representative of a person killed by negligence, only when, had he survived, he himself, at the common law, could have maintained an action against the person guilty of the alleged negligence." And therefore, in that case, although the negligence of the defendant might have been an answer to the defence, that the accident was chiefly caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, the negligence of the plaintiff himself, which materially contributed to the accident, would upon well established principles have deprived him of any remedy, volenti non fit injuria.

Damages.

It has been decided that the jury, in assessing damages under this statute, are confined to injuries of which a pecuniary estimate can be made, and cannot take into consideration mental suffering occasioned to survivors by the death of their relative. The Court of Queen's Bench say on this point (a):—

Blake v. Midland R. Co.

"The important question is, whether the jury, in giving damages, apportioned to the injury resulting from the death of the deceased, to the parties for whose benefit this action is brought, are confined to injuries of which a pecuniary estimate may be made, or may add a solatium to those parties, in respect of the mental suffering occasioned by such death. The title of this act may be some guide to its meaning, and it is 'An Act for compensating Families of Persons killed by Accident,' not for solacing their wounded feelings. Reliance was placed upon the first section, which states in what cases the newly given action may be maintained, although death has ensued; the argument being that the party injured, if he had recovered, would have been entitled to a solatium; and, therefore, so shall his representative on his death. But it will be evident that this act does not transfer this right of action to his representative; but gives to his representative a totally

(u) Therefore, actions brought under this act cannot safely be settled out of court. But money may be paid into court in one sum. 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95, s. 2, post, App.

Cresswell granted to the mother of the deceased letters of administration, limited for the purpose of bringing an action under this statute. Re Williams, 31 L. J. (Prob. Mat. & Adm.) 40, note.

(Which case shows that a railway company cannot escape liability, upon the ground that they are discharging a public trust.) In Pym v. Great Northern R. Co., 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 378, Erle, C. J., says, "The statute gives a cause of action beyond what the deceased could have maintained, if he had only been injured and not killed."

(a) Blake v. Midland R. Co., 21 L. J. (Q. B.) 233; 18 Q. B. 93.

new right of action on different principles. The measure of damage is not the loss or suffering of the deceased, but the injury resulting from his death to his family. This language seems more appropriate to a loss of which some estimate may be made, than to an indefinite sum, independent of all pecuniary estimate, to sooth the feelings, and the division of the amount strongly leads to the same conclusion. It seems to us that if the legislature had intended to go the extreme length, of giving, not only compensation for pecuniary loss, but a solatium to all the relations enumerated in sect. 5, language more clear and appropriate for this purpose would have been employed. For these reasons we are of opinion, that the learned judge, at the trial, ought more explicitly to have told the jury, that, in assessing the damages, they could not take into their consideration the mental sufferings of the plaintiff for the loss of her husband, and that as the damages certainly exceeded any loss sustained by her, admitting of a pecuniary estimate, they must be considered excessive."

The Rights and Liabilities of the Company as Carriers of Passengers.

But legal liability alone is not the test of injury, in respect of which damages may be recovered under Lord Campbell's Act, a reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage by the relatives remaining alive may be taken into account by the jury, and damages may be given in respect of that expectation if it be disappointed, and the probable pecuniary loss thereby occasioned (b).

Legal liability not only test.

The mere proof, however, of death by negligence will not entitle the executor or administrator to a verdict for nominal damages; there must be some proof of actual damage. Where the deceased, a boy of fourteen, the son of a mason, earned four shillings a week, which was applied by his parents to the general support of the family, and no evidence was given as to whether the sum earned exceeded or was less than the actual cost of maintenance, and the jury gave 20*l.* damages (10*l.* to the father, and 10*l.* to the mother), the court refused to disturb the verdict (c).

Proof of actual damage requisite.

It has been held (d) that the loss of the benefit of a superior education, and the enjoyment of greater comforts and conveniences of life, is a pecuniary loss, for which the wife and children of the person killed may maintain an action, where the income of the deceased wholly ceases with his death, or where his premature death prevented the deceased from having made the extra provision for his family, which he might have been reasonably expected to have made had he lived.

Pym v. Great Northern R. Co.

"It is true," said Cockburn, C. J., "that it must always remain matter of uncertainty, whether the deceased person would have applied the necessary portion of income in securing to his family the social and domestic advantages of which they are said to have been deprived by his death, still more, whether he would have laid by any and what portion of his income to make provision for them at his death. But as it has been established by the cases decided upon the statute, that if there be a reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage, the extinction of such expectation by negligence occasioning the death of the party from whom it arose, will sustain the action, it is for a jury to say under all the circumstances, and taking into account all the uncertainties and contingencies of the particular case, whether there was such a reasonable and well-founded expectation of pecuniary benefit as can be estimated in money, and so become the subject of damages in such an action."

Passengers are booked conditionally.

Passengers not paying their fare.

But carriers of passengers are not compellable to carry a passenger unless there be room in the carriage (e); and, as we have seen, the bye-laws issued under the authority of the Board of Trade provide, that passengers at the road stations are only booked conditionally upon there being room (f). The bye-laws also contain certain regulations which provide for the payment of the fares and good behaviour of passengers conveyed on the railway (g); and, by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, it is enacted, that if any person travel, or attempt to travel, in any carriage of the company, or of any other company or party using the railway, without having previously paid his fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof; or if any person, having paid his fare for a certain distance, knowingly and wilfully proceed in any such carriage beyond such distance, without previously paying the additional fare for the additional distance, and with intent to avoid payment thereof; or if any person knowingly and wilfully refuse or neglect, on arriving at the point to which he has paid his fare, to quit such carriage—every such person, for every such offence, forfeits to the company a sum not exceeding forty shillings; and if any person be discovered, either in or after committing or attempting to commit any such offence as in the preceding enactment mentioned, all officers and servants and other persons on behalf of the company, or such other company or party as aforesaid, and all constables, gaolers, and peace officers, may lawfully apprehend and detain such person until he can conveniently be taken before some justice, or until he be otherwise discharged by due course of law (h).

(g) It has been decided in the American courts, that, although steam-boat proprietors, holding themselves out as common carriers, are bound to receive passengers on board under ordinary circumstances, they may refuse to receive them, if there be a reasonable objection. Thus they are not bound to admit passengers on board who refuse to obey the reasonable regulations of the boat, or who are guilty of gross or vulgar habits of conduct, or who make disturbances on board; or whose characters are doubtful, or dissolute, or suspicious; and, a fortiori, whose characters are unequivocally bad. And, as passengers are bound to obey the orders and regulations of the proprietors, unless they are oppressive and grossly unreasonable, whoever goes on board under ordinary circumstances impliedly contracts to obey such regulations, and may justly be refused a passage if he wilfully resists or violates them. If a passenger be wrongfully imprisoned by orders of the superintendent for not having a ticket or nonpayment of fare, the company will be liable to an action for false imprisonment. Goff v. Great Northern R. Co., 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 148, and see supra, 531, note (x).

In connection with the subject of this chapter, it may here be observed that if, through negligence, sparks fly from the engines used on a railway, whereby buildings or other adjoining property are destroyed by fire, the company are liable to be sued for damages thus occasioned. Therefore, in an action against a railway company for so negligently managing and conducting an engine, that premises of the plaintiff adjoining the line were destroyed by fire emitted from the engine, it was decided that the fact of premises being fired by sparks emitted from a passing engine, was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company, rendering it incumbent on them to show that some precaution had been adopted by them, reasonably calculated to prevent such accidents; and as there was no proof of any precaution adopted by the company to avoid such a mischance, the plaintiff recovered. It was also ruled that evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing that other engines belonging to the company upon other occasions, in passing along the line, threw sparks or ignited matter to a sufficient distance to reach the building in question, without showing the precise circumstances under which this occurred (i). In giving judgment, Tindal, C. J., said:—

Liability of Company for Damages caused by Sparks from Locomotive.

Piggott v. Eastern Counties R. Co.

“The defendants are a company intrusted by the legislature with an agent of an extremely dangerous and unruly character, for their own private and particular advantage; and the law requires of them that they shall, in the exercise of the rights and powers so conferred upon them, adopt such precautions as may reasonably prevent damage to the property of third persons through or near which their railway passes. The evidence in this case was abundantly sufficient to show that the injury of which the plaintiff complains was caused by the emission of sparks, or particles of ignited coke, coming from one of the defendants’ engines; and there was no proof of any precaution adopted by the company to avoid any such mischance. I therefore think that the jury came to a right conclusion in finding that the company were guilty of negligence, and that the injury complained of was the result of such negligence. There are many old authorities to sustain this view.”

Where, however, it was proved that a railway company who used locomotives endeavoured to protect the parties over whose lands they passed from injury, by resorting to all known means of precaution, it was held by the Exchequer Chamber that the company were not liable, as it was clear there was no negligence in fact (k). But in a subsequent case (l), it was held in an action against a railway company for negligence, by the emission of sparks from a locomotive, whereby the plaintiff's wheat-rick was burnt, that a learned judge at nisi prius was right, who, after telling the jury that the evidence for the company was extremely powerful to show that the engine was of the best known construction, but that the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses was, that, in their opinion, the risk of causing mischief by sparks from the engine was not improbable, and that the engine was so constructed as to be dangerous without a precaution of some kind, left it to the jury to decide whether they believed either the plaintiff's or the defendants' witnesses on this point; and also left it to the jury to consider whether each set of witnesses might not have been mistaken in the degree of excellence or of defect imputed to the engine; and if so, said that it was still for the jury to decide either for the company, if no further precautions could with reason be required; or for the plaintiff, if they were in reason requisite.

Result of cases.

The result of the above cases is, that the company will be liable for damages caused by fire arising from sparks from their locomotives, unless they adopt all reasonable precautions to prevent such accidents. Whether or not they have done so is a question for the jury, to be decided upon the evidence. But beyond that there is this further question for the jury, which does not appear to have hitherto been submitted to any jury in England (m), viz., whether or not the farmer whose rick is burnt was not more negligent, incautious and imprudent in setting his rick where it was placed, than the company were in using such a locomotive as gave rise to the calamity complained of. This is a question of fact for the jury, not a question of law (n).

Blowing off steam at level crossing.

And where a railway crossed a highway on the level, it was held to be clearly actionable negligence in the driver to blow off steam just at the level crossing (o).

v. London and South-Western R. Co., 2 Fost. & F. 730, Erle, C. J., directed a jury that a railway company is bound to use the best precautions in known practical use to secure the safety of passengers, but not every possible precaution which the highest scientific skill (according to speculative evidence) might have suggested. And if there are several grounds of negligence suggested, the jury must be satisfied that some one or other of them existed and caused damage to the party injured, though they need not be able to ascribe the whole injury to either.

PART III.

CHAPTER I.

ON MANDAMUS.

WRITS of mandamus are now so frequently applied for in matters arising out of railway transactions, that a short account of the writ, and of the mode of obtaining it, seems to fall within the legitimate purposes of this work (a). Writs of mandamus.

Writs of mandamus are of two kinds: 1. The Ancient Prerogative Writ, issued in the Queen's name, out of the Court of Queen's Bench, and directed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within the Queen's dominions, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, which appertains to their office and duty. 2. The Statutory Writ, founded on the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, which may be obtained by commencing an action in either of the superior courts of common law.

It will be convenient in the first instance to consider the state of the law and practice in relation to the Prerogative Writ, and thus light will be thrown on the course of proceeding applicable to the Statutory Writ. Prerogative writ.

The usual grounds upon which the prerogative writ of mandamus is granted are that the applicant has a right, a legal right, and no other specific legal remedy; for a remedy in equity is not considered as any ground of refusal, if the right be legal (b). It is no objection to granting a mandamus to do a particular act that an indictment will also lie for the omission to do the act; for the indictment does not compel the doing of the act, and therefore is not equally effectual with the mandamus (c); an indictment is merely a proceeding in pœnam for the past, and not a remedy for the future. So it has been held that the writ will lie to compel the building of a bridge by a company, although the owner of the adjoining lands was authorized by the act to build it at their expense (d).

(a) And see Tapping on Mandamus.

(b) R. v. Balby, &c. Road Trustees, 1 Bail C. C. 134. This is not a rule of law, but a rule regulating the discretion of the court in granting writs of mandamus. Re Barlow, 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 271.

(d) R. v. Norwich and Brandon R. Co., 15 L. J. (Q. B.) 24; 4 Railw. C. 112; 3 D. & L. 385.

*The Mode of
Prerogative Writ.*

This writ is also the proper remedy to enforce obedience to acts of Parliament and to the king's charters, and, in such cases, is demandable ex debito justitiæ (e).

The Prerogative Writ is granted on suggestions in affidavits, which state all the facts necessary to show the applicant's right to the writ; whereupon, in order more fully to satisfy the court that there is a probable ground for such interposition (f), a rule is made (g), directing the party complained of to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue; and if no sufficient cause be shown, the writ itself is issued at first in the alternative, either to do the act, or signify some reason to the contrary; to which a return or answer must be made at a certain day (h).

(e) 5 Bac. Abr., tit. "Mandamus," 257, 7th ed.

(f) Where by agreement between the parties, an application was made for a mandamus, merely with a view to obtain the opinion of the court, whether on the construction of a private act, the proceeding by mandamus was the proper one, the court stopped the argument, and refused to give any decision. R. v. Blackwall R. Co., 9 Dowl. P. C. 558.

(g) But now the rule may be absolute in the first instance. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 76, post, 558. See also Ex parte Foundling Hospital, 5 Dowl. P. C. 722.

(h) Preliminary Proceedings to obtain the Writ.—When it is determined to apply for a writ of mandamus, (and the rule applies to the Statutory Writ, see 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 69, post, 557,) the first step to be taken is to require the party, against whom the application is intended to be made, to do the act sought to be enforced, and such request ought to be made to the persons whose duty it is to do the act, and not to a clerk or other officer; R. v. Wilts and Berks Canal Co., 3 A. & E. 477; and in some cases it may be very desirable to give a written and explicit notice of the nature of the request, and that, in case of a refusal to comply with it, the applicant intends to apply for a writ of mandamus. The rule is, that a mandamus ought not to be moved for unless the party alleged to be in fault has known distinctly what he is required to do, so as to exercise an option whether he will do it or not. Per Coleridge, J., in R. v. Brecknock and Abergavenny Canal Co., 3 A. & E. 224. The demand may be made by a shareholder in the company itself. R. v. Ambergate, &c. R. Co., 17 Q. B. 362. If an evasive answer, or a qualified refusal to do the act, be given, R. v. Trustees of North Leach and Witney Roads, 5 B. & Ad. 978, then some further application should be made, as it is always desirable that a direct refusal, or something equivalent, should be shown. It is not necessary that the word "refuse," or any equivalent to it, should be used, but there should be enough to show that the party withholds compliance, and distinctly determines not to do what is required. R. v. Wilts and Berks Canal Co., 8 Dowl. P. C. 623; R. v. Brecknock and Abergavenny Canal Co., 3 A. & E. 223; R. v. Norwich and Brandon R. Co., 15 L. J. (Q. B.) 24; 4 Railw. C. 112; 3 D. & L. 385. It has been observed upon this subject, "There may be refusal by continued silence as well as by words;" per Littledale, J., in R. v. Select Vestrymen of St. Margaret's, Leicester, 8 A. & E. 904; R. v. Norwich and Brandon R. Co., 3 D. & L. 365. See also Ibid. 889; but see R. v. Bristol and Exeter R. Co., 4 Q. B. 162; and it has also been suggested, that, when a direct answer is withheld, the proper course of proceeding is to give the parties notice that a direct answer is required, and that the not giving it will be considered a refusal. Per Lord Denman, C. J., in R. v. Brecknock and Abergavenny Canal Co., ubi supra. The omission to take any step was held to be a sufficient tacit refusal in R. v. Ambergate, &c. R. Co., ubi supra. The objection, that no sufficient demand and refusal appears on the affidavits, must be taken when cause is shown, before the merits are discussed. R. v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 10 A. & E. 545; and see 4 Q. B. 171. If any condition precedent is required by the statute as a necessary preliminary to the application, a compliance must be shown. But where, by the provisions of the statute, a bond might be required by the railway company before they issue their warrant, a mandamus may be applied for, although no bond has been tendered by the party seeking compensation. R. v. North Union R. Co., 1 Railw. C. 729. If an umpire fail to make an award, the company may be compelled by mandamus to issue a warrant to the sheriff to assess the compensation, and no formal demand is necessary in such a case. Re Yorkshire and Goole R. Co., 18 Law J. (Q. B.) 33; 7 D. & L. 36.

The Affidavits.—Great care is requisite in preparing the affidavits upon which the application for the prerogative writ is founded, for the court will not permit a second application to be made, if the first application should be refused in consequence of a defect in the affidavits. R. v. Manchester and Leeds R. Co., 8 A. & E. 413; Ex parte Thompson, 6 Q. B. 721; Masters v. Butler, 18 Law J. (Q. B.) 328; 13 Jur. 869; Tilt v. Dickson, 4 C. B. 736; Skinner v. Carter, 16 C. B. 548; and see ante, 314. One exception seems to be where the alteration is simply in the form of the title or jurat, so that the re-swearing the affidavit would clearly leave parties in the same situation. R. v. Great Western R. Co., 5 Q. B. 601. And the court have even allowed a second writ to be issued after the first had been quashed for a variance. R. v. East Lancashire R. Co., 9 Q. B. 980. The affidavit or affidavits should fully and explicitly state the facts which are essential to entitle the applicant to relief. Affirmative as well as negative matters should be stated positively; and parties should swear directly to their information and belief. It has been said to be insufficient for a party to allege, in his affidavit, that he "objects" to certain specified defective proceedings; nor is it sufficient to assert generally that a statute does not authorize a proceeding which has taken place; it should be stated how it fails to do so. R. v. Manchester and Leeds R. Co., 8 A. & E. 416; and see ante, 315. If any written documents are important, copies should be annexed to the affidavits, and verified in the usual manner. If strong resistance is anticipated on the other side, and the matter in dispute be a question of fact or a matter of opinion, then it may be proper to corroborate and confirm the statement of such matters as are important, by the testimony of several deponents. In some cases, the affidavits may also be so framed as to anticipate and answer possible objections or arguments, which the other side may be expected to rely upon. It may be remarked here, that in cases where a corporation aggregate is a party, and the affidavit of the party is required by the practice of the court, the affidavit of the attorney to the corporation is admissible. Kingsford v. Great Western R. Co., 33 L. J. (C. P.) 307.

The Application for the Writ.—The necessary affidavits having been made, the usual course is to move for the writ, and the rule may now in all cases be absolute in the first instance. If a rule nisi only be granted, it is drawn up at the Crown Office, and copies are served upon the parties mentioned in the rule. If the rule is opposed, affidavits may be made in answer; and when cause is shown against the rule, the affidavits made on both sides are referred to and commented upon by the counsel for the respective parties, and the court will thereupon discharge the rule or make it absolute, as is mentioned in the text. If the matter, either of law or fact, be doubtful, the court will in general grant the writ, in order that it may be more solemnly discussed upon the return. R. v. Bland, Bull. N. P. 200. The court may mould the rule in what manner they please, in order to meet the justice of the case. R. v. Leicester, 4 B. & C. 891. But they will not mould the writ. R. v. Tithe Commissioners, 14 Q. B. 459. Therefore a writ bad in part is bad altogether. R. v. Caledonian R. Co., 16 Q. B. 19.

Costs.—The rule may be made absolute, or discharged with or without costs. On the discharge of a rule for a mandamus, the court generally gives the party showing cause his costs. *R. v. and it be found either insufficient in law or false in fact, there then issues, in the second place, a peremptory mandamus to do the thing absolutely (i), to which no other return will be admitted but a certificate of perfect obedience and due execution of the writ. The sufficiency of the return, in point of law, was formerly determined in a summary way upon motion; but, as to the truth of its allegations, in point of fact, it was a rule that this could not be investigated by any further proceeding on the mandamus; the complaining party having no remedy in case the facts were untruly alleged, but to bring an action on the case for a false return. But by the 9 Anne, c. 20, in a mandamus for determining the right to a corporate office, and now, by 1 Will. 4, c. 21, in all cases of mandamus (k), the return may be pleaded to (l) or traversed by the prosecutor, and the other party may reply, take issue, or demur (m); and the same proceedings may be had as if an action on the case had been brought for making a false return, and, after judgment obtained for the prosecutor, he shall have a peremptory writ of mandamus. And it is also provided that the prosecutor, if successful, shall recover damages, and that the successful party shall in all cases, upon judgment after issue joined, or by default, be entitled to his costs. way of demurrer, in the like manner as in personal actions; and the court, if it adjudge that the writ is valid, but the return invalid, shall award a peremptory mandamus, and costs to be paid to the successful party (n); and in every case a writ of error may be prosecuted according to the ordinary course in personal actions (o). And lastly, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 77, the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, and of that act (the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854), so far as they are applicable, shall apply to the pleadings and proceedings upon a prerogative writ of mandamus issued by the Court of Queen's Bench (p). It therefore appears that the prerogative writ of mandamus is now subject to nearly the same rules as those which regulate ordinary actions brought in the superior courts.

Prerogative Writ.*

It has already been stated, that this writ is the proper remedy to enforce obedience to acts of Parliament; and, for this reason, parties who are entrusted by the Legislature to construct railways and other public works may be thus proceeded against. We proceed to consider under what circumstances the writ is applicable to such cases.

It was at one time supposed in England, as it seems to have been thought in Scotland, that permissive powers given by an act of Parliament to a railway company were obligatory upon them. The case of Philip v. Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee R. Co. (q) in Scotland, and that of R. v. York and North Midland R. Co. (r) in 1852 in England, so decided. This latter case, however, was reversed in 1853, in the Exchequer Chamber, and the former in the House of Lords in 1857 (s). It was decided in York and North Midland R. Co. v. R. (t), in the Exchequer Chamber, that if a statute merely directs "that it shall be lawful" for the company to make the railway, (which are the words usually inserted in special acts,) then no duty is cast upon them to make the railway, or even to complete it after they have formed one portion of it.

Does not lie if

The facts in that case were shortly as follows:—In 1846, the company obtained an act empowering them to make a railway from York, through M. and C., to Beverley. They made a portion of that line from York to M., but did nothing upon the remainder of it. The powers of their act expired as to so much of their line as lay between C. and Beverley before the mandamus was applied for; but in 1849, they obtained an act authorizing them to abandon the line between M. and C., and to substitute in lieu thereof the line under discussion. There were two prosecutors of the writ of mandamus, which required the company to purchase the lands and make the railway,—one of them had land on the proposed new line, and was a landowner on the line from York to M., his land having been taken for the purpose of this railway,—the other had land on the proposed line from M. to C., and his name was in the schedule to the act.

The judgment of the court was delivered by Jervis, C. J., who, after stating the facts, said:—

“First, does the statute of 1849 cast on the plaintiffs in error a duty to make this railway? Secondly, if it does not, is there, under the circumstances, a contract between the plaintiffs in error and the landowners, which can be enforced by mandamus? Thirdly, and failing these propositions, does a work which in its inception was permissive only, become obligatory by part performance? These questions will be found upon examination to exhaust the subject, and to comprehend every view in which the mandamus can be supported. In substance, do these acts of Parliament render the company, if they do not make this railway, liable to an indictment for a misdemeanor, and to actions by the parties aggrieved? For, if they do not, a mandamus will not lie; and thus the question depends entirely upon the construction of the special act, and the statutes incorporated therewith. The act of 1849 may cast the duty upon the plaintiffs in error, in one of two ways: it may do so by express words of obligation, or it may do so by words of permission only, if the duty can be clearly collected from the general purview of the whole statute. The words of the 3rd section of the act of 1849, ‘it shall be lawful for the said company to make the said railway,’ are permissive only and not imperative; and it is a safe rule of construction to give to the words used by the legislature their natural meaning, when absurdity or injustice does not follow from such a construction. Indeed, if there were any doubt upon this subject, other parts of the statute referred to in the argument clearly show that these words were intended to be permissive only. The distinction is well put by my Brother Erle (u): ‘The company are permitted at their option to take lands, turn roads, alter streams, and exercise other powers, and these matters are made lawful for them; but they are commanded to make compensation for lands taken, to substitute new roads for those they turn, and to perform other conditions relating to the exercise of their powers, and these matters are required from them.’ It seems, clear, therefore, that the duty is not cast upon the plaintiffs in error, by the express words of the statute of 1849; and, indeed, it was not so urged in the argument, nor was it so put by Lord Campbell in his judgment in the court below. But it does not follow, merely because the words of the 3rd section are permissive only, that there is no duty cast upon the plaintiffs in error by the statute, taken altogether, to make this railway. This point was not relied upon in this case in the court below; but it was made the distinct ground of a decision in another case in that court (x); and was much pressed in the argument before us in support of this judgment. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the statute in its general provisions, and to consider the grounds on which the Court of Queen's Bench proceeded in R. v. Lancashire and Yorkshire R. Co. We agree with Lord Campbell, that the portion of the line between M. and C., to which the mandamus applies, is not to be considered as a separate railway, or even as a separate branch of a railway, but is to be treated as if, in its present direction, it had been included in the act of 1846. The acts, then, taken together, in substance recite that it will be an advantage to the public if a railway is made from York to Beverley, through M. and C., according to certain plans and sections, deposited as required by the practice of Parliament, and referred to in the statute; and that the plaintiffs in error are willing to make that railway. On this basis the whole provisions are founded. It has been proved that the work will be advantageous to the public. It is assumed it will be profitable to the company, and that, therefore, they will willingly undertake it. Accordingly, the company are empowered to make this line; if they do make it, they may take land; but if they do take land they must make compensation. If necessary, they may turn roads or divert streams; but if they do, they must make new roads, and new channels for the streams they alter. Similar provisions pervade the whole statute; and, throughout, the command waits upon the authority, and the distinction between 'may' and 'must' is clearly defined. But as it is manifest that such general powers must stop competition, and may, to a certain extent, be injurious to landowners, on the line, the compulsory power to take land is limited to three years, and the time for making the railway to five, after which the powers granted to the company cease, except as to so much of the line as shall then have been completed; and the land, if taken by the company, reverts, on certain terms, to the original proprietors (y). An argument might have been founded on the terms in which the latter provision is contained. By the 10th section of the act of 1849, it is enacted, that the railway shall be completed within five years from the passing of that act. That section was not referred to in the argument for that purpose; but it might be said that these words were compulsory, and impose a duty on the company to make the line. The context of the section, however, when examined, shows that such is not the meaning of it. If not completed within five years, the powers of the act are to expire, except as to so much of such railway as shall then have been completed. If the section were intended to be obligatory, it would not contain this exception which contemplates that the line may be made in part. It is inconsistent to suppose that the legislature would say to the company in the same section,—You may complete a part only, if you can, in five years, and therefore as to that part the powers of the act shall continue; but you must complete the entire line in that time. Upon the whole, therefore, we find no duty cast upon the company to make this railway, in any part of this act of Parliament. On the contrary, the legislature seems to contemplate the possibility of the railway being made in part, or being totally abandoned. In the latter case, the powers expire in three or five years; in the former, the statute remains in force as to so much of the railway as shall have been completed within that time, and expires as to the residue. This provision is inconsistent with the intention to compel the company to make the entire line, as the consideration for the powers granted by the act.

(u) This was in the court below, where this learned judge dissented from the decision of the majority of the Court of Queen's Bench. See R. v. York and North Midland

"But it is said, that a railway act is a contract on the part of the company to make the line; and that the public is a party to that contract, and will be aggrieved if the contract may be repudiated by the company, at any time before it is acted upon. Though commonly so spoken of, railway acts, in our opinion, are not contracts, and ought not to be construed as such. They are what they purport to be,

and no more. They give conditional powers, which, if acted upon, carry with them duties ; but which, if not acted upon, are not, either in their nature or by express words, imperative on the companies to which they are granted. Courts of justice ought not to depart from the plain meaning of the words used in acts of Parliament. When they do, they make, but do not construe the laws. If it had been so intended, the statute should have required the company to make the line, in express terms. Indeed, some railway acts are framed upon this principle ; and to say that there is no difference between words of requirement, and words of authority, when found in such acts, is simply to affirm that the legislature does not know the meaning of the commonest expressions. But, if we were at liberty to speculate upon the intentions of the legislature, when the words are clear, and to construe an act of Parliament by our own notions of what ought to have been enacted upon the subject,—if, sitting in a court of justice, we could make laws,—much might be said in favour of the course which, in our opinion, is taken by the legislature on such subjects. Assuming that the line, if made, would be profitable to the public, that benefit may be delayed for five years, during which time competition is suspended. On the other hand, if the line would pay, it probably will be proceeded with, unless the company having the power is incompetent to the task. Individual landowners may be benefited by the expenditure of capital in their neighbourhood, without looking to the ultimate result ; but it is not for the public interest that the work should be undertaken by an incompetent company, nor that it should be begun, if, when made, it would not be remunerative. By leaving the exercise of the powers to the option of the company, the legislature adopts the safest check on abuse in either of those respects, namely, self-interest. It seems to us, therefore, that these statutes do not cast upon the plaintiffs in error this duty, either by express words or by implication ; that we ought to adhere to the plain meaning of the words used by the legislature, which are permissive only ; and that there is no reason, in policy or otherwise, why we should endeavour to pervert them from their natural meaning.

“ But it is said, that the landowners are in a better situation than the public at large, and that the privilege to take their lands is the consideration which binds the company to complete the railway ; that, during the currency of the three years, they are deprived of their full rights of ownership, and, if not to be compensated by the construction of the railway, they would in many cases suffer a loss, because, whilst a compulsory power of purchase subsists, they are prevented from alienating their lands or houses described in the books of reference, and from applying them to any purposes inconsistent with the claim that may be made to them by the railway company. In truth, they are not prevented from so doing, at any time before the notice to take their lands is given, if they act bonâ fide in the meantime ; the notice to take their lands being the inception of the contract between the landowners and the company. But, if this complaint were better founded, it does not follow, because certain landowners are subjected to temporary inconvenience for the performance of a public good, that, therefore, the company are bound to make the whole railway. If it were a contract between the landowners and the company, it would not be just that one should be bound and the other free. But, to assert that there is a contract between the landowners and the company, is to beg the whole question ; for, on this part of the case, the question is, whether there is such a contract ? As a matter of fact, we know that in many cases no such actual contract exists. Some few proprietors may desire and promote the railway, but many others oppose it, either from disinclination to the project, or with a view to make better terms. With the dissentients there is no contract, unless it be found in the statute ; and to the statute, therefore, we must look, to see what is the obligation that is cast upon the company in respect of the landowners upon the line. As, in the former case, the words upon this subject are permissive only. The company may take land; if they do, they must make full compensation; and, in that state of things, if there be a bargain between the parties, what is the bargain? The company say, in the language of the statute, that the bargain is, that they shall make full compensation for the land taken, and no more; the prosecutors say, that the consideration to be paid for the land is the full compensation mentioned in the act, and also, the further consideration of the construction of the entire line of railway from York to Beverley. But, if this is the price which the prosecutors are to have, each landowner is entitled to the same value; and yet, by this mandamus, the other proprietors on the line, from M. to C., who, perhaps, are hostile to the application, are constrained to sell their lands for an inadequate consideration, viz. a full compensation, and a part only of the line of railway, to which, by the hypothesis, they were entitled by the original bargain. If this were the true meaning of the statute, it would indeed be unjust, more so than the imposition of these temporary inconveniences, to which it is said the landowners may be subject, and to which we have already referred. But that this is not the true meaning is clear from the words of the statute, which are permissive, and only impose the duty of making full compensation to each landowner, as the option of taking the land of each is exercised; and, further, from the section to which we have already referred, which contemplates the total abandonment of the line, or a part performance of it, and makes provision for the return of the land to the original proprietors in certain cases. Upon this part of the case, the language of Lord Eldon, in Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Co. (z), was much pressed upon the court, but there is nothing in that language to which it is necessary to make the least exception; indeed, it is nothing more than an illustration of the obligatory nature of a duty imposed by acts of Parliament, which do impose a duty with reference to other persons. In that case, the statute had secured to B. the surplus water, and had commanded the company to do certain things that he might enjoy it. In discussing whether B.'s right under the statute was affected by his right before the statute, his lordship might well say, he considered the statute, the origin of B.'s right, in the light of a contract; and the statute then under discussion, containing express words of command, he might well add, that those who come for such acts of Parliament do, in effect, undertake that they shall do and submit to whatever the legislature empowers and compels them to do. As we understand them, the words used by Lord Eldon in no respect conflict with the view we take of this case; but, if they mean that words of permission only, when used in the class of statutes under consideration, should receive a construction different from their ordinary meaning, because, if construed otherwise, they might work injustice, with great respect for his high authority we dissent from that proposition. We agree upon this point with what is said by my Brother Alderson in Lee v. Milner (a).

"There remains but one further view of the case to be considered, and that we have partly disposed of in the observations we have already made; but, inasmuch as Lord Campbell proceeded on this ground only in the court below, although it was not much relied upon before us in the argument, we have, out of respect to his high authority, most carefully examined it, and are of opinion that the mandamus cannot be supported on the ground that the railway company, having exercised some of their powers, and made part of their line, are bound to make the whole railway authorized by their statutes. It is unnecessary here to determine the abstract proposition that a work, which, before it is begun, is permissive, is, after it is begun, obligatory. We desire not to be understood as assenting to the proposition of my Brother Erle, that many cases may occur where the exercise of some of the compulsory powers may create a duty to be enforced by mandamus ; and, on the other hand, we do not say that such may not be the law. If a company, empowered by act of Parliament to build a bridge over the Thames, were to build one arch only, it would be well deserving of consideration whether they ought to be indicted for a nuisance in obstructing the river, or for the non-performance of a duty in not completing the bridge. It is sufficient to say, that in this case there are no circumstances to raise such a duty, if such a duty can be created by the acts of the plaintiff himself. The plaintiffs in error have made the principal portion of their line, and they have abandoned the residue, from no corrupt motive, but because Beverley has already sufficient railway communication, and because the residue of the line passes through a country thinly populated, and, if made, would not be remunerative. But it is said, that the railway company are not in the situation of purchasers of land, with liberty to convert it to any purpose or to allow it to lie waste ; that they are allowed to purchase it only for a railway, and, having acquired it under the compulsory powers of the act, there must be an obligation upon the company to apply the land to that, and to no other purpose. Subject to the qualification in the act, this is undoubtedly true. Having acquired the lands of particular landowners, the company could not retain them by merely laying rails on the land so taken ; and, we agree it never was intended that the landowner should be left with a high mound or deep cutting running through his estate, and leading neither to or from any available terminus. The precaution against such a wasteful expenditure of capital may, perhaps, safely be left to the self-interest of the company ; but if such work were to be done, it would not be a practicable railway, and after five years the powers of the act would expire, and the land revert in the original proprietor. It is true, that he would sustain some inconvenience without the corresponding advantage of railway communication ; but, in the meantime, he would have received full compensation in the market value of the land, and for all damage by severance or otherwise, and would receive back the land on more reasonable terms. To be a railway it must have available termini. When the statutes passed, all persons supposed the termini would be York and Beverley ; and, if the argument be well founded, and the company are bound by taking land upon a portion of the railway to complete the whole line, it would seem to follow, that one of the prosecutors, by compelling the company to take his land on the line from M. to C., would thus entitle himself to a mandamus to compel them to make the line from C. to Beverley, and, the acts having expired, to apply to Parliament for a renewal of their powers for that purpose. But, although the termini were originally intended to be York and Beverley, it is plain that the legislature contemplated the possibility of the line being abandoned, or being only partially made, because, in the one case, the powers of the act were to cease, and in the other they were partially continued. An option, therefore, is given to some one. By the course taken, the Court of Queen's Bench has exercised that option, and said, the line is to be made not to Beverley, but to C. In our opinion that option is left to the company ; and the company having bona fide made an available railway over the land taken, the obligation to the landowner has, in that respect, been fulfilled.

“ The cases upon this subject are very few ; and the absence of authority is very striking, when we remember how many acts have passed in pari materia, not only for railways, but also for bridges and turnpike roads. Notwithstanding the numerous occasions on which such proceedings might have been taken, and the manifest interest of landowners to enforce their rights, no instance can be found of an indictment for disobeying such a statute, or of a mandamus for the purpose of enforcing it. If correctly reported, Lord Mansfield determined this point in R. v. Proprietors of the Birmingham Canal Navigation (b), for he says, 'The act imports only an authority to the proprietors, not a command. They may desert or suspend the whole work, and à fortiori any part of it.' On the other side, the language of Lord Eldon, in Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Co. (c), is referred to as an authority for this mandamus. In our opinion, it does not bear that construction, although it appears that the Court of Queen's Bench took a different view of that authority in the case of R. v. Eastern Counties R. Co. (d), and was inclined to act upon it, and award a mandamus. The writ was subsequently withheld in that case on another ground; but Lord Denman seems to have been of opinion that on a fit occasion a mandamus ought to go. That, and the recent cases in the Court of Queen's Bench (e), now under discussion, are the only cases which bear on the subject. We feel that Lord Denman and Lord Campbell are high authorities upon this or any other matter, and are both equally entitled to the respect of this court; but we are bound to pronounce our own judgment, and, after the most careful consideration, are of opinion that that judgment ought to be for the plaintiffs in error, and the result is that the judgment of the court below be reversed."

Mandamus to compel a Company to complete a Railway.

York and North Midland R. Co. v. Reg.

In all cases falling within the principles laid down in the foregoing very important judgment, it may, therefore, now be assumed that a mandamus does not lie to compel a company to make or complete a railway.

But it must be carefully observed that this rule does not apply if the language used by the legislature is imperative; for if it be, a mandamus would undoubtedly lie (f).

Lies, if act is imperative.

There are many decisions which establish this principle. Thus, a peremptory mandamus was issued to compel the trustees of a turnpike road to fence a road made by them on the land of a private

In these cases, the Court of Queen's Bench (Erle, J., diss.) awarded writs of mandamus requiring the respective defendants to make their railways in pursuance of the special acts.

(f) See Great Western R. Co. v. R., 1 E. & B. 874. A landowner whose lands are required for the purposes of the railway, is a proper person to apply for a mandamus against the company to compel them to make it; and it is sometimes the practice to join, as applicants, some of the inhabitants of the districts. R. v. York and North Midland R. Co., 1 E. & B. 178. It makes no difference that the company have not, at the time the application for the mandamus is made, taken any steps whatever, by issuing shares or giving notices, to carry out the undertaking. When the act of Parliament receives the royal assent, the obligation to make the railway attaches, and the company can only be relieved by obtaining another act of the legislature. Nor need it be alleged in the writ, that money has been raised by shares or mortgage, for the purposes of the act. R. v. Lancashire and Yorkshire R. Co., 1 E. & B. 228. It has been held to be no ground for quashing a writ, to allege that it had been obtained without the knowledge or assent of one of three partners, at whose instance the writ had been applied for. R. v. London and South-Western R. Co., 13 Jur. (Q. B.) 10. A landowner cannot apply for an injunction to restrain a company from applying for an act to repeal a former act, and to prevent them from paying back deposits. Anstruther v. East of Fife R. Co., 1 Macq. 98. Nor can he maintain a suit for specific performance to compel a company to make a railway in pursuance of the special act; the remedy is at law. *Heathcote v. North Staffordshire R. When an injunction, at the suit of the Attorney-General, was held not to lie against a company for not completing a railway, see Attorney-General v. Birmingham and Oxford Junction R. Co., 15 Jur. 1024; and see post, tit. Injunction.

individual; and the court decided that the liability to fence the road, imposed on all trustees of turnpike-roads by the statute, was not excused by a return which alleged that the trustees had no funds to make the fences, because, if the trustees had not adequate funds to make the fences, they ought not to have made the road (g).

Writs of mandamus have also been issued, requiring public companies to perform duties imposed upon them by acts of Parliament in the following instances:—To reinstate and lay down again a railway (h); to repair and amend the banks and bridges of a river course (i); to make alterations and amendments in sewers to prevent an offensive sewage from being discharged into a floating harbour (k); to restore a turnpike-road, carried over a railway by a bridge, to its former width (l); to excavate a road over which a bridge has been built, so as to leave a headway of sufficient height under the bridge (m); to establish an uniform rate of tolls (n).

Writ partly bad,

But it is clearly settled, that if a mandamus commands the defendants to do several things, some of which they are not bound to do, it cannot be supported, even in respect of the things they are bound to do, and a peremptory mandamus will be refused (o).

Thus, where a mandamus suggested that a railway company had constructed a bridge to carry their line over a street alleged to be a turnpike-road, and had made the ascent of the bridge too steep, and also that they had deviated from the levels of the railway, to an extent exceeding the prescribed limits, and commanded them to make the ascent of the bridge, and also the levels, in conformity with the act, and upon the trial of issues raised upon the return, it was found that the street in question was a public highway but not a turnpike-road; it was held, that as the first part of the writ could not be supported no peremptory mandamus could be awarded (p). And a writ is bad if it commands the execution of a work in a specified manner where the company may exercise an option; as where it required a road to be carried by a bridge over the railway, the company having an option, under the statute, to carry the railway over the road (q). But a writ may be awarded to make such parts of the line of a railway as can be made, although, the compulsory powers having expired, other portions of the line cannot be completed (r).

See Leominster Canal Navigation v. Shrewsbury and Hereford R. Co., 26 L. J. (Ch.) 764, where Wood, V. C., suggested that a mandamus was the proper remedy to enforce an act of Parliament which “authorized and required” the defendants to purchase a canal.

*Mandamus to
to complete a Railway.*

It has been doubted whether a mandamus will lie to compel the company to make sufficient watering-places for cattle on intersected lands, as directed by section 68 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, or whether the omission to do so is not merely a subject for compensation under the statute. Such a writ is clearly bad if it directs the company to provide a pond in each of several portions of the fields which have been severed, as this is a larger provision than the statute requires the company to make (s).

places for cattle.*

It is a good return to a writ to compel the making of a railway, to allege that the compulsory powers for the purchase of the necessary lands have expired (t). But where it appeared that there was time to give the necessary notices to take lands before the expiration of the period for taking the lands compulsorily, the court awarded a mandamus (u). It has also been held to be a good return to say that the company have not been able to procure a subscription for the whole of their capital, as required by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 16; and the prosecutors cannot answer by way of estoppel that the company have been exercising their compulsory powers to acquire the lands of another person to make the railway, as that was res inter alios acta (x). But it is not a good return to say, that the line of railway has become unnecessary, or that it will prove unremunerative, or that no reasonable probability exists that sufficient funds can be raised, although absolute exhaustion of funds from unforeseen casualties might, under circumstances, be a good return (y). We have already seen that where the lands were required by commissioners to form a public park, the allegation of want of funds was held to be a sufficient answer to a writ commanding the commissioners to purchase lands which they had given a notice to the owner to treat for (z).

Other Cases in which Writs of

We now turn to another class of cases. We have seen, in a former part of this work (b), that the statutes make it obligatory on companies, in certain cases, to issue a warrant to the sheriff, requiring him to summon a jury to assess the compensation due to persons who have claims in respect of damage caused by the execution of the railway works; and it is clear, that if the company should neglect or refuse to issue such a warrant, when duly required so to do, the writ of mandamus is the suitable remedy (c). So, if the sheriff, or other officer who holds the inquisition, refuses to allow the inquiry to proceed, upon the ground that the applicant is not entitled to compensation, mandamus will lie to compel the due execution of the precept (d). So, if the presiding officer refuse to allow costs to a party entitled to receive them, a mandamus will be awarded requiring the costs to be allowed (e).

debt lay.

It was also the practice (f) to enforce the payment of compensation money awarded by a jury, by resorting to a writ of mandamus (g); but, in Corrigal v. London and Blackwall R. Co. (h), the Court of Common Pleas decided that an action of debt may be brought on an inquisition and verdict, and that remedy must now be resorted to in such cases: and accordingly, in a subsequent case, where a statute, empowering a company to build a bridge over the Ouse, recited that the building of such bridge might diminish the tolls received at a neighbouring bridge belonging to another company, and enacted, that, if there should be an annual decrease in the tolls of the last-mentioned bridge, the railway company should forthwith pay the bridge company a sum equal to ten years' purchase of such annual decrease: it was decided, that debt lay against the company for the amount; and that a mandamus to pay was not a more effectual remedy, and therefore ought not to be granted (i).

Where a sum of money was awarded to a creditor by an arbitrator, it was held that a mandamus lay to compel the company to pay the amount found to be due, where it appeared that by the statute incorporating the company the creditor was unable to issue execution

(c) See numerous instances in the collection of compensation cases, ante, 218 et seq. If, however, compensation is claimed under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 68, it is the usual course to bring an action at law on that section, if the company should make default in issuing the warrant; see ante, 197. It will be observed, however, that the lands must be actually taken, or actually injuriously affected, to bring the case within sect. 68. See ante, 199.

(d) Walker v. London and Blackwall R. Co., 3 Q. B. 744. But if a statute does not allow the removal of proceedings by certiorari (see ante, 310), the court will not indirectly bring them under review by mandamus. R.

against the individuals who formed the company or against their effects (k). But if a statute directs that costs shall be taxed and levied, it will be premature to apply for a mandamus before the costs are taxed and an attempt made to levy them in the prescribed manner (l). So, where a company was incorporated, with power to make calls, and to sue and be sued in the name of the treasurer or any director, and an action was brought against the treasurer and judgment entered up against the company, who appeared to have no assets, a mandamus was refused to compel the company to pay the amount recovered by the judgment, upon the ground that as the plaintiff had entered up his judgment not against the public officer but against the company, he was in a situation to enforce the ordinary legal remedy of an execution against the goods of the company. It was also decided, that the court would not order a mandamus to go, merely because under the circumstances the execution might produce no fruits; and the court intimated a very strong opinion that a mandamus would lie to compel the company to proceed to enforce the payment of calls, if it were shown that judgments recovered against the company were unsatisfied for want of assets (m).

Other Cases in which Writs of Mandamus have been issued.

But the court will not in any case grant a mandamus to enforce the general law of the land which may be enforced by action (n). Thus, in a case where a railway company were common carriers, and therefore liable to carry all goods if they had room and means (o), a mandamus was refused to compel them to convey goods, although they had agreed with certain persons to carry their goods to the exclusion of all others (p); it appearing that there was no clause in their act of incorporation which required them to carry all goods offered for conveyance. Neither will a mandamus lie where the right is merely equitable, and where there is no legal right (q). Thus, where a mandamus was applied for to compel the trustees of a turnpike to pay a mortgage debt, which, as we have already shown, cannot be recovered by an action at law (r), Crompton, J., refused the application, upon the ground that there was nothing to take the case out of the general rule, and that the facts showed that the case was one peculiarly fit for equitable relief (s). It has been said that the court will never grant a writ of mandamus except to compel the performance of public duties. On this ground a mandamus was refused to compel the Bank of England, at the instance of one of its members, to produce their half-yearly accounts for the purpose of declaring a dividend (t); and in like manner the writ was refused to require a private trading company, acting under a royal charter, to permit a transfer of stock to be made in their books (u). And a mandamus requiring the company to remove the common seal of the company, which had been improperly affixed, has been refused (x). But a mandamus may be obtained to compel the production of a register of shareholders to enable a creditor to proceed against them (y), also to elect directors (z); and some of the modern cases already cited, in which the writ has been granted (a), show that the remedy by mandamus is now more extensively applied than it was formerly.

Must be applied for within reasonable time.

Lastly, it may be observed, that a mandamus must be applied for within a reasonable time after the injury has been sustained (b). Thus, where trustees of a turnpike-road completed a portion of the roads and collected tolls, and twelve years after these roads had been completed, and seven years after the compulsory powers for taking lands had expired, a mandamus was applied for to compel the trustees to make certain branch roads, but it appeared that during the twelve years a railway, which affected the receipt of tolls on the road, had been constructed, and expensive buildings had been erected on some of the lands over which the new roads must have passed, and no explanation was offered by the prosecutor of the writ to account for the delay in applying for a mandamus, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, refused to issue the writ, and said there was neither reason nor authority to support the application (c). But in some cases where compensation is claimed, it is necessary to wait until all the damage has been sustained, and then a jury may assess compensation for the whole (d).

We now reach the second branch of our subject.

writ of mandamus, which, as we have seen, may now be obtained in either of the Superior Courts of Common Law, by commencing an action in pursuance of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854. It is difficult to predicate whether this statutory remedy will supersede the old practice of applying for the prerogative writ. The latter form of proceeding is carefully preserved by a clause in the statute, and provisions are made for accelerating the proceedings and simplifying the pleadings (e). It may therefore be found desirable, especially in important cases, still to resort to the Court of Queen's Bench for the prerogative writ, but as the powers which enable the court to direct that the act required by a mandamus to be done may be done by the plaintiff or some other person at the expense of the defendant, are only applicable to proceedings under the statutory writ, and as a writ of injunction may, as we shall see hereafter (f), be obtained after an action has been brought, it seems that these additional powers are well calculated to recommend the adoption of the new remedy in cases where summary redress is sought for. The following are the clauses in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, which relate to the statutory writ of mandamus, and the sections which apply to the prerogative writs are repeated, so as to present at one view the whole of the important changes which are introduced by the new statute.

Judgment and execution.

"72. The writ need not recite the declaration or other proceedings, or the matter therein stated, but shall simply command the performance of the duty, and in other respects shall be in the form of an ordinary writ of execution, except that it shall be directed to the party and not to the sheriff, and may be issued in term or vacation, and returnable forthwith; and no return thereto except that of compliance shall be allowed, but time to return it may, upon sufficient grounds, be allowed by the court or a judge, either with or without terms.

"74. The court may, upon application by the plaintiff, besides or instead of proceeding against the disobedient party by attachment, direct that the act required to be done may be done by the plaintiff, or some other person appointed by the court, at the expense of the defendant, and upon the act being done the amount of such expense may be ascertained by the court, either by writ of inquiry or reference to a master, as the court or a judge may order; and the court may order payment of the amount of such expenses and costs, and enforce payment thereof by execution.

"75. Nothing herein contained shall take away the jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench to grant writs of mandamus; nor shall any writ of mandamus issued out of that court be invalid by reason of the right of the prosecutor to proceed by action for mandamus under this act.

"76. Upon application by motion for any writ of mandamus in the Court of Queen's Bench, the rule may in all cases be absolute in the first instance if the court shall think fit; and the writ may bear teste on the day of its issuing, and may be made returnable forthwith, whether in term or in vacation, but time may be allowed to return it by the court or a judge, either with or without terms.

"77. The provisions of 'The Common Law Procedure Act, 1852,' and of this act, so far as they are applicable, shall apply to the pleadings and proceedings upon a prerogative writ of mandamus issued by the Court of Queen's Bench."

"It is quite clear that this act did not intend to give a Court of Common Law the power to decree specific performance of a private contract; and where the duty sought to be enforced by mandamus arises merely from a personal contract, to grant a mandamus would be in effect to decree specific performance of such a contract. But in the present case the duty does not, as in Benson v. Paul (i), arise merely from a personal contract; it arises under the royal charter, and the act to be done is one in which the public as well as the plaintiff are interested. I am reported to have said, in Benson v. Paul (and no doubt accurately), that I thought the enactment must be confined to such duties as might have been enforced by a prerogative writ of mandamus; but though upon consideration I am not prepared to say that that is the exact limit, it is sufficient to say in the present case that a prerogative writ would be granted, and that therefore the plaintiff is entitled to the writ he claims in his declaration. A prerogative writ has been granted under similar circumstances. The writ is to order that to be done which ought to be done by the company, pursuant to the deed of settlement executed under the charter. This is quite distinct from the act sought to be enforced in Benson v. Paul; and if we had held the statute to extend to such a case as that, it would be to extend it, as I then pointed out, even to enforce a promise to marry; an extent which was clearly never contemplated by the legislature. But when the writ of mandamus is asked to compel the fulfilment of a duty arising out of the requirements of an act of Parliament or of a royal charter, and a personal grievance also arises from the non-performance of the duty, then the act clearly applies. The present is exactly that case. The company, incorporated by charter, refuse to register the plaintiff as a shareholder, and the court would have granted a mandamus in such a case even before the statute (k)."

By the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 32, it is enacted, that—

"In all cases in which a writ of mandamus or of injunction is issued under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, such writ shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge, in addition to the matter directed to be inserted therein, command the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the costs of preparing, issuing and serving such writ, and payment of such costs may be enforced in the same manner as costs payable under a rule of court are now by law enforceable."

Costs of mandamus and injunction may be included in writ.

(k) Per Lord Campbell, C. J., in Norris v. Irish Land Co., 27 L. J. (Q. B.) 115; '8 E. & B. 512. And see Ward v. South-Eastern R. Co., 29 L. J. (Q. B.) 177. See also Bush v. Beavan, 32 L. J. (Exch.) 54, where it was held, that the action, like the writ, of mandamus (ante, p. 554) does not lie where there is any other remedy.

CHAPTER II.

ON INJUNCTION.

I. Injunctions in Equity . . .	560		Common Law Procedure Act,
II. Injunctions at Law under the			1854

AN injunction is a prohibitory writ, to restrain the defendant from using some legal right, the exercise of which would be contrary to equity and good conscience; or from doing some act inconsistent with the admitted or probable legal rights of the complainant, and with the due preservation of the property affected by the act sought to be restrained.

These writs were formerly only issued out of Chancery, but now, by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (a), parties who have commenced actions in the Superior Courts of Common Law may also, in certain cases, claim a writ of injunction, and if the writ be obtained and disobeyed, an attachment will issue from the Common Law Court.

We shall endeavour, first, to give a short summary of the cases which were determined before any jurisdiction was given to the Courts of Common Law, and this will prepare us for considering, secondly, the effect of the Common Law Procedure Act.

I. Injunctions in Equity.

Injunctions in equity.

Injunctions in equity are of two kinds. An injunction of the first kind is grantable as an order of course, upon the defendant's making default in appearing, &c. An injunction of the second kind is, on the contrary, always granted upon merits, and may, under circumstances, be granted at any stage of a suit. An injunction of the first kind is properly called a common injunction, and is that which is most generally obtained in suits where the object is to stay proceedings at law. An injunction of the second kind is called a special injunction, because it is granted upon a special application, and not as an order of course (b).

(b) Drewry on Injunctions, Introd. vi. By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 58, it is enacted, "That the practice of the Court of Chancery with respect to injunctions for the stay of proceedings at law shall, so far as the nature of the case will admit, be assimilated to the practice of such court with respect to special injunctions generally, and such injunctions may be granted upon interlocutory applications supported by affidavit, in like manner as other special injunctions are granted by the said court."

Injunctions are applied for in cases of waste, and similar acts of injury to property, and they are frequently resorted to for the purpose of restraining railway companies from doing illegal acts. The general principle by which equity is guided in administering such relief, appears to be this, i. e. that where a company go beyond the powers which the legislature has given them, and interfere with the property of individuals, it is the duty of the court to interfere, for the purpose of strictly keeping the company within those limits which the legislature has thought proper to prescribe for the exercise of their powers (c).

*Where Injunction
is the proper Remedy to restrain Railway Companies
from doing illegal Acts.*

Lord Cottenham, C., in one of the earliest applications for an injunction against a railway company (d), observed upon this subject:—

*River Dun Navigation Co. v.
North Midland
R. Co.*

“I am not at liberty, (even if I were in the least disposed, which I am not,) to withhold the jurisdiction of this court, as exercised in the first case in which it was exercised, that of Agar v. Regent's Canal Co. (e), where Lord Eldon proceeds simply on this,—that he exercised the jurisdiction of this court for the purpose of keeping these companies within the powers which the acts give them; and a most wholesome exercise of the jurisdiction it is; because, great as the powers necessarily are to enable the companies to carry into effect works of this magnitude, it would be most prejudicial to the interests of all persons with whose property they interfere, if there were not a jurisdiction continually open and ready to exercise its power, for the purpose of keeping them within that limit which the legislature has thought proper to prescribe for the exercise of their powers. On that ground I should never be reluctant to entertain any such application. I think it most essential to the interests of the public, that such jurisdiction should exist, and should be exercised whenever a proper case for it is brought before the court, otherwise the result may be, that, after your property has been taken and destroyed,—after your house has been pulled down, and a railway substituted in its place, you may have the satisfaction, at a future period, of discovering that the railway company were wrong. It would be a very tardy recompense, and one totally inadequate to the injury of which the party has to complain; and individuals would be made to contend with companies who often have vast sums of money at their disposal, and that too not the money of the persons who are contending. It is a most material point to consider, when you enter into a contest with an individual, whether he is spending his own money, or money over which he has a control, or in which he has a comparatively small interest. If these companies go beyond the powers which the legislature has given them, and in a mistaken exercise of those powers interfere with the property of individuals, this court is bound to interfere. That was Lord Eldon's ground in Agar v. Regent's Canal Co., and I see no reason whatever to depart from the rule there laid down and acted upon; but then, of course, it must be a case in which the court is very clearly of opinion that the company are exceeding the powers which the act has given them.”

(c) See Webb v. Manchester and Leeds R. Co., 4 My. & Cr. 116; 1 Railw. C. 576; ante, 424. Parties whose private rights are injured must apply to the courts for redress, for they may not take the law into their own hands, and determine and enforce the mode and manner in which they would stop illegal proceedings. See London and Brighton R. Co. v. Blake, 2 Railw. C. 322; ante, 410.

Where Injunction
is the proper Remedy to restrain Railway Companies
from doing illegal Acts.

In accordance with the doctrine thus clearly laid down, injunctions have been obtained against railway companies in the following instances, viz., where lands are sought to be taken compulsorily, after the time limited by the legislature, or lands not authorized to be taken (f); where an entry has been unlawfully made on lands authorized to be taken without paying the price (g); where roads, bridges, stations or other works are constructed contrary to the stipulations contained in the railway acts (h); where proceedings are commenced to take lands, or execute works, contrary to an agreement previously made between the parties (i); where works are without authority constructed, which have a direct tendency to injure adjoining lands (j); where roads are improperly obstructed or interfered with, by depositing materials thereon (k); and where more damage is done in carrying on the works than the necessity of the case requires (l). In all such and similar cases the remedy by injunction is applicable.

But, as we have already seen (m), if a doubtful or unfounded claim is made for compensation under sect. 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, the court will not grant an injunction to restrain proceedings taken under that statute (n).

(n) If a notice is given that lands will be required, and the company take no further steps and do not enter on the lands, we have seen that the claimant cannot take proceedings, under sect. 68, but has a remedy by mandamus; ante, 199. And there is a case which determines that, in addition to the remedy by mandamus, the landowner may apply to chancery for a specific performance; Walker v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 5 Railw. C. 469, per Wigram, V. C. See remarks of Lord Cottenham, C., on this case in Adams v. London and Blackwall R. Co., 2 Macn. & G. 132. But in a subsequent case, where a company had entered upon the lands and paid a deposit, and given bond, under sect. 85, and the landowner applied to the company, and desired them to summon a jury to assess the compensation, which they refused to do, Lord Cottenham, C., denied that the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to enforce the further proceedings, and said, that if it should be inferred that the court would generally lend its assistance to compel performance of the provisions of the acts under which railways were formed and maintained, a proposition would be raised, which, if established, would lead to consequences of the most serious importance; and he said that the proper remedy was for the land-owner to take proceedings at law under the 68th section of the statute, if the company refused, upon notice, to proceed to assess the compensation: Adams v. London and Blackwall R. Co., 2 Macn. & G. 118; 6 Railw. C. 286; and see Williams v. South Wales R. Co., 13 Jur. 443. See also Haynes v. Haynes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 426; 30 L. J. (Ch.) 578, where all the authorities on this subject are elaborately reviewed by Kindersley, V. C., the inference being that Walker v. Eastern Counties R. Co. cannot be maintained. In Smith v. Dublin and Bray R. Co., 3 Ir. Ch. Rep. 225 (1853), specific performance was granted against the company. It seems, however, that, although a statute may direct that disputes arising

It has been also decided, that if the Board of Trade, after inspecting a railway about to be opened under the powers conferred on them (o), direct the company to postpone the opening of the railway, and the company, notwithstanding the notice, proceed to open the railway for traffic, it is competent for the Attorney-General as parens patriæ to apply to a court of equity for an injunction to restrain the company from using the railway (p), and Sir J. Romilly, M. R., granted an injunction, and refused to inquire into the sufficiency of the reasons which induced the Board of Trade to withhold their consent, saying, that the company could apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus to the Board of Trade, to dissolve the prohibition, if they wished to raise that point (q). So also an injunction has been granted, at the instance of the Attorney-General, to prevent a railway company acting as coal dealers (r).

Where Injunction
is the proper Remedy to restrain Railway Companies
from doing illegal Acts.

There is also another class of cases to which the remedy by injunction is applicable. It seems, that, if it can be clearly made out, that a railway company cannot perform the undertaking imposed upon them by the terms of the special act, an injunction may be obtained by an owner of property through whose lands the legislature has given the company a right to pass, to restrain the company from taking them (s). For, to take any more land, when the whole work can never be performed, is clearly injurious to the owner, and a substantial breach of the condition on which the legislature granted the right to do it. So, it has been said, that if the termini be changed, and, instead of proceeding to some great town or city, the railway were to terminate in some obscure village, the same result would follow (t). But to induce a Court of Equity thus to interfere, it must clearly appear that the parliamentary plan is finally abandoned (u), and that a real and substantial injury would be sustained by the complaining party, or that the work already completed cannot be beneficial to the public or shareholders (x).

in carrying its provisions into effect shall be referred to a particular tribunal, it is clear that if an act be done tortiously, the jurisdiction of the superior courts is not taken away. Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 14 Jur. 16; and semble, that even if the act be not tortious, the courts have concurrent jurisdiction, by Erle, J., 14 Jur. 19.

terfere, by mandamus, to compel a railway company to complete a line of railway, or execute other works according to the provisions contained in their special acts. It has been determined in equity, that, if a portion only of an entire undertaking be completed, the omission to complete the work is not a public injury which will authorize an injunction at the suit of the the Attorney-General. Attorney-General v. Birmingham and Oxford R. Co., 3 Macn. & G. 453; 16 Jur. 113.

Salmon v. Randall.

And where commissioners were empowered by act of Parliament to widen and improve streets, it was decided, that a person whose property was required by the commissioners for the purposes of the act was not entitled to restrain them, by injunction, from taking the steps prescribed for obtaining possession of the property, until they should have shown a sufficient fund in hand to satisfy the price which might be awarded, or until they should have shown the means by which they proposed to procure it. This case was decided on the ground that every purchase was a distinct work in itself, and to that extent accomplished the object of the legislature (y).

And where a contractor entered into a contract with a railway company for the performance of certain works to be paid for in debentures and shares, but the company afterwards repudiated the contract, and were proceeding to sell the shares, &c., Wood, V. C., refused an injunction to restrain such sale, as he could not compel the contractors to carry out their part of the bargain (z).

Many other instances may be mentioned in which injunctions have issued to restrain the proceedings of railway companies (a), as to restrain directors from issuing new shares, confided to them for one purpose, for a purpose wholly adverse (b); to restrain a company from declaring shares to be forfeited (c); from allowing trains to pass a station without stopping (d); from expending the funds of the company in promoting a bill in Parliament which had for its object a purpose not authorized by the acts of Parliament relating to the company (e); to restrain directors from other misappropriation of the funds and capital of the company (f); to restrain an action at law brought to recover calls upon shares (g); to restrain a company, whose terminus was within the limits of a ferry, from conveying railway passengers across the river in steam-boats, in contravention of the rights of the owners of the ferry (h); to restrain a railway company from charging the plaintiff higher rates for the carriage of goods, than they charged to other persons for the carriage of like goods under similar circumstances (i); to restrain a canal company from affixing the corporate seal to a petition to Parliament for an act

Injunctions.*

So injunctions may be issued to prevent a nuisance of a public or private nature (l). In all cases of this nature, Courts of Equity are guided by the principles already referred to, and will grant or refuse the injunction according to the merits of each particular case.

Courts of Equity have also authority to issue an injunction, not merely to restrain parties from doing acts, but also from entering into contracts pending litigation, that may embarrass the plaintiff in his suit; but the court is guided by a discretion, and will not exercise this jurisdiction where it seems that, on the balance of convenience and inconvenience between interim interference, the balance greatly preponderates in favour of the defendant, and against the plaintiff (m).

Although at one time doubts were entertained whether Courts of Equity have authority to interfere by injunction, to prevent an application to Parliament for an act to release the parties applying from the obligation to execute works which they had undertaken to perform, or otherwise to perform their contract, there is now no doubt whatever that those courts have power, if a proper case is made out, to restrain a party from adopting proceedings in Parliament; the ground of such opinion being, that the court acts in personam, and does not, as was supposed, interfere with the jurisdiction of another court (n). But the court has no authority so to interfere, to deprive a party of the right of applying to Parliament for a special act to supersede the rules of property by which he finds himself bound, whether arising from contract or otherwise. Thus, where a party agreed with a railway company to withdraw his opposition to their bill in Parliament, in consideration of their completing their line of railway in a particular manner, and the company subsequently found themselves unable to carry their contract into execution, and gave notice of their intention to apply to Parliament for an act to authorize them to abandon their scheme, Lord Cottenham dissolved an injunction which had been granted to restrain the company from making this application (o).

Legal Rights in Dispute were formerly sent to be decided by a Court of Law.

Parliament for a measure affecting the public benefit, Wood, V. C., refused to interfere, although he had no doubt of the jurisdiction (p).

Formerly, if when an injunction was applied for it appeared that any legal rights were in dispute between the parties, Courts of Equity ordered the question to be tried in a Court of Law. Lord Cottenham, C., said upon this point:—"The course I have always adopted in cases where the question turns upon a legal right, is to put the parties in a situation to try as quickly as possible that legal right, and to protect the property to be affected until the legal right be ascertained. If there be equitable grounds on which the jurisdiction of this court ought to be withheld, that is a subject matter connected solely with the jurisdiction of this court (q)."

And in determining whether there ought to be a proceeding at law before the injunction was granted, or whether directions should be given to proceed at law, as a condition on which the injunction issued, the court had regard to the circumstances of each case. Sometimes the injunction was granted at once; but the party who had obtained it was put on terms of bringing an action to support the right which had appeared so strong to a Court of Equity, that it has acted on it at the time, but still required the corroboration of the decision of a Court of Law (r); and sometimes, from the great inconvenience, and at other times from the extreme doubt, the court considered it best that the injunction should be suspended until the right at law be determined (s). In Earl of Ripon v. Hobart (t), Lord Brougham, C., thus summed up the rule applicable to such cases (u):—"If the thing sought to be prohibited is in itself a nuisance, the court will interfere to stay irreparable mischief, without waiting for the result of a trial; and will, according to the circumstances, direct an issue or allow an action, and, if need be, expedite the proceedings, the injunction being in the meantime continued" (x). But where the thing sought to be restrained was not unavoidably and in itself noxious, but only something which might, according to circumstances, prove so, the court would refuse to interfere until the matter had been tried at law, generally by an action, though in particular cases an issue was directed for the satisfaction of the court, where an action could not be framed so as to meet the question (y).

But the practice as to sending cases for the determination of a Court of Law was materially altered by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, which enacts,— decided in Equity.*

*Legal Rights in

“Sect. 61. That it shall not be lawful for the Court of Chancery, in any cause or matter, to direct a case to be stated for the opinion of any Court of Common Law, but the said Court of Chancery shall have full power to determine any questions of law, which in the judgment of the Court of Chancery shall be necessary to be decided previously to the decision of the equitable question at issue between the parties.

c. 86, ss. 61, 62.

“Sect. 62. In cases where, according to the present practice of the Court of Chancery, such court declines to grant equitable relief until the legal title or right of the party or parties seeking such relief shall have been established in a proceeding at law, the said court may itself determine such title or right, without requiring the parties to proceed at law to establish the same.”

Since this act, the practice has been, in cases of difficulty and importance, for the Court of Chancery to avail itself of the assistance of one of the common law judges, under the powers conferred for that purpose by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83, s. 8. It was, however, frequently decided, that the court would still, in a proper case, give leave to a party to bring an action at law, notwithstanding 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 61 and 62 (z). But since “The Chancery Regulation Act, 1862” (a), it has been held by the Lords Justices (b) to be obligatory on the Court of Chancery to decide all questions of law or fact, on the determination of which the plaintiff’s title to relief in equity depends, so that the Court of Chancery will not now give leave to parties to bring actions. But that court may still direct issues to try any question of fact to be tried at the assizes, or at the sittings in London or Middlesex (c); and the power to call in the assistance of a common law judge is expressly preserved (d).

All questions of law or fact, on which plaintiff’s right to relief in equity depends, must now be decided in equity.

Where there are mixed questions of law and fact, the Court of Chancery will itself determine the questions of fact before a jury, and will only direct an issue in exceptional cases, when satisfied that the facts can be more conveniently tried in that way (e). Where, however, a difficult mixed question of law and fact arose before the M. R., which he considered could be more conveniently tried by an action and not by an issue, he dismissed the bill without prejudice to an action (f).

Mixed questions of law and fact.

In some cases, the court, in consideration of the great inconvenience and delay which will be caused by granting an injunction, will put the parties under terms to obey the order of the court, and make it a part of the order that, if default is made in complying with the order, the injunction shall issue (g). In such cases, the court will exercise its discretion according to circumstances; and although there may have been an infraction of the law, it will endeavour to do substantial justice to one party without imposing unnecessary hardship upon the other (h). Thus, where a right to an injunction depended on a disputed legal question arising on an agreement, whereby a railway company had undertaken to stop every train at a refreshment station, the court will not grant an injunction, while such question continues to be in dispute, if the company undertake to pay such a sum of money as may be assessed as damages for the violation of the covenant, to be ascertained by the court, so as to avoid the possibility of inflicting a wrongful and irreparable loss upon the company by means of an injunction, and yet avoid the difficulty of bringing numerous actions at law (i).

(h) By agreement between plaintiffs and the agent of a railway company, the former agreed to sell to the company a certain portion of a field for 229*l.*, being 120*l.* for the land, and 109*l.* for compensation for damage by severance to the remaining portion. The agreement contained a stipulation that, in case additional land should be wanted by the company, the same should be taken and paid for after the same rate per acre. The company subsequently took possession of a second portion of the field for purposes authorized by their act, and entered without having previously paid the purchase-money for that second portion after the rate specified in the agreement, and without having previously agreed upon, or ascertained by reference to a jury, the damage occasioned by the severance of the second portion from the remaining portion of the field. A bill having been filed for an injunction, it was decided by Lord Lyndhurst, C., that the agreement only provided for the amount to be paid to the plaintiffs for the value of the second portion of the field, and that neither by intention nor legal construction did such value include the amount of damage by severance to the remaining portion of the field, which amount was either to be agreed upon by the parties, or ascertained by a jury; and that, until such amount was agreed upon or ascertained, the company were not entitled to enter upon the second portion. But upon the company undertaking to pay the amount of damage caused by severance, and to take proper proceedings, if necessary, for ascertaining the amount of such damage, the injunction was withheld. Jones v. Great Western R. Co., 1 Railw. C. 684. In another case, where, before the amount to be paid by a railway company for land required by them for the purposes of their railway had been determined, a verbal consent, by one party stated to be qualified, by the other alleged to be general, was given, whereupon the railway company entered upon the land, and commenced works which would permanently affect it; it was decided, by Wigram, V.C., that the court would not interfere by injunction to stop the works, if perfect justice could be done by compelling the company to pay for the land; but would order the proximate value to be deposited until the amount should be determined. Langford v. Brighton and Hastings R. Co., 4 Railw. C. 69; see also Shrewsbury and Birmingham R. Co. v. L. and N. W. R. Co., 20 L. J. (Ch.) 90; Furness R. Co. v. Smith, 1 De G. & S. 299. And in some cases, where the title of the company is attacked after they have entered upon lands, equity will restrain the claimant from bringing an ejectment, and will order a reference to the Master. Norfolk R. Co. v. Bayes, 13 Jur. 435. And where a notice to treat has been given to a person whom the company believed to be the owner of land, and they have subsequently treated with him and purchased the land, and entered upon it, equity will not interfere, by injunction, at the instance of a third person, who sets up a mere dry question of adverse title. Webster v. South Eastern R. Co., 6 Railw. C. 698; 20 L. J. (Ch.) 194; 1 Sim. (N. S.) 172; 15 Jur. 73. In such a case the claimant must bring an action of trespass or ejectment to try the title.

So, where an injunction is applied for to prevent the use of things devoted to the public use, the court will consider the amount of inconvenience likely to result if the injunction is granted, and will sometimes allow a partial and restricted use of the thing complained of whilst further proceedings are pending (k). In all cases of this description, particularly where the equity depends upon a legal right, the court regards both sides of the question, and looks to see, according as the decision shall be for one side or the other, which way the least loss would fall upon either party (l). In accordance with this rule, where it appeared that a company had cut through a road to form a bridge across it, without having first provided another sufficient temporary road, which the special act required them to do, and an injunction was granted after the mischief was done, restraining the company from destroying the road, Lord Cottenham, C., being satisfied that the road would be restored as speedily by allowing the company to proceed with the works, as by requiring them to restore the road, suspended the injunction for three weeks (m).

When the amount of Inconvenience arising from an Injunction will be considered.

And the same learned judge observed in another case:—

Bell v. Hull and Selby R. Co.

“It is very necessary that this court should deal very strictly with companies, and prevent them, with the large powers that are given to them by acts of Parliament, from defeating the rights and interests of individuals. But it is also the duty of the court to take care that, if individuals avail themselves of any omission of any power on the part of the company, this court should not assist those individuals in extorting money from the company. It is the duty of the court in every case to steer clear of those two opposite extremes; and if there should be some omission which may give a party a legal right against a company, the court would leave that individual to his legal means of taking advantage of it (n).”

And in a later case, where an application made for an injunction to restrain defendants from using a communication carried by certain branch rails from plaintiffs' to defendants' railway, Wigram, V. C., said,—

North Union R. Co. v. Bolton and Preston R. Co.

“The question I have to consider is, whether I should grant the injunction prayed before a trial at law. Now upon that question, adverting to the great reluctance which this court has always shown to grant injunctions against trespasses in the nature of nuisances affecting private rights until the legal right had been established by trial at law (amounting, it has in some cases been said, to a positive rule not to grant the injunction before trial), I am clear that the course of the court, in cases like the present, entitles the defendants to call upon me, without forming a decided opinion upon the law of the case, not to decide against them in the present stage of the inquiry. In coming to this conclusion, I am of course governed in some degree by the nature of the injury complained of, as not being irreparable in the sense of waste or destruction; and I must, therefore, be distinctly understood as not repudiating my right to grant an injunction at any moment, if the defendants, from carelessness, wilfulness or otherwise, should so exercise the privilege they claim as seriously to obstruct the plaintiffs in the use of their own railway (o)."

Deere v. Guest.

And Lord Cottenham, C., refused to grant an injunction to prevent the owners of a railroad made over plaintiffs' land from using it or from interrupting plaintiffs' workmen in removing it, although the possession of the land for the purpose of constructing the railroad had been obtained by means of circumvention and fraud. His lordship intimated, that if defendants were not entitled to the right of way they were mere trespassers, and plaintiffs had their proper legal remedy against them (p). And if a doubt is raised as to the legality of an agreement, or if it be not one of a class in which specific performance is usually decreed, an injunction will not be granted (q).

Application must be made promptly.

It is to be observed that a party who seeks relief by injunction must apply to the court promptly. If he allows the works complained of to proceed, whereby large sums of money are expended, a subsequent application for an injunction will be refused on the ground of acquiescence (r). Thus where a party allowed a railway company to make an excavation to form a new channel for a river, which occupied a considerable period of time and involved a large expenditure of money, the court refused an injunction, although it was applied for as soon as the company ceased to work on their own lands and began to cut the banks of the river (s). Again, where the plaintiff whose house adjoined a railway station allowed the company to make a siding, on which they collected manure, and this went on for four years and a half without the plaintiff taking any steps to stop it; Wood, V. C., refused an injunction on the ground of acquiescence, and his decision was upheld by the Lords Justices (t). Where, however, the proprietors of a turnpike-road stood by while a railway company laid down temporary rails across their road, and employed wagons drawn by horses only on the temporary railroad for the purpose of carrying on the works, that is not such laches as will deprive the turnpike trustees of any right they have to an injunction to restrain the railroad company from using the railroad for public traffic with locomotive engines (u).

Application must be made promptly.

With regard to what constitutes that amount of laches which will deprive a party of his right to relief by injunction, it is difficult to state any positive rule. To a very considerable extent each case will be governed by its own particular circumstances (v), and it has been said on this subject, that there are two arguments invariably adduced by public companies (w):—if the plaintiff comes to the court complaining of an injury at the first commencement, it is said that the damage is trifling and the motion frivolous and vexatious; if he waits until it has assumed a grave shape, it is then said that he has acquiesced, and is therefore precluded from complaining.

When an injunction is applied for, all the facts of the case should be fairly stated; if they are not, and the injunction is afterwards dissolved in consequence of the false representation of the case, the rule is, that the plaintiff will be subjected to pay the whole of the defendant's costs (x). Forgetfulness is no excuse (y). And if a party comes for an ex parte injunction, and misrepresents the facts of the case, he is not permitted to support the injunction by showing another state of circumstances in which he would be entitled to it (z). Upon this point, it has been said that the jurisdiction of the court in granting ex parte injunctions is a very hazardous one, and one which, though often used, to preserve property, may be often used to the injury of others; and it is right that a strict hand should be held over those who come with such applications (a).

All facts must be stated.

It is no objection to an injunction that it is mandatory in its effects, although only prohibitory in form (b). Thus in Great North of England, Clarence and Hartlepool Junction R. Co. v. Clarence R. Co. (c), the principal question between the parties was, upon the construction of the plaintiffs' special act, whether, assuming that plaintiffs had a right to make a bridge pursuant to a certain plan over defendants' railway, no part of the permanent supports of such bridge being intended to rest upon defendants' land, the plaintiffs had a right, by way of temporary easement, to erect poles and other temporary constructions upon land adjacent to defendants' railway, and to pass and re-pass across such railway, doing no vexatious acts, compensating for all damage, and not interfering with the regular traffic of defendants' railway. The defendants, in order to prevent plaintiffs from so temporarily using their land, had built up a wall, which effectually prevented plaintiffs from carrying on their works; and the bill prayed an injunction to restrain defendants from continuing to maintain such wall, and from preventing plaintiffs from making their bridge, &c. The court refused to grant the injunction until satisfied by the opinion of a court of law that plaintiffs had a legal right to build the bridge, and to use defendants' land by way of temporary easement. But the Court of Exchequer having certified that the plaintiffs had both such legal rights, the Lord Chancellor (supporting the view of Knight Bruce, V. C., that it was no objection to the injunction that it was in effect of a mandatory character) made the order nearly in the terms of the prayer of the bill. To the same effect is Lord Mexborough v. Bower (d), in which an injunction was granted to restrain defendant, who had cut certain channels from one coal field into another (in derogation of an agreement with plaintiff), from permitting the communication to continue open (e).

*Isenberg v. East

The jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to interfere by way of mandatory injunction is thus explained by Lord Westbury, C., in a recent case (f), in which plaintiff sought for a mandatory injunction restraining defendants from permitting certain new buildings which they had erected to remain and obstruct the plaintiff's ancient lights. After adverting to the jurisdiction of the court to interfere by way of prohibition of further damage or intended damage, his Lordship said :—

“ But there has been superadded to that the power of the court to grant what has been denominated ‘a mandatory injunction,’ that is, an order compelling a defendant to restore things to the condition in which they were at the time when the plaintiff's complaint was made. The exercise of that power is one that must be attended with the greatest possible caution. I think, without intending to lay down any rule, that it is confined to cases where the injury done to the plaintiff cannot be estimated and sufficiently compensated by a pecuniary sum. Where it admits of being so estimated, and where the evil sustained by the plaintiff may be abundantly compensated in money, there appears to be no necessity to superadd to the case the exercise of that extraordinary power by this court. I can easily understand cases in which an ancient mansion or family seat may be prejudicially affected, and where the remedy therefore can hardly be other than that of restoring things to their former condition. I can imagine the interruption of a supply of water that would entirely stop a flourishing manufactory, where it is impossible to estimate the future profits of the trade, or it would be difficult to define now a sum of money that may be sufficient compensation for all injury hereafter. But that is not the case that is before me. I have got a case in which I think it is a matter of very doubtful result whether any damage has been sustained, but it is a case in which, beyond all question, without taking into consideration the confession of the parties, the whole of the injury that has been sustained by the plaintiff, the whole of the prejudice and damage to the plaintiff's premises by the erection of the defendants' buildings, may be abundantly compensated in money. To what end, then, am I to exercise a jurisdiction which, in such a case as this, would be simply mischievous to the defendants, without being attended with correspondent benefit to the plaintiff, unless, indeed, I could approve of the plaintiff's taking advantage of the mischief and loss that the defendants would have to sustain, in order to aggravate and exaggerate his claim for pecuniary compensation? This is a case in which the benefit of the recent statute (g), giving power to this court to assess and ascertain damages, is peculiarly felt, and I hold it therefore to be the duty of the court, in such a case as the present, not to deliver over the defendants to the plaintiff bound hand and foot, in order to be made subject to any extortionate demand that the plaintiff might by possibility make, but in which it is the duty of the court instead of granting a mandatory injunction to substitute an inquiry before itself, in order to ascertain the measure of damage that has been actually sustained. I shall not forget the fact, which has been properly pressed upon me, that the defendants, after having notice of the plaintiff's complaint, carried on their works. I cannot however rest upon that at all judicially. They had the power of doing so. But it may be taken as a confession on the part of the defendants that what they were doing would certainly be attended with some injury to the plaintiff. That, I think, is not to be lost sight of in the estimation of that injury; but the course which I shall take is the one that I think is clearly consistent with justice and with reason, and really will carry into effect what both sides admit ought to be done, though they have been so unfortunate as not to agree upon the means of doing it. I shall suspend the whole of this order, and direct an inquiry to be had before me, for the purpose of ascertaining what damage has been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the buildings erected by the defendants, and what will be a sufficient compensation to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff as a satisfaction for such damage, including therein the power to direct any works to be done by the defendants for the benefit of the plaintiff as part of the compensation to be so made to him. The parties respectively to be at liberty to have their witnesses examined vivâ voce before me, if they prefer that course to affidavits, that is, both may be combined. If the affidavits are filed and the cross-examination of the witnesses be desired, that cross-examination shall be had before me in court."

Lastly, it is to be observed, that the jurisdiction of equity to restrain a railway company from so dealing in the course of its operations as to injure the property of another, is not taken away because it happens that the act incorporating the company points out, specifically, a mode in which a party complaining of its acts may obtain compensation (h).

party is liable to be committed to prison for the contempt; and, if an injunction be disobeyed by a railway company, a sequestration will in some cases be also issued (i).

Power to Court of Chancery to award damages.

By the Court of Chancery Amendment Act, 1858, it is enacted that (j):—

“In all cases in which the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction against a breach of any covenant, contract or agreement, or against the commission or continuance of any wrongful act, or for the specific performance of any covenant, contract or agreement, it shall be lawful for the same court, if it shall think fit, to award damages (h) to the party injured, either in addition to or in substitution for such injunction or specific performance, and such damages may be assessed in such manner as the court shall direct (l).

damages.

It has been held that the Court of Chancery, though refusing an injunction, may, under Sir H. Cairns's Act, direct an inquiry as to damages, but is not bound to do so by Rolt's Act; and, if it thinks that the case will be more effectually disposed of at law, will dismiss the plaintiff's bill without prejudice to his right to bring an action (n).

II. Injunctions at Law.

Common Law.

We shall now proceed to show when writs of injunction may be obtained at common law. We have already considered the extent of the jurisdiction which has been conferred by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (o). Additional powers granted by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which authorize the Superior Courts of Common Law, or a judge, to issue injunctions in certain other cases, appear to be extremely well calculated to remedy an intolerable mischief. Formerly, if a legal right had been infringed, and an action was brought to recover damages, it was not an unusual course for a defendant to harass the plaintiff by stoutly contesting the proceedings at law, whilst he continued to repeat or continued the trespasses complained of, thereby merely affording the plaintiff a new ground for the maintenance of another action at law; and thus the plaintiff was driven to a Court of Equity for relief, or he was compelled to bring a new action, as often as each trespass was repeated. It will be seen that a complete check is now offered to such proceedings; and it is worthy of remark, that the steps now taken point towards the accomplishment of a more complete blending of the jurisdiction of the superior courts, for the remedy in the courts of law has hitherto, with rare exceptions, been compensatory, and not preventive,—merely awarding redress for wrongs when actually committed, but not prohibiting their commission. On the other hand, as we have seen, courts of equity are also now empowered in certain cases to decide questions of law and give damages (p).

The Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, enacts:—

"Sect. 79. In all cases of breach of contract or other injury, where the party injured is entitled to maintain, and has brought, an action, he may, in like case and manner as hereinbefore provided with respect to mandamus (q), claim a writ of injunction against the repetition or continuance of such breach of contract or other injury, or the committal of any breach of contract or injury of a like kind, arising out of the same contract, or relating to the same property or right; and he may also in the same action include a claim for damages or other redress.

"Sect. 80. The writ of summons in such action shall be in the same form as the writ of summons in any personal action, but on every such writ and copy thereof there shall be endorsed a notice that in default of appearance the plaintiff may, besides proceeding to judgment and execution for damages and costs, apply for and obtain a writ of injunction.

"Sect. 81. The proceedings in such action shall be the same, as nearly as may be, and subject to the like control, as the proceedings in an action to obtain a mandamus under the provisions hereinbefore contained (q); and in such action judgment may be given that the writ of injunction do or do not issue, as justice may require; and in case of disobedience such writ of injunction may be enforced by attachment by the court, or, when such court shall not be sitting, by a judge.

"Sect. 82. It shall be lawful for the plaintiff at any time after the commencement of the action, and whether before or after judgment, to apply ex parte to the court or a judge, for a writ of injunction (r) to restrain the defendant in such action from the repetition or continuance of the wrongful act or breach of contract complained of, or the committal of any breach of contract or injury of a like kind, arising out of the same contract, or relating to the same property or right; and such writ may be granted or denied by the court or judge, upon such terms as to the duration of the writ, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as to such court or judge shall seem reasonable and just; and in case of disobedience such writ may be enforced by attachment by the court, or, when such court shall not be sitting, by a judge: provided always, that any order for a writ of injunction made by a judge, or any writ issued by virtue thereof, may be discharged, or varied or set aside by the court, on application made thereto, by any party dissatisfied with such order (s)."

1. It is well known that railway companies are liable to be rated to the relief of the poor; but much difficulty has been hitherto experienced in carrying the law into effect. The intricacy of the numerous questions which arise in considering this important subject, and the present unsettled state of the law, are circumstances which seem to invite an investigation of the general principles which are applicable to the assessment of the poor's-rate.

The principles of law applicable to the rating of railways.

Railway companies are liable to be rated to the poor's-rate, as being occupiers (a) of land, within 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, which enacts, that competent sums shall be levied in each parish for the relief of the poor, by "taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods in the parish," to be gathered out of the parish, according to the ability of the parish.

And the Parochial Assessment Act (b) enacts, sect. 1:—

Parochial Assessment Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96.

"That no rate for the relief of the poor in England and Wales shall be allowed by any justices (c), or be of any force, which shall not be made upon an estimate of the net annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto, that is to say, of the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenants' rates (d), and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge (if any), and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance and other expenses (if any) necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter or affect the principles or different relative liabilities (if any) according to which different kinds of hereditaments are now by law rateable."

(b) See also the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 103, s. 15; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39.

(c) The allowance of a rate by justices is a mere ministerial, and not a judicial, act. R. v. Earl of Yarborough, 12 A. & E. 416. But a rate without it is void. Fox v. Davies, 6 C. B. 11. And in so far as seeing that it is made by competent authority, the allowance is a judicial act. Per Maule, J., ibid.

(d) In metropolitan parishes, the general rate and lighting rate, levied under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 161, are tenants' rates, and are to be deducted. R. v. Goodchild, 27 L. J. (M. C.) 233; E. B. & E. 1; and see ibid., as to tenants' profits.

Law applicable to the Rating of Railways.*

Exemption of stock-in-trade.

And, by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 89 (d), it is enacted:—

“That it shall not be lawful for the overseers of any parish, township or village, to tax any inhabitant thereof, as such inhabitant, in respect of his ability derived from the profits of stock-in-trade or any other property, for or towards the relief of the poor: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall in anywise affect the liability of any parson or vicar, or of any occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines or saleable underwoods, to be taxed under the provisions of the said acts, for and towards the relief of the poor.”

earned.

These are the statutory provisions now in force. It may also be taken to be a well-established principle, that a railway is rateable in the parish where the profits are earned; and it makes no difference that the earnings are received elsewhere; just as a farmer is rateable in the place where he grows his corn, not where he sells it (e). It therefore makes no difference that a portion of the fares and tolls which are earned in any parish are received at any other place.

And it is the amount of the traffic over the portion of the railway in each parish, taken in connection with the proper deduction, which must regulate the amount of the rate. If the portion in a parish is more productive than other portions in other parishes, either because there is more traffic, or because the yearly outgoings and expenses there are less, it ought to be assessed at a higher proportionate value (f): as “the value which the land occupied in each parish produces, after the due allowance, is that upon which the occupier is to be rated in each” (g). This is called the parochial principle, in contradistinction to the mileage principle, which incorrectly assumes that the property must be equal throughout the whole line of a railway.

Another principle of the law is, that the amount of the assessment to the rate does not depend upon the amount of the capital originally expended in constructing the portion of the railway which is the subject of the assessment (h); except, indeed, so far as such expenditure has increased the annual value of that portion of the railway; for instance, the tunnel at Box Hill, on the Great Western Railway, or the portion of the L. and N. W. Railway constructed across Chat Moss, must be rated with reference, not to its original cost, but with reference to the amount of its yearly earnings and outgoings, in the same proportion as any other parts of the railway less costly in their construction.

It therefore appears, 1st, that railway companies are liable to be rated as being occupiers of land; 2ndly, that the company must be assessed upon an estimate of the net annual value of the hereditaments, i. e. the land on which the railway is constructed; 3rdly, that they are not liable to be assessed in respect of their ability derived from stock-in-trade, or any other property, except land; 4thly, that the rate must be upon the parochial, and not upon the mileage principle; and lastly, that the cost of the railway and works in the particular parish cannot be taken as an estimate on which to found the rate.

*The Principles of Law applicable to

These principles of law appear to be clear and distinct enough; but in their practical application great difficulties have been experienced. They seem to arise chiefly from the following causes: first, the evident unsuitableness of the Parochial Assessment Act to the rating of railway property; 2ndly, from the extreme difficulty of distinguishing the profits of trade made by a company as carriers, and by the use of engines and other personal property (in respect of which, as we have seen, they are not rateable) from the profitable occupation of the land on which the railway is constructed; and, lastly, from the embarrassment which has been introduced by rating branch railways independently of main or trunk lines, when both are under one management, and thus raising the vexata quæstio as to the rateable value of the former, when regarded as a feeder of traffic to the latter.

Some remarks suggest themselves on these points. With respect to the first, we need only refer to the forcible language used by Lord Campbell, C. J. (i), and we shall see, at once, how great an obstacle is presented by the incongruous provisions of the Parochial Assessment Act. His Lordship, after expressing an earnest hope that some legislative enactment would relieve the courts from the difficulty of administering the existing law, said:—

Inapplicability of Parochial Assessment Act to railway rating.

“The rule laid down by the Parochial Assessment Act is easily applicable to the property which the legislature then had in contemplation, but it is wholly inapplicable to a railway extending many miles through many parishes, with a trunk line and branches, the traffic upon its different sections varying materially, and the expense of working these different sections bearing no certain proportion to the earnings upon them. Required to determine how a railway company should be assessed in a parish through which a branch of the railway passes, without any

(i) In R. v. Great Western R. Co., 15 Q. B. 397. And in R. v. Coventry Canal Co., 28 L. J. (M. C.) 102; E. & E. 572, where it was held that the expense of maintaining locks in a canal is not a local expense, but ought to be thrown on the whole line of canal, the same learned judge said, “There certainly is considerable difficulty in applying the rule laid down in the Parochial Assessment Act to canals and railways passing through many parishes; and we had hoped that the legislature would have relieved us from the difficulty by laying down rules of rating more applicable to a species of property rapidly increasing in amount, which does not seem to have been in contemplation when the Parochial Assessment Act passed. But the legislature declining to interpose, we have been driven to dispose of all these cases in the best manner we could; and we see no aggravated difficulty in applying to these the only rule given to us, whether the companies are carriers themselves, or receive their profits in the shape of tolls, for using the means of conveyance which they furnish to the public, without furnishing the vehicles to convey, or the moving power.”

*The Principles of Law applicable to

station within the parish, the traffic on this branch being comparatively small, and large outgoings being required, from the peculiarities of the locality, to keep in repair and to work the portion of the railway within this parish, we are directed to consider the rent at which this section of the railway might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenants' rates and taxes and tithe commutation rent-charge, and the only guide we have as to deductions, is to deduct the probable annual costs of repairs, insurance, and other expenses, without any intimation as to what we are to do with respect to tunnels or embankments, or standing engines employed exclusively within the parish, or locomotive engines employed on the whole line, or the general expenses of the directors who manage the entire concern, or the charge arising from the maintenance of stations or the employment of police. If we settle all these and similar questions, we may be considered as legislators rather than judges, making rather than expounding the law. At all events we must proceed upon a most improbable and nearly absurd supposition that a person may be found who would take the portion of the railway which passes through a single parish, and no more, as tenant from year to year.

"Without some alteration in or declaration of the law upon this subject by the legislature, we foresee that, although we should give judgment between these parties, much trouble, litigation and expense must still arise both to parishes and to railway companies throughout England."

Necessity of distinguishing between profits of personalty and profits of land.

As to the second difficulty suggested, i.e., that which proceeds from the necessity of distinguishing the profits of trade, and such as arise from personal property, from those which belong to the occupation of land, we may observe that this important investigation rests entirely with the courts of Quarter Sessions, who are the sole judges of the facts in each particular case, and who alone can determine this difficult problem. The Court of Queen's Bench, adhering to old decisions, has resolutely declined to interfere with the findings of the sessions. As we shall see hereafter (k), the mode now adopted to ascertain the rateable value of a railway is, first to ascertain the gross receipts of the line within the particular parish, and then by making a series of elaborate calculations, endeavour to exhaust the proper deductions, so as to arrive at a sum which expresses the net rent which a tenant from year to year might be expected to give for the portion of the railway which is situate in the parish raising the rate. This being the state of the law, a Court of Quarter Sessions, in an early case (l) which was submitted to the Superior Court, invited the judges to say whether the proper mode of finding out the rateable value of the railway had been adopted by them, and we find the following answer returned:

"The gross yearly receipts of the company, as occupiers of and carriers on the railway, must at least include the proper subject-matter of the rate. The sessions have, therefore, taken a sum agreed to represent them as the first point to start from. They then assume an amount of capital employed in the trade, and deduct from the former sum two per-centages on the latter, for the interest of this capital and the profits which ought to be made on it, and a third for the depreciation of stock beyond usual repairs and expenses; 4thly, they deduct from the gross receipts the annual costs of conducting the trade; 5thly, they deduct the annual value of all the land occupied by stations, &c., and elsewhere rated; and, 6thly, a sum per mile for the reproduction of rails, chairs, sleepers, &c. These deductions, taken together, seem to us to include whatever is properly referable to the trade, and distinguishable from the increased value which that trade gives to the land. We do not now speak of the amounts allowed under each item, and we decline to give any opinion on this point, which is properly for the sessions; but if these are the proper heads of deduction, then the residue must represent the value of the occupation; and if so, this alone is brought into the rate, and the profits of trade are excluded. Accordingly, the sessions have found, as an inference from the facts, that the residue is the sum which a tenant from year to year might reasonably be expected to give for the railway and corporeal hereditaments now occupied by the company in connexion with the railway, exclusive of the stations and other buildings rated separately, such tenant being assumed to have the same and no other power of using the railway,—the same and no other advantages and privileges,—as the company now possess. If the deduction exhaust that portion of receipts referable to trade, the inference of the sessions is fair. If the advantages and privileges which the company possess are attributable to their occupation, and would pass with it, their assumption is well founded. We agree with them in both.”

So, in a subsequent case, where the same elaborate process of making deductions from the gross receipts of the railway company had been adopted, the sessions submitted to the judgment of the court, as a distinct question for their determination, “the principle upon which the calculations were founded, and the propriety and sufficiency of the deductions” (m). But the court, although thus pointedly invited to the discussion of the amount and sufficiency of the deductions made by the sessions, declined, as they had done before, to answer the question in the following terms:—

“We are to see whether these deductions include all such as ought to be made on an ordinary occupation, exclusive of trade, and also all such matters as are distinctly referable to the trade only, and do not enhance the value of the occupation. If so, the principle of the rate is right; whether sufficient in amount under each head has been allowed, it is not for us to determine.”

And, lastly, after having discussed in detail the various heads of deduction claimed by the company, but resisted by the parish officers, the judgment proceeds as follows:—

“Two more questions are stated; the first, as to the mode of ascertaining the tenant's profits in order to their deduction from the rateable value. The respondents have taken the original value of the plant or moveable stock, and allowed 10*l.* per cent. upon it for these profits, as well as the profits of trade. The appellants say, that the more correct mode would be to ascertain them by a per-centage on the gross receipts, and claim to have 15*l.* per cent. deducted from these on that account. We are very unwilling to withhold our aid in settling questions for the sessions of such novelty and difficulty as the railway rating must often bring before them; but we ought not to go beyond our province, and so, perhaps, mislead them. This question involves no principle of law, and we decline to answer it."

The Court of Quarter Sessions is the Tribunal to assess the Value of the Occupation.

These cases, and others of a similar character, appear to justify the remark we have made, that Justices at Quarter Sessions are left to ascertain, as they best can, the rateable value of a railway (n); nor does there seem to be any well-grounded expectation, that the legislature will interfere for their relief. The earnest appeal made, as we

(n) In some of the cases, the Courts of Quarter Sessions seem practically to treat the land as the principal source of profit, whilst the capital and stock-in-trade,—the latter consisting of the locomotive engines and carriages used by the company in their trade as carriers,—all personal property, and consequently not rateable, seem to be considered as being merely accessory to the occupation of the land. This result has been arrived at by the process of making certain deductions from the gross receipts of the company, until the sessions at last arrive at the net rent which a tenant from year to year would be supposed to be willing to give for the occupation of the portion of the railway within the parish; and the Court of Queen's Bench has said, "Assuming that you allow sums sufficient in amount by way of deduction, we think the residue properly shows the rateable value of the land." Now it is to be observed that the rateable value of a farm or of a manufactory may be ascertained by a similar process to that introduced into railway rating, i. e., by taking first the whole of the gross receipts of the farmer or manufacturer, and then by making deductions sufficient in number and amount to exhaust every portion of the receipts, except that which the farmer or manufacturer would be willing to pay as rent for his farm or manufactory, but it is extremely improbable that a surveyor would, under any circumstances, adopt this process (which seems ingeniously contrived to run up the rate on railways to the highest point) in proceeding to rate a farmer, much less a manufacturer. If we look accurately into the facts we shall see that the profits of a railway company, working their own line, are chiefly derived from two sources—the occupation of a certain quantity of land on which the railway is formed, and the possession of capital in money, and valuable personal property, in the shape of locomotive and other carriages, and various kinds of unfixed machinery: the company also employ a numerous body of clerks and other servants to carry on the business of the railway. So the profits made by a farmer of land are, in like manner, chiefly derived from the same sources, i. e., the occupation of a certain quantity of land, and the possession of a floating capital in money, and of personal property usually called his stock-in-trade, including cattle and other animals: he also employs numerous labourers in the management of his farm. Again, take the case of a large cotton or other manufacturer. Here we find an extensive manufactory, a large floating capital, valuable machinery, for the most part unfixed, and not liable to be rated, and a number of clerks and workmen employed in carrying on the trade.

In each of these instances, the railway company and the farmer are liable to be rated in respect of the occupation of the land, and the manufacturer in respect of the manufactory; but neither of them is liable to be assessed in respect of his personal property, i. e., his machinery, implements, stock-in-trade or capital. Nor are the profits of his trade, as such, liable to be taken into account in assessing the rate.

In each of the supposed cases, the law requires that the occupier of the hereditament shall be assessed upon its net annual value, to be ascertained in the manner specified in the Parochial Assessment Act; and the question to be solved is, whether by the present mode of rating railways, the desired result is attained. It must be remembered that there is an express provision in the last-mentioned act "that nothing therein contained shall be construed to alter or affect the principles or different relative liabilities (if any) according to which different kinds of hereditaments are now by law rateable" (ante, 579). So that no new or additional burthen is thrown upon any kind of property by that statute. Farmers and manufacturers would probably be liable to be rated for their stock-in-trade but for the stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 89 (ante, 580), because it is now generally understood that the decision declaring the non-liability of the farmer to be rated for his stock-in-trade, as decided in R. v. Capel (12 Ad. & E. 382), was founded on the technical ground that the case did not state that the farmer was an inhabitant of the parish; and it was a representation of that circumstance which induced Parliament, upon the demand of the tithe-owners, to pass the 3 & 4 Vict. for one year only. It is unnecessary to comment upon the obvious injustice of rating railway companies upon profits derived from personal property, whilst other owners of similar property remain untaxed in respect of it. See further on this subject, post, 614.

have seen, by the most eminent of our judges, produced no effect on our legislators; and, inasmuch as land owners, owners of tithe rent charges, and railway and canal proprietors, are alike deeply interested, if even the slightest change is made in the relative proportions in which the rates are contributed, it is probable that matters will remain as they are. We must therefore proceed diligently to prosecute our inquiries for the purpose of pointing out the best mode of encountering difficulties which cannot be avoided.

to Branch Lines.*

With respect to the third obstacle which arises from drawing a distinction, in rating, between a main line of railway and a branch line, and by treating the latter as a feeder of traffic, and consequently as a source of profit to the former, we may remark, that the necessity of discussing this point also arises from the ill-digested provisions of the Parochial Assessment Act. The difficulty seems to arise in the following manner. An independent company may be supposed to obtain an act of Parliament, and to construct a short line of railway which may form a junction with, or be near to, a trunk or main line belonging to another company. It may likewise be near to another line belonging to a third company; and thus this branch line becomes an object for competition between the proprietors of two other lines of railway, because it may be advantageously used by either of them, as a feeder to their own line and a withdrawer of traffic from the other.

Branch lines considered as feeders of traffic.

Now, it is evident, that so long as this supposed branch line remains in the hands of an independent company, who may work or lease it, it is quite correct to assess it to the poor's-rate according to the rent which either of these rival companies may be willing to pay for it, making of course the proper deductions according to the statute; and it will be found, when the cases are examined, that the learned judges are quite agreed on this point. But in two cases (o), where other companies had succeeded in acquiring branch lines of railway, either by purchase or by becoming lessees, much discussion was raised upon the question, whether their value as feeders to the main lines, into which they had been merged, was or was not to be taken into account in assessing the rate in a particular parish; and after these cases had been discussed at great length in the Court of Queen's Bench, the learned judges differed in their opinions, and an additional perplexity is thus presented to our parochial authorities, and the legal puzzle is subjected to an additional entanglement. We believe, however, that on a careful examination of the two cases referred to, it will be found, that the learned judges do not differ in their opinions upon any principle of law; but that they merely drew different inferences from the facts as they were stated in the special cases (p).

Having made these preliminary remarks, we proceed to direct attention to the numerous cases which have been decided; and, for the sake of brevity, such portions only are extracted as appear necessary to elucidate our inquiry, and a reference to the cases will supply any omission which may be inadvertently made of material points connected with the questions under consideration (q).

The London and South-Western case (q), which was first submitted to the Court of Queen's Bench, contains useful elementary information on the subject of railway rating, but the general question, as to the exact mode of rating railways, was not much discussed. The principal point suggested in that case, on behalf of the railway company, was, that the tolls alone (as distinguished from fares) which the company were authorized to take from the persons who used the railway with their own carriages formed the basis on which the rate was to be calculated; and the case found as a fact, that, if the company were wrong on this point, then a certain sum (70,000*l.* per annum for the whole railway) was the rent which a tenant would be willing to give for the occupation of the railway, with all its attendant advantages, under the provisions of the Parochial Assessment Act. The sums were therefore agreed upon between the parties, and it was unnecessary to consider whether the profits of trade, as such, were included in the larger assessment of 70,000*l.* per annum or not (r); and, the court having ruled that the principal point contended for by the (r) It is said by the court, that the stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 89, which, as we have seen, abolished rating in respect of the profits of stock-in-trade, or other personal property, had little or no bearing on the question submitted to them. See 1 Q. B. 577. And company could not be sustained, the purposes for which that case seems to have been raised were answered.

In the Grand Junction case (s), the next in order, the same question, as to making the tolls the basis of the rate, was again submitted to the court, and a distinction in favour of the railway company was attempted to be set up, on the ground, that persons other than the company used the railway as carriers, which was not the state of the facts in the previous case. The court, however, adhered to their former decision, and said that the two cases were in principle the same. It is said on this point,—

“Each of the two companies must be rated in respect of the occupation of the land: one of them derives no benefit from that occupation, except by carrying goods and passengers, and the division of that profit into tolls and fares we think merely nominal; the other, in addition to this mode of profit by occupying, also derives a profit from allowing others to carry goods and passengers on the line also; and this latter profit is properly called tolls. Still, in both cases, the inquiry must be the same—What is the value of the occupation, from whatever source derived? In neither can the profits of trade, as such, be brought into the rate; but, if the ability to carry on a gainful trade on land adds to the value of the land, that value cannot be excluded on the ground that it is referable to the trade.”

But another question of great importance was, in the Grand Junction case, submitted to the court. It appeared that the Court of Quarter Sessions ascertained the rateable value of the railway in the following manner:—The gross receipts of the company were first ascertained, and, the problem being to cut down this gross sum to the net rent which a tenant would give for the railway, various items of deduction, amounting to six in number, were allowed; and, an attempt was thus made to call upon the Court of Queen's Bench to determine the proper method of ascertaining the rent; and also to verify the calculations upon which the estimate was founded. It was upon this occasion, and in the language already cited (t), the Court of Queen's Bench first intimated, in a case of railway rating, that it was sufficient for them to say, that the proper heads of deduction had been observed, but with the amounts allowed under each item they had nothing to do.

We now arrive at the first Great Western case (u), and the first thing which arrests our attention in the judgment is a recapitulation by the court of the points decided in the two previous cases, which we have already commented upon. The court say, by the occupier of the land upon it cannot be made directly the subject of the rate assessed in respect of such occupation, and the value of the occupation alone was the proper subject, yet in that value was to be included whatever at the time formed part of it, whether permanently or not, and from whatever source derived; and, therefore, of course, not less so, although derived, in any proportion, from the fact of the trade being so carried on upon it. Further, that although the sum to be sought was that which, after all due deductions made, a tenant might be found to give by way of rent from year to year, in order to be placed as occupier in the same position as the party rated, yet this was to be sought, not by drily considering what rent would be given for so many miles of railway as happened to be in the rating parish, apart from all the actually co-existing circumstances, but by including in the consideration all such as would necessarily attend upon the occupation under the demise, and influence the tenant's mind as to the amount of rent which he would give. In the application of these principles, the practical difficulty for those who assess the rate in cases of such complication as railways often present, will be, to distinguish accurately between that which is properly referable to the trade alone, and that increase of value which the carrying on of the trade upon the land gives to the occupation of it. The case of the Grand Junction Railway (x) presented many circumstances the same as exist in the case now before us, and we thought that the parish officers there had successfully met the difficulty."

The court then proceed to point out the proper items of allowance which ought to be made; and, as the rules laid down have been since almost invariably adopted, it will be useful to state them in some detail.

"We are now to examine the rate stated in this case, only, however, as to its principles, and so much of its details as involve principle; beyond that, and especially as to the accuracy of calculations, the questions must be for the sessions alone. We have here a company, sole occupiers of a line of which they are owners. Of this, the land in respect of which they are rated forms a part; they are also sole occupiers, as lessee, of two branch lines, both issuing out of the line first named. Upon all these lines they carry on exclusively a large trade as carriers, the net receipts of which, from the branch lines alone, if set against their expenses and rent, would make the occupation of them in fact a losing concern; but this occupation increases the traffic upon the main line, and, for the sake of this, the company are content to sustain that partial loss. In order to ascertain the rate, the course pursued has been, to take the gross receipts per mile in the respondent parish; and this sum is not in dispute. The deductions to be made from this are calculated on a mileage proportion of all the expenses and outgoings, taking the whole three lines as one entire line in all particulars in which the appellants are at all chargeable; and we do not understand this mode to be objected to. Setting the proportion of these per mile against the gross receipts per mile, the residue has been taken as the rateable value per mile. We are then to see whether these deductions include all such as ought to be made on an ordinary occupation, exclusive of trade, and also all such matters as are distinctly referable to the trade only, and do not enhance the value of the occupation. If so, the principle of the rate is right. Whether sufficient in amount under each head has been allowed, it is not for us to determine. Nine heads are first stated, which are intended to represent the annual expense of keeping in repair the way, stations and other buildings, the rates and taxes, other than the property tax, payable on them, the expenses of directing and carrying on the business, the government duty on passengers, and some incidental charges connected with the trade. Thus far the outgoings allowed for are annual. The appellants here first object, that, besides an allowance for the merely annual repairs, they are entitled to one in respect of the depreciation and wear and tear of the rails and sleepers, the solid timber and iron work of their own principal line, and this although hitherto they have not charged such expense against their income, but defrayed it out of their capital (y). The appellants next claim to deduct the rateable value of the buildings appurtenant to their own line, and also to the branch lines respectively, and rated and rateable elsewhere than in the respondent parish, separately from the railway itself. This also is an allowance which was conceded in the case last referred to; for it would be hardly worth while to distinguish between those rated and rateable only; and we have no means of drawing the distinction in fact. It is to be remembered, that the respondents properly treat the whole line, the whole profits, the whole outgoings, as entire; and then the question is, whether there is any distinction between this and other outgoings necessary to the earning the profits by which the rateable value of the land in the respondent parish is enhanced. It seems to us there is none; and, if so, we agree with the learned counsel for the appellants, that, in principle, it is indifferent whether the station be in the same parish or at a distance. The appellants claim, thirdly, an allowance for 21,000*l.* yearly, interest on the sum expended in forming their company, obtaining their act of Parliament, raising their capital, and other original expenses. For this there is no foundation. These expenses have no connexion with the rateable value of the railway. They might all have been incurred, and no railway ever constructed. As well might the purchaser of an estate with borrowed money, and after an expensive litigation as to the title, claim to deduct his interest and expenses from the poor rate on the land when in his occupation. They neither add to the value of the occupation, nor are any way necessary to the making it up. The appellants then claim to be allowed in respect of 10,000*l.* paid by them as income-tax under stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35. The claim is very shortly and unsatisfactorily stated. In respect of what the payment has been made, we are not informed on either side: the argument respecting it was short. The respondents treated the claim as made in respect of the charge on the property in land payable by the owner; the appellants claimed it in respect of the charge on the occupation payable by the tenant, and to this extent at least it does not strike us that there is any reasonable distinction between this and any other outgoing chargeable on the tenant, which would certainly affect the amount of the rent he would be willing to pay. The fifth claim is to be allowed for such additional parochial assessments as may become payable, it is not said when or where, in consequence of the recent decisions of this court, upon which we will only say that we think the court would have been well justified in refusing to permit it to form part of the case. In the sixth place, the appellants claim to be allowed a deduction in respect of their loss on the two branch lines before referred to. We think this cannot be allowed. If the rate in question had been imposed on land forming any part of the branch lines themselves, it is clear that the circumstance of the receipts not equalling the rent,—in other words, that the line was worked at a loss,—could not have affected the rate; the occupation would have still been beneficial in the sense in which that word is used, for the purpose of assessing the rate; and the rent, which, from whatever motive, the appellants found it worth their while to give, would have regulated the amount. This is not that case in the way in which it is sought to make this expenditure bear upon the rates assessed on any part of the main line; it is more like money laid out in the way of improvement, for which no deduction should be made. If the lessee of a coal-mine were to open roads through adjoining lands rented under a separate demise, in order to facilitate the access of customers to the mine, and so increase its profits, the expense of such roads would certainly not be an outgoing to be allowed for by the overseers. Two more questions are stated: the first as to the mode of ascertaining the tenants' profits, in order to their deduction from the rateable value. The respondents have taken the original value of the plant or moveable stock, and allowed 10*l.* per cent. upon it for these profits as well as the profits of trade. The appellants say that the more correct mode would be to ascertain them by a per-centage on the gross receipts, and claim to have 15*l.* per cent. deducted from these on that account. We are very unwilling to withhold our aid in settling questions for the sessions of such novelty and difficulty as the railway rating must often bring before them; but we ought not to go beyond our province, and so perhaps mislead them. This question involves no principle of law, and we decline to answer it. The last is only raised by the respondents provisionally, in case any of the deductions claimed by the company should be allowed by us. But this has been done:—in ascertaining the tenants' profits, they have calculated the per-centage on the original value of the moveable stock; but the sessions have found, that, at the time of the rate being made, the value had become less by 80,000*l.*; and the respondents contend that the per-centage should properly be made on the smaller sum. This seems to us correct; they are to make the rate from year to year, or for whatever shorter period, conformably to the facts as they exist at the time of making it (z). They may not know, nor have any means of knowing, what the value was originally or in any former year. If, at the end of five or ten years, they are to be driven back to the original value, they may be equally required to ascertain it after an interval of a century. No hardship is inflicted on the appellants by this; they may, and they ought, as prudent owners, to keep up the stock at its original value, and in this very case they have claimed a deduction for doing so. If that claim were properly made, the original and the present value would be the same. Although, however, we thus answer this question in favour of the respondents, they cannot avail themselves of the decision so as to increase their assessment beyond its present amount."

(y) The court proceeded to say, that as this item was not paid out of the revenue, it must be disallowed; the contrary rule has been so clearly established in subse-

*R. v. London and

The case next in order of time, R. v. London and Brighton R. Co. (a), furnishes some useful points. One of the most important is, that the rate must be founded upon the parochial principle, and not upon a mileage calculation. The court observes,—

"The question is as to the principle on which the rate is to be imposed, whether upon what has been called the mileage principle, that is, by treating the whole line of railway (trunk and branches) as one entire subject-matter, and the whole rateable value, however constituted, as entire, and then, for the purpose of rating, dividing it among the several parishes, simply according to the distance which the line passes through each; or upon the ordinary principle of ascertaining the actual rateable value of the land occupied by the company in each parish, by the rules which are applicable to any other land occupied by other bodies or persons for other purposes. The judicial decision of this question has hitherto been avoided by agreement and mutual concession; and we have delayed to pronounce our judgment on it, not so much from the difficulty of determining the rule of law, as from that which arises on its practical application. This presses particularly against what is called the parochial principle. How are you, by any means now in the power of parish authorities, to ascertain the particulars of profit and the outgoings, from a comparison between which the rateable value of the land occupied is to be deduced, both profit and outgoings being affected by circumstances spread through the whole line? On the other hand, against the mileage principle is to be urged, that although, as regards the railway company—an entire body, with an entire interest—it is matter of indifference how you divide a rate assumed to be entire for the whole line; yet as the parishes are bodies with separate interests, there is a manifest injustice in attributing to the same space of land the same proportionable share of the whole rate everywhere; the land in the several parishes notoriously earning the profits, and occasioning the outgoings, in very different proportions; because you cannot do this without depriving some parishes of what they should receive in order to give to others what they should not. If, however, the legal principle be clearly ascertained, it is clear that the difficulties in applying it, or even the practical imperfection which circumstances may occasion in applying it, are not to influence our decision. It is unnecessary to consider what the force of the argument would be, if it could be shown that there was an absolute impossibility of applying it, for nothing like that exists in the present case.

“Now upon the legal principle we have no doubt. The poor's-rate and the principles of its assessment are entirely statutory. The 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, made expressly with the view ‘to establish one uniform mode of rating for the relief of the poor,’ prescribes the rule: the rate must be made on ‘an estimate of the net annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto,’ such value to be arrived at in the manner stated in the first section. The subject is parochial; the inquiry is to be conducted by parochial authorities, with limited powers. If any matters specified in the section are locally situate without the parish—that is, if any such affect the amount of ‘the net annual value,’ or ‘rent reasonably to be expected’—they will of necessity fall within the range of the inquiry; but beyond this the principle does not go.

“This principle, so limited and understood, was not first created by the statute just mentioned; the court had decided so early as 1827, in R. v. Kingswinford (b), that it was to be found in the original statute of Elizabeth; and since that decision it has been uniformly applied to cases where the same party, whether company or individual, occupies in different parishes land forming one entire property, such as a canal, though the profits may be earned in different proportions, and with a different rate of outgoings in each. The value which the land occupied in each parish produces, after the due allowances, is that upon which the occupier is to be rated in each.

“It is unnecessary to cite more authorities in support of a proposition now become settled; the decisions will be found to flow in a remarkably uniform current since the case last cited (c). Whether the circumstances of railways, which were in 1836

a comparatively infant interest, escaped the notice of the legislature, or were advisedly thought not to need any special provision, certain it is that none was made; and, as in its broad principles the occupation of a railway company does not differ from that of a canal company, a court of law has no choice but to apply to it the same general law under which, in its terms, it certainly falls.

“It is to be remembered, that the amount of assessment on a particular occupier is a question between that occupier and the rest of the contributors to the whole rate; and the consideration of that occupier’s relation to the contributors to another rate in another parish is irrelevant to this question; he may be rated in that other parish too high or too low, but this is a matter which does not interest the contributors to the first-named rate, nor have they influence in the settlement of it: and this suggests the answer to a difficulty raised on the argument in this case—if you give Croydon the full benefit of all the earnings made by the railway in the parish, what is to be done in the case of a parish on some branch line, in which the company may work at a loss? The answer is, that that case must be decided, when it arises between the company and that parish, on the same principle precisely as the present, without reference to Croydon.

“This is quite distinct, however, from the consideration of any expenses, wherever arising, which the occupier can show to be necessary for keeping the hereditament which is the subject of the assessment at the value which is made the measure of it. The language of the statute is quite general on this point, and lets in all considerations which are necessary for the just protection of the company in each parish.

“Whatever difficulty there may be in applying this principle, it has been in fact overcome in the present case. Here, under circumstances more than commonly complicated, the sessions have presented us with calculations to meet the parochial as well as the mileage principle; they are exclusively the judges of the fact, and we must assume that they have been able to arrive at a just conclusion. Nor, indeed, does it appear to us, under any circumstances, to be insuperably difficult to impose the rate fairly, if only the interested parties will deal candidly with each other. We cannot assume that they will deal otherwise; but if the company should improperly refuse to the overseers of any parish information which it is in their power to afford, and is proper to be afforded, for the purpose of fixing the assessment on them justly, they must, if properly dealt with, be the sufferers.”

The court then proceed to comment on two sections in the special act which authorized the parish officers to inspect certain accounts kept by the railway company; they observe that the materials for making these accounts up were in the possession of the company, and that it was manifestly their interest to produce them, because out of them would arise the evidence on which the claim for deductions must be supported; and the court add, that if the company would not afford the information necessary for these being duly made, they must expect that any court of justice would presume against them; and that there was the further substantial consideration, that in all litigation, even if successful, the company must, as considerable ratepayers, at all events, contribute very largely to their opponent’s expenses, and they conclude as follows:—

“On these broad principles, therefore, that the statute provides but one rule, and intends to secure uniformity; that we have no power to substitute another; that the decisions hitherto are consistent; and that there is no insuperable difficulty in the practical working of the rule; we are of opinion that the respondents are right in their principle of assessment, and that upon this point our judgment must be for them."

decided Cases.*

The second question submitted to the court in this case was, on the right of the company to a deduction from the rateable value, beyond the ordinary expenses of keeping the railway in repair, in order to countervail the depreciation which takes place in the value of the permanent way, and to maintain it in a state to command the supposed rent, which is the measure of the assessment; and upon this point, the court decided that the company were entitled to make this deduction, even although no such expenses had been actually incurred or charged on the revenue during the current year, and this ruling was affirmed in a subsequent case (d), overruling, as we have already remarked, a previous decision (e).

manent way.

On a third question, which arose as to the effect of an exchange toll, it appeared that the railway company, who were appellants, had agreed with another railway company that the traffic of the latter should pass free over a certain portion of the line of the former, in consideration of the traffic of the former passing free over a certain portion of the line of the latter; and that a certain distance of the appellants' line, within the respondent parish, was affected by this arrangement; the court said that the sessions rightly decided this to be rent in kind, earned by the land, but that these earnings must be subject to exactly the same deductions as if they were received in money.

The value of an exchange toll is to be included in the assessment.

The only remaining point in this case turned upon the narrow question, from what date the overseers ought to make their calculations as to the assessment on the company. The date of the rate was the 20th of November, 1847; and as regards the company, it was based on a half-yearly statement published by them on the 10th of August, but made up only to the 30th of June preceding. In the interval between the 30th of June and the 20th of November, the value of the working plant of the company had been increased from 260,000*l.* to 350,000*l.* The deduction on this outgoing the company claimed to be entitled to; and the court decided that they were entitled to it, and observed that the sessions ought to avail themselves of every light that can be afforded them, down to the latest period antecedent to the actual making of the rate, in order to bring it to the greatest possible accuracy; that overseers, in making a prospective rate, are to make it on the supposed prospective value, ascertained by them, as well as they can, from the latest evidence in their power as to antecedent value.

In the second Great Western case (f), an embarrassing question arose as to the proper mode of rating two miles and a half of a railway twenty-five miles in length, the latter being a branch of the Great Western Railway, and, with the exception of the few remarks which were made by the court in commenting on the the sixth head of claim in the case before referred to (g), this was the first time that the distinction between a branch and a trunk line had been discussed in the Court of Queen's Bench, although at Courts of Quarter Sessions the subject was beginning to attract considerable attention. The question submitted to the court was, whether, for the purpose of the rate, these two miles and a half were to be considered as a part of this branch, treated in most material respects as an independent whole, or whether as part of the whole Great Western Railway, including the branch, without introducing any distinction between branch and trunk; and it appeared that the appellants had proceeded on the former, and the respondents on the latter assumption. The court observe upon this important point,—

“ We think that it will clear our way to adopt, in the first place, for the sake of argument, the assumption of the respondents. Both parties have agreed that it is important to settle four points as cardinal to the decision of the case. First, the total gross annual receipts of the appellants from the whole line, including both trunk and branch; secondly, the total gross annual receipts from the two miles and a half; thirdly, the allowances and deductions which are to be made from the first-mentioned sum, so as to give the net rateable value of the whole line; and fourthly, the net rateable value of the two miles and a half. With respect to the first two of these, they are agreed; and although there be a difference as to the third, it is not so much in principle as in matter of fact; this difference we will settle first. The appellants, in addition to allowances for annual repair of rails and framework, and of moveable stock, claimed to be allowed two specific sums for their ultimate renewal and reproduction. We feel the difficulty which exists in theory with regard to this claim. This has been well stated in a pamphlet published since the argument by Mr. Smirke; but we fully considered the subject in coming to our decision in R. v. London, Brighton and S. C. R. Co. (h), and we adhere to that decision. It is not necessary, indeed, to reconsider it now, for the respondents do not dispute it, contending that they have already made these deductions in the allowance for annual repairs. But as this allowance does not equal in amount the sum of the allowances which the appellants have claimed under the two heads of annual repair and ultimate renewal, and as no objection is or could properly be made before us on the grounds of excess in their calculation, it is clear that substantially this allowance has not been made. Upon this point, therefore, our decision must be for the appellants. They admit, indeed, that they do not annually set aside any sum to form a distinct fund for this renewal and reproduction, but the case finds that they retain out of their annual revenue a reserve fund for all contingencies, including these items among them; and further, that although by annual repairs and partial renewals, both the rails and the moveable stock are maintained in an efficient state, yet this will not supersede, as to either, the necessity of that fundamental renewal and reproduction for which these deductions are claimed. We consider, however, this question concluded by the decision referred to, and the effect of this would be, at all events, to reduce the rateable value in the respondent parish from the first to the second sum agreed to in the case.

"We have now then three points out of four settled; the remaining question is, what is the net rateable value of the two miles and a half? Now, as the net rateable value is that which remains of the gross receipts after all just deductions are made, it might seem at first sight that we might confine our inquiry to the two miles and a half, and that we only encumber the investigation uselessly by introducing into it any consideration of the gross and rateable value of the whole line. But the circumstances of a railway make this absolutely necessary. The inquiry may become, and undoubtedly does become, more complicated and difficult thereby, but it would be wholly incomplete and illusory, even in its result, unless we did so. Of the outgoings of a railway some are general, having no more connection with or influence on one part of the whole line than on any other, incurred for the sake of the whole line, and contributing to the profits everywhere. Of course these must be distributed, and to every mile must be apportioned some share, on whatever principle the apportionment is to be settled. Some, again, seem purely local, a tunnel here, an inclined plane there (we purposely mention striking and definite peculiarities), yet even these are contributing to the earnings everywhere; without these the traffic on either side could have no existence. It would be wrong to set these wholly and exclusively against the receipts earned in the same part of the line (i). We need not dwell on this, because in principle some distribution is on all hands agreed to be necessary, the only difficulty is, in determining what is to be adopted for making it justly,—a difficulty we believe actually insurmountable in fact, if strict mathematical accuracy were insisted on. It is our business, however, only to lay down the general rule, and, in applying it, much must be left not only to the experience and acuteness, but also to the good sense and good faith and candour of the parties concerned, whose interests will be found in the end to be best consulted by this mode of dealing. How, then, are the deductions from the total gross revenue which constitute the difference between it and the total net rateable value to be apportioned, so as to arrive at the actual sum which constitutes the rateable value of the two miles and a half? There is no difficulty in giving the first answer; indeed, principle and authority leave us no option, it must be done by acting on what is called the parochial principle. We are dealing with a parochial question, with one in which the interests of the several parishes on a line of railway are quite distinct. We are to ascertain what expenses are incurred in earning the gross receipts on the two miles and a half. What charges, parochial or otherwise, they are liable to, what is fairly to be deducted for tenants' profits, and so on, the same process in kind is to be gone through with regard to the two miles and a half, as would be with regard to the whole line, if that were all in one parish. We need not now repeat the reasoning which appears in our judgment before referred to. But, as we then said, and have now repeated, this principle does not preclude a consideration of charges and expenses wherever arising locally, which are necessary for keeping the subject of assessment at the value which is made the measure of that assessment. And further, we must add, that wherever it is found that such charges and expenses do in fact apply equally to every mile of a railway, it is a convenient and allowable mode to arrive by a mileage division at the proportionate part to be assigned to the 'miles in any particular parish. This is no departure from the parochial principle, if it be assumed as to particular charges (central superintendence, for instance) that a separate investigation of them as they actually arise in, or are referable to, a particular parish would lead us to the same result as a mileage distribution of the whole. It becomes by the hypothesis but another mode of arriving at it; in many cases it will be the more convenient and just, in some, perhaps, it may be the only practical mode.

“ Having now laid down the principle, it would be right to apply it to what the case finds as to the two modes which have been respectively adopted by the parties,— and first, for convenience sake, to that of the appellants. ‘ They,’ it is said ‘ have taken the gross receipts per mile per annum in the respondent parish exactly as the respondents had done, and they deducted from these the actual expenses of each mile ascertained or estimated.’ If the case had stopped there, we should have supposed that they had strictly acted on the true principle, and we must have adopted their conclusion. But it is evident from what follows that we should have been led into error. For the case goes on thus,—‘ In order to do this, they ascertained the actual expenses incurred on the branch alone, and where those expenses were common to the entire branch, they divided such expenses by the number of miles in the branch, and they considered the result to be the expense of each mile in the branch. A small portion of the general expenses of the entire railway, being those of central superintendence, printing and advertising, were apportioned on the branch in the ratio of the business or traffic upon it, and such portion was subdivided as before, on the mileage principle.’ This explanation shows that the appellants have, in fact, separated the branch from the trunk, except as to what they call a small portion of the general expenses of the entire railway, and then divided the expenses of the branch thus separated on the mileage principle.

“ We do not think them necessarily wrong in this last particular: it may have been no practical departure from the true principle, but only an allowable instance of what we have above stated to be a convenient practice, where the actual expenses were the same on every mile; and as no objection is made to this by the respondents, we must assume that it was so. But the separation of the branch from the trunk is, in its effect, the substantial ground of dispute between the two parties, producing, it may be said, nearly the whole difference between 254*l.* and 30*l.* per mile; and unless they are justified in this, it is impossible that their mode of ascertaining the rateable value can prevail, and we think they are not. We wish it to be distinctly understood that we come to this conclusion solely on the facts of this case. We are far from saying that there may not be cases in which two lines, connected for many purposes and worked by the same company, may yet have been kept so distinct by the statute or agreement which creates the connection, or by the circumstances under which they are worked, that, for the purposes of rating, they would have to be separately considered as two distinct subject-matters. When such cases arise, they must be dealt with according to their respective circumstances; but, in the present case, the fusion of the two lines is complete. The branch, as we have hitherto called it, is absorbed into the trunk, and whether Tilehurst is one or the other, our decision must have been the same; for, by the case it is found, that, by the 48th section of the special act, the appellants were enabled to purchase, and the company incorporated by that act to sell and transfer, the undertaking to the appellants, and, on the completion of the purchase, the appellants were to have and to hold the undertaking, the company to be dissolved, and the buildings and works to become part of the Great Western Railway. Accordingly, the appellants became the purchasers and proprietors, and by a subsequent act (9 & 10 Vict. c. xiv.), it was enacted, that it should thenceforth become part of the Great Western Railway.

"So much for what it is. And how has it been worked? The case finds, that, ever since its completion, and at the time of making the rate, it was and still is worked as part of the entire railway, known by the name of the Great Western Railway; that a certain number of engines and carriages are appropriated to it; and a certain number of officers and servants employed exclusively on it. No separate account of receipts and expenditure in respect of it is kept, but such receipts and expenditure are included in the general half-yearly revenue accounts laid before the proprietors. No separate annual account in abstract, showing the total receipts and expenditure in respect of it, is prepared by the appellants, so as to be furnished to the overseers of the poor of the several parishes through which the said branch passes, in conformity with the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 107 (Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845).

"Thus it appears, both by the statutes and the acts of the appellants, that there is absolutely nothing to distinguish the miles in Tilehurst, from miles in Paddington, Ealing, or any other parish on the original line. For the mere allotment of engines and carriages, or officers and servants, is nothing for the present purpose; it is merely an economical arrangement of the company for the working of this part of their line. We conclude, therefore, that a rateable value, ascertained by considering twenty-five miles as a distinct whole, cannot be correct; and, therefore, we cannot adopt that which is proposed by the appellants."

The court then proceed to consider the mode of rating adopted by the respondents. The case found on this head,—that having ascertained the rateable value of the whole railway, minus the stations, the respondents ascertained the gross actual annual receipts of the appellants in respect of each mile and portion of a mile of railway in their parish, and they assessed the appellants in respect of the two miles and a half in the ratio "which such annual receipts bore to the gross annual receipts of the company in respect of the entire Great Western Railway, trunk and branches, the rateable value of a mile of railway in the respondent parish being calculated in the same proportion to the rateable value of the whole line, exclusive of the stations, as the gross actual annual receipts in respect of such mile bore to the total of such actual annual receipts of the company."

The court disapproved of this mode of rating also, in the following terms:—

"It appears by the statement in the case, that the respondents have taken the deductions at the same rate for every mile of the railway; for they say, as the gross receipts of one mile to the gross receipts of the whole, so the rateable value of one mile to the rateable value of the whole: this is, in effect, to strike off from the gross receipts of a mile an aliquot part of the sum which is struck off from the gross receipts of the whole, and assumes at least that the expenses are at one uniform rate throughout the whole line. If the case were silent on this subject, we might have presumed that the respondents had ascertained this to be the fact, and then there would have been no objection to a mileage division; but the case, reasonably understood, excludes this, for it finds that the actual expenses of the company are not in the proportion of the actual gross receipts, either on the branch or throughout the entire railway; nor are either such gross receipts or such expenses at one uniform rate per mile throughout the entire railway. The counsel for the respondents laboured in vain to explain away the clear meaning of this passage, and, failing in that, they equally laboured in vain to show that all the expenses on a railway were necessarily to be distributed in calculation equally over the whole line.

“ In the result, we cannot adopt either of the modes suggested to us, or confirm the rate at either of the sums stated; the consequence must be, which we very much regret, that the award must be referred back to the learned arbitrators, to whom the parties, and we ourselves, are so much indebted for the labour and ability which they have bestowed on the case. We trust that the principles we have laid down will enable them to agree on a satisfactory rate, and that there may be no more litigation on the subject.”

We now arrive at the Newmarket case (k), which introduced the difficulty already adverted to, as to the rateable value of a branch line, when it is viewed as a feeder of the traffic on the trunk or main line of a railway. The question before the court was shortly as follows. The appellants, the Newmarket R. Co., were authorized by their special act to make a branch railway fifteen miles in length, by which a communication could be established between their branch line of railway and the main line of the Eastern Counties R.; and the E. C. R. Co., being anxious that the branch line should be constructed, entered into an agreement (afterwards ratified by act of Parliament), wherein it was recited that “in consideration of the benefit likely to accrue to the E. C. R. Co. from the construction of the branch and the working of the railway of the appellants in connection with their railway, the E. C. R. Co. were willing to secure to the appellants certain advantages as thereafter expressed and defined;” and it was mutually agreed between the E. C. R. Co. and the appellants (amongst other things) that the appellants should proceed with all convenient despatch to make and complete, at their own expense, the branch railway: and that if, in any year after the branch line was completed and opened for traffic, the net profits made by the appellants should not be sufficient to pay a dividend of 3*l.* per cent. on the whole of their share capital, then the E. C. R. Co. should pay the appellants such a sum as would be sufficient to make up the dividend to 3*l.* per cent. The appellants thereupon constructed the branch, and opened it for traffic; but after the gross earnings of the branch railway in the respondent parish had been ascertained, the amount of deductions proper to be made exceeded those earnings by 27*l.*, which it was admitted was the deficiency or loss of the appellants, as occupiers of so much of the branch railway as lay within the respondent parish.

It appeared, however, that during the current year, in respect whereof the assessment was calculated, the E. C. R. Co. had paid the appellants, in pursuance of the provision contained in the agreement,

3,700*l.*, being the sum required to make up the dividend on the share capital to 3*l.* per cent.; and the question submitted to the court was, whether this 3,700*l.* ought to be taken into account in ascertaining the annual rateable value of the branch railway, and, if it ought, the sessions assessed the value of that portion of it which was in the respondent parish at 116*l.*, otherwise at 21*l.* only.

Upon this state of facts the learned judges differed in their opinions upon the questions submitted to them; Coleridge and Erle, Js., held, that the payment ought not to be taken into account, as it was not an earning of the railway, nor rent, nor money in the nature of rent paid for the use of the railway, but a payment arising from a contract of guarantee, and not derived from the profits of the occupation of the land.

Coleridge, J., observed:—

“The substance of the actual agreement seems to be rather that of a guarantee, which is not to come into operation until the actual fruits of the occupation fall below a certain amount. The dividend on the capital is to be paid from the clear profits of the occupation; when they fail the guarantee comes in, not to increase those profits, but to make the dividend good from another and independent and collateral source. But it is the profits, after deducting the proper outgoings, upon which the rate is to be assessed; and when that is done, and not before, it will be seen whether the guarantee is to operate or not.

“It will be said, of course, that in order to arrive at the rateable value a negotiation for a lease from year to year must be supposed, and that the negotiation must be supposed to proceed on the footing of the lessee being placed in exactly the same position as the present occupiers, and this is unquestionable as to everything which necessarily arises from the occupation. But if thence it is inferred that the supposed lessee would necessarily, as such, have the benefit of this guarantee, it seems to me the very question in the case is begged. In point of fact, a lease of the line might very well be made, supposing the requisite powers, without involving a transfer of the benefit of this agreement to the lease.”

Erle, J., said:—

“The appellants contend that this sum ought not to be taken into consideration in assessing them as occupiers of the railway to the relief of the poor, as it is not an earning of their railway nor rent, nor money in the nature of rent paid for the use of their railway, but a payment arising from a contract of guarantee and not derived from the profits of the occupation of the land; and I am of this opinion—If the railway was let, the amount of rent would depend on the amount of annual profit derived therefrom, and it would be immaterial to the tenant whether this exceeded or fell short of 3*l.* per cent. on the cost price of the line. The cost of a construction does not indicate the profit to be obtained therefrom as a matter of fact, and it was decided in R. v. Mile End Old Town (1), to be no criterion in law of the rateable value of any property to the poor-rate. Furthermore, the sum paid under the guarantee is not rateable, for it is not a parochial profit. Nothing is due under the guarantee until the profits upon both the Newmarket and Chesterford and the Newmarket and Cambridge Lines have been ascertained, when, if the sum total is less than 10,500*l.*, the guarantors must pay. I am not able to discover how the failure of profits upon the parts of the line in distant parishes becomes a net profit upon the part of the line in St. Andrew-the-Less, for which a tenant of that part alone would pay rent. Furthermore, the rate upon the sum paid under the guarantie is not legal, for it falls not on the occupier, but on the guarantor. The rate is nominally on the Newmarket Co., but if it is sustained it must be paid by the Eastern Counties Co., who agree to make good the deficiency in case the net profits, after paying all deductions, will not yield a dividend of 3*l.* per cent. on the capital; in proportion as the deductions are increased, the net profits are less, and the deficiency to be made good is greater. On these grounds I have come to the conclusion that the sum paid under the contract of guarantie in this case was not rateable, and that the rate ought to be reduced accordingly."

On the other hand, Lord Campbell, C. J., whilst entirely concurring in the general principles laid down by these learned judges, arrived, nevertheless, at a different result on the effect of the statement of the facts in the case, as will appear from the following judgment (m); and it seems, therefore, that the difference of opinion did not so much arise on any question of law, as on the construction which ought to be put upon the facts stated in the case. He said,—

"I am of opinion that, in assessing the appellants for the portion of the branch line which is in the limits of the respondent parish, this payment ought to be taken into consideration. I think it is received by the appellants in respect of their occupation of their railway, and is part of the profits of that occupation. It is evidently made in consideration of an advantage which the Eastern Counties R. Co. calculated that they would derive from this branch railway from Chesterford to Cambridge. Whether it be a fixed annual sum, or a sum depending upon a contingency, it is equally in respect of the use made of the railway occupied by the appellants, and, when received, it is part of the profits of that railway. If the Eastern Counties R. Co. paid the appellants a sum of money for being allowed to bring passengers in their own carriages from Chesterford to Cambridge, gratis, that these passengers might be carried on the Eastern Counties Line for hire from Cambridge to London, little doubt can be entertained that such a payment would be part of the profits of the branch of the appellants, and it seems to make no dif-

(m) In R. v. Fletton, 30 L. J. (M. C.) 89, Blackburn, J., said that Lord Campbell dissented on the ground that the payment under the agreement was not in the nature of a collateral guarantee, but a sum received by the appellants in respect of their occupation of the railway, and was part of the profits of that occupation, and ought therefore to be taken into consideration in assessing the value of that occupation. In R. v. Fletton, the appellant, the E. C. R. Co., who were sole owners of a station, in 1848 entered into an arrangement by deed with the North Western R. Co., by which the latter were for 999 years to have the joint use of part of the station, and the exclusive use of another part, on certain terms. In consequence of a subsequent falling off in their traffic, the station became of less value to the North Western R. Co., and the real present value to them was much below the sum actually paid by them to the E. C. R. Co. under the deed. It was held upon a case in which the E. C. R. Co. were to be deemed the persons rateable for the whole occupation of the station, that they were assessable on the full amount which they received from the North Western Co. And it was afterwards held, that the E. C. R. Co. were rateable as the sole occupiers (under the terms of the deed) of so much of the station as was not in the exclusive occupation of the North Western R. Co.; and that, in rating them for such occupation, the sum paid by the North Western Co. must be considered as part of the profits; R. v. Lord Sherard, 33 L. J. (M. C.) 5. In R. v. Midland R. Co., 11 L. T. (N. S.) 303 (Nov. 1864), it was held, that the company could not be rated as occupiers of a line over which they merely had running powers, a mere easement.

ference that the payment is made in respect of passengers brought from Chesterford to Cambridge in carriages of the appellants, the Eastern Counties R. Co. deriving the same benefit from conveying them forward to London. The railway within the respondents' parish is rendered more valuable and productive by something connected with the use of it in another parish, and, according to decided cases, its rateable value within the respondents' parish is thereby enhanced."

"If this branch was let to a tenant, he would be entitled, under the agreement, and the act of Parliament confirming it, to this contingent payment, and no doubt it would enhance the amount of the rent which, as a tenant from year to year, he would be willing to offer. I have only further to observe, in answer to an objection raised, that in my opinion the contention of the respondents does not lead to the double rating of the same profits, for, if the Newmarket Co. were rateable in respect of payment made to them under this agreement, or under an agreement whereby the Eastern Counties Co. undertook to pay them absolutely a certain sum for each passenger brought from Chesterford to Cambridge, the Eastern Counties Co. would be entitled to a deduction in respect of such payment from their gross earnings when the assessable value of their railway comes to be estimated. I wish to adhere to the recent as well as the earlier cases on this subject, with this caution, that when we were determining that in rating railways the parochial, not the mileage, principle was to be adopted, the court did not mean to intimate that assessable value of land in one parish ought not to be increased by a profit derived from it by the occupier, as occupier, in consideration of an advantage derived from it in another parish. Upon the whole, my opinion is in favour of the respondents, but there must be judgment for the appellants.

The next case we have to notice, R. v. South-Eastern R. Co. (n), also relates to the rateable value of a portion of a branch line of a railway running from Reading to Reigate, and passing through Dorking, the respondent parish. It appeared that this branch line was originally constructed by the Reading, Guildford and Reigate Co., but, under certain agreements entered into and confirmed by powers contained in their special act, the latter company, in 1850, leased the portion of the line between Dorking and Reigate to the South-Eastern R. Co. for 1,000 years, at a yearly rent of 33,000*l.* and also on condition of the payment of 8,000*l.* per annum, as interest on a debt incurred in making the line. The respondents had, in a rate made whilst the lease was subsisting, assessed the South-Eastern Co. upon a valuation founded upon the rent of 41,000*l.*, payable under the lease; and the case found, that if the rent was the proper criterion of the rateable value, then the assessment appealed against was correct. It was however found, that the gross earnings of the South-Eastern Co. on the Reading, G. and R. line, less the proper deductions, did not in the year for which the rate was made amount to 41,000*l.* less the statutory deductions under the Parochial Assessment Act, and also that the Reading, G. and R. line brought a great deal of additional traffic to the main line of the South-Eastern Railway, and the latter company thus derived benefit from the Reading, G. and R. line as a feeder to the main line in respect of traffic conveyed upon that line; also that the Reading, G. and R. line, if in the market, might be an object of competition in consequence of the spirit of rivalry existing between the South-Eastern and other companies, the traffic on the main lines of which would be increased by the possession and control of the Reading, G. and R. line.

The case then proceeded to state that, in 1852, an act was obtained, whereby the Reading Co. was dissolved, and their powers transferred to the South-Eastern, and a perpetual annuity of 41,000*l.* was charged upon the whole undertaking of that company, payable to the shareholders in the dissolved company, by way of commutation for the yearly sums payable under the lease of 1850. It also appeared, that another rate was made after the Amalgamation Act, which was also appealed against, and the whole of the facts and circumstances previously stated as to the first-mentioned rate were declared to be applicable as to the last rate, with the exception of the said lease, which was applicable only to the first-mentioned rate. Upon these facts thus briefly stated, but which are to be found detailed at considerable length in the report of the case, three questions were submitted to the court:—First, whether the appellants were properly assessed in the two rates appealed against in certain specified amounts, the assessments being founded on the said rent as to the first, and the said annuity as to the second rate, which assessments were taken as the proper criterion of annual value in each case. Secondly, whether they were liable to be assessed in respect only of the net profit derived from the traffic passing through Dorking, irrespective of any rent paid by the company, and the value of the Reading, G. and R. line as increasing the traffic on the main line. Thirdly, whether the respondents were entitled to take into consideration, in their assessment, the value of the line to the appellants, as an integral part of the South-Eastern Railway, in addition to the net profit as derived from the traffic passing through the parish of Dorking.

The learned judges unanimously agreed, in answer to the first question, that the mode adopted of making the rent in one case, and the annuity in the other, the sole criterion for the assessment, could not be supported; the court being of opinion, that rent paid at the time when a rate is made, is only presumptive evidence of annual value, which may be rebutted; and Erle, J., likened the case to an open coal mine being let at a certain rent, and it being proved that the mine had become exhausted; or to an unopened coal mine let at a rent agreed for, on the speculation that it would prove productive—cases in either of which, if nothing was obtained, the rent would be no evidence of rateable value.

On the second and third questions, the learned judges again differed in opinion; Lord Campbell, C. J., and Coleridge and Crompton, Js., holding, that these questions should be answered—the second in the negative, and the third in the affirmative; Erle, J., dis-sentiente.

Lord Campbell, C. J., observed as to the second question,—

“I am opinion that the liability of the appellants cannot be confined to the net profit derived by the appellants from the traffic passing through the parish of Dorking. They are only to be assessed in that parish in respect of property occupied by them in that parish; but its value in the parish may be enhanced by circumstances existing out of the parish. The appellants say truly, that they are not to be rated in this parish for profits made elsewhere. I wish implicitly to abide by what is called the ‘parochial principle’ of rating. But, upon that principle, we must see of what value the property rated in the parish is to the occupiers; and this is not necessarily determined by the pecuniary receipts for the use of it within the parish. The rent that was paid by the appellants is strong evidence that it was of greater value to them, than the mere net profit from the traffic upon it. We have an express admission that ‘the Reading line brings a great deal of additional traffic to the main line, and that they derive benefit from the Reading line as a feeder to the main line in respect of traffic conveyed upon that line;’ and ‘that the Reading line, if in the market, might be an object of competition between the South-Eastern Company and other railway companies, the traffic on the main lines of which would be increased by the possession and control of the Reading line.’ Therefore, plus the net profits derived from the traffic passing through the parish of Dorking, the appellants do derive a profit from the occupation of the portion of the line in that parish. But it is said, that, in respect of this last profit, they ought only to be assessed in the parishes through which the main line passes. I am of a contrary opinion. This profit, although not received for the traffic upon the line in the parish of Dorking, originates from the occupation by the appellants of land in the parish of Dorking; and if they are assessed in that parish in respect of this profit, in estimating their profits in the parishes through which the main line passes, there ought to be a deduction in respect of what is paid for the line, which is worked as a feeder to the main line. This calculation, though difficult, may be made upon the data which are accessible; and is not more difficult than calculations which must be made in railway rating, where stations and inclined planes in one parish affect the traffic in another parish (o). Adhering to the parochial principle, I inquire of what value the land rated is to the occupier. Of this value the rent which he is willing to pay affords evidence; and from any profit which he indirectly makes from it out of the parish, part of the rent which he pays for it in the parish is to be regarded as a deduction. At the bar it was hardly denied that this would be the result, if the two railways belonged to different companies, and if the company whose railway is fed were to pay a regular fixed annual sum to the company whose railway is the feeder. But I do not see how it should make any difference to the parish of Dorking, that both lines are occupied by one company, and are worked as one concern. The advantage derived from the occupation of the portion of the line in that parish is still the same, although the process by which the amount of that advantage is to be calculated has changed. I adhere to the rule of rating which is laid down in R. v. Newmarket R. Co. (p), which I there attempted to support and illustrate. This,

I think, is in entire harmony with our decision in R. v. Great Western R. Co. (q). In many cases, the supposed advantage derived by a railway company from a portion of a railway in a particular parish, bringing passengers and goods to another portion out of the parish, may be almost inappreciable, and I would earnestly dissuade parishes from ever making any claim under this head, unless where, upon clear evidence, the claim can in point of fact be established.

“As to the third question, I say, that the respondents are not entitled to treat the Reading line as an integral part of the South-Eastern Railway, so as to depart from the parochial principle; but they are entitled to consider in the assessment the value of the Reading line to the appellants beyond the traffic passing through the parish of Dorking.”

“I understand the second and third questions to be intended to raise three points:—First, must the assessment be made only on the net profits earned by the passage of goods and passengers over the land occupied in Dorking, and must any additional value which the occupation in truth may have, as increasing the traffic on the main line, be excluded? Secondly, may any additional value which the occupation of the land in Dorking may have, by reason of the amalgamation of the two lines, be included in the assessment? These two questions, I presume, were framed with a view to the different circumstances under which the two rates were made, in respect of the amalgamation. My answer to these questions will be this: nothing is to be excluded which, I do not say has a tendency to add to (for of this no notice can be taken), but which actually adds to the value of the occupation; for the rate is to be regulated in amount by that value; and it is a principle, which I believe to be established by numerous decisions, that the inquiry is not so much where the profits of the occupation are produced, as whether any alleged profits are so directly referable to it as properly to be considered parts of the profits of the occupation, so that, to adopt the words of Mr. Cripps, in his sensible essay on the subject, ‘the rateable value within the parish may depend on matter without the parish.’ I am not aware that this conflicts with any decision. This principle was first laid down and acted upon in regard to railways in R. v. London and South-Western R. Co. (r), and, as regards them, that case has been a governing authority ever since, from which I should be very sorry to depart. As I understood the two Tilehurst cases (s), nothing was decided in either that at all breaks in upon it; and I certainly intend to adhere to both of those decisions. The principle, indeed, was well established as early as the New River case (t); and I have long considered it as well settled, that we are to apply the same principles to the rating occupiers of railways as of any other property, though the application may be in some respects much more difficult, and the results not always so certainly obtained. I by no means say that either the increase of the traffic on the main line, or the amalgamation of the two lines, is actually to affect the increase of the value of the occupation of the land in Dorking, that is purely a question of fact, with which we have nothing to do; and if, in fact, from either cause such increase takes place, I am not prepared to point out to the parish officers how it is to be ascertained or measured, or how it is to be distinguished from the general profits of the occupation in the parishes on the main line—that again is not within the province of this court. It may well be that such increase may exist, and yet it may be so unimportant or so difficult to ascertain, that, as mathematical accuracy in a rate is never to be expected, it may be more prudent on the whole for the parish officers not to press it into the calculation. But, subject to the effect of these remarks, which I make the more distinctly because I consider it of great importance for this court always to abstain from expressing opinions on mere matters of fact, and to confine itself to laying down principles in questions of rating—my answer to the second question is this: that the assessment may, and indeed should, be made with respect had both to the rent and to any increased value which the occupation in Dorking may have by increasing the traffic on the main line; and I give the same answer in effect to the third question, that the respondents may and ought to take into consideration the value of the occupation as an integral part of the main line in both cases, as I have already stated, if they can ascertain that the value is increased thereby, and in proportion as they find it increased thereby. It will be observed that in both cases I slightly alter the wording of the questions to what I understand to be the meaning they were intended to convey. It has been objected that these principles, when applied to railways, may lead to double rating, because the same proprietor may be assessed in respect of the same profits in two parishes. I do not understand how the principle of rating can differ where there is one and the same occupier in two parishes, from where there are two or more occupiers. If the occupier be the same, the properties are necessarily different in respect of which he is rated; and, for this purpose, he must be considered a distinct person in each parish in which he occupies. In each the overseers will rate him in respect of the property in their parish; and they will estimate its value by what it produces, not merely there, but any where. If the profits of some other land in his occupation in another parish are mixed up with what the land in their parish produces, that ought to be the ground of a deduction from the assessment, and, if not made, the rate may be excessive in amount. It may be impossible to do this with mathematical accuracy; but to do it is the business of the parish officers in the first instance—of the sessions in the second—but never of this court. If in the case of the New River, the parish officers of Islington should assess the company, looking only to total profits received in their parish, and making no separation of or allowance for the share which was properly referable to Amwell, and rateable there, they would overrate, and an appeal would lie; but this would be no ground for diminishing the rate in Amwell, for the excess in Islington ought to have been appealed against; if it has been, we must presume redress has been afforded; if it has not, the company has acquiesced; either way, the parish officers of Amwell cannot be affected by the course pursued by those of Islington. How can that case be distinguished from this? The land and the water have a rateable value in Amwell, considered merely as such, but it is small; they contribute, however, with the land and water elsewhere, to produce great profits, which are reaped, as it were, in Islington, and they are rated for the amount of this contribution. In Islington there are also land and water, and there the great mass of the profits is ostensibly produced; but the overseers there ought to separate from the portion on which they are to rate, the portions which are really earned in Amwell and the other parishes intervening. So, here, the land in Dorking has, per se, a rateable value; but it is said to contribute to produce, with the other land in the other parishes, great profits at the London terminus of their main line; and the occupier in Dorking has the contribution included in the rate of his land in Dorking, which, therefore, ought not to contribute to the rate in any other parish. Could the exact amount of that contribution be ascertained easily, not a doubt could exist that the rating was on a fair principle; but the difficulty of ascertaining the amount surely can make no difference in the principle. To clear up that difficulty, whatever it may amount to, is not the province of this court, but of an accountant. Under these circumstances, therefore, it will be necessary, in my opinion, to send both rates to an arbitrator, to ascertain the proper amount according to the principles I have laid down."

Erle, J., dissentiente.

"In this case, I consider the material facts to be, that one rate was made while the Reading and Reigate Railway was under lease, and the other after it was amalgamated with the South-Eastern Railway; and the material question to be, what is the principle for ascertaining the rateable value of the portion of the line in the parish of Dorking for each rate? the parish contending that the rent of 41,000*l.* at the time of the first rate, and the amount of 41,000*l.* paid since the amalgamation, should be taken as the rateable value of the whole line, to be apportioned among the different parishes; the railway company contending that the net earnings of the portion of the line in the parish should be taken as the rateable value. As the rate since the amalgamation is the most important, being the guide for future rates, I take that first. By the amalgamation the Reading and Reigate line, which was a feeder, has become part of the South-Eastern line, as much as if it formed part of the original construction; so that now either all is line or all is feeder, the amalgamation in this case being in no respect distinguishable from the amalgamation of the Newbury and Hungerford line with the Great Western, R. v. Great Western R. Co. (u). There, the principle for rating a railway by taking the net profit of the whole line as the rateable value of the whole, and by apportioning that rateable value among the parishes in proportion to the net earnings in each parish, was sanctioned and acted upon. This principle was decided to be correct, after long consideration, in R. v. London and Brighton; R. v. South-Eastern; and R. v. Midland R. Co. (x), and I extract the principle as expressed in each of those cases. In R. v. Brighton, the parish of Croydon claimed a right to rate the railway on the principle of parochial earnings, that is, at such a sum as a solvent tenant would pay as annual rent for the stations and portion of the railway within the parish, regard being had to the net revenue earned in the parish; and this principle was affirmed by the court. In R. v. South-Eastern R. Co., the parish of Westbere claimed to rate a company for a portion of the branch to Ramsgate on the mileage principle of dividing the rateable value of the trunk and branches, according to the distance in each parish. It was found that the traffic upon the main or trunk line was greater than upon any of the branches. The company contended for the principle of parochial earnings, viz., that they ought to be rated at such a sum as a tenant might be expected to give as annual rent for that portion of the branch railway situate within the parish of Westbere, regard being had to the portion of profit earned by the portion of the railway within that parish; such rent being ascertained by taking the gross annual receipts from the portion of the railway situate in Westbere, such gross receipts being ascertained by taking a proportion of the fare paid by every passenger who has, during the year, been carried by the company over any portion of the line in Westbere, such proportion bearing the same ratio to the whole sum paid by such passenger, to the whole distance travelled by him, as the distance in Westbere bears to the whole distance travelled by him; and calculating goods on the same principle, and taking from such earnings the deductions allowed by the Parochial Assessment Act:—Held, that this principle of estimating the gross profits was correct, and that deductions were to be made on the parochial principle also. It is said in arguing (y)—Here is a parish, including a portion of a branch line, upon which it is found that the profits fall short of those earned on the main line. The profits on which the rate is to be calculated are those arising within the rating parish. The respondent parish has no right to any of the profits earned on the main line. The judgment of the court supports this argument. In R. v. Midland R. Co.—the parish of Basford was rated on the mileage principle—the company contended that the rate ought to be estimated by reference solely to the net profits earned by the railway within that parish, without any reference to the net profits earned elsewhere, or to the rateable value of any portion of the railway lying in any other parish; the judgment affirms this principle. In R. v. Great Western R. Co. (z), the question was, how the expenses of a railway were to be apportioned; and it was held, that they also, where they are local, are to be apportioned to the parish where they arise, and deducted from the gross earnings in that parish, calculated on the principle laid down in the foregoing cases. Nothing more than the gross earnings in the parish were allowed to the parish, although it was found that it was profitable to the company as proprietors of the entire Great Western Railway, by reason of the increased traffic brought thereby upon the main line, and the increased receipts upon that line between the London and Western termini of it. As each parish is held entitled to rate for the earnings therein (as, for example, Croydon, for all that is earned therein), it is clear that none of the other parishes on the line can rate for the tendency of the line situate in them to make the earnings in Croydon. The earning is profit, and if the whole profit in Croydon is rated there, and the tendency to create that profit is rated elsewhere, the same profit would be in effect rated twice, which is unlawful. Also, it is clear that no tendency to create profit is rateable; no tenant would pay rent for a tendency to profit, unless it resulted in profit; and certainly no tenant of the part of the line in Dorking, would pay rent to increase the profit of some other tenant of some other part of the line, as was mentioned in the case of R. v. Newmarket R. Co. in this term (a). I have disposed of all that was material in the questions submitted: but, as the judges differ on the question whether a railway can be rated for more than it produces in the parish, on account of its tendency to make profit elsewhere, which is expressed by a metaphor from feeding; and on the question whether, in a case for apportionment, one parish, in making its rate, can disregard the positions of other parishes within the apportionment, and as a generality cannot be tested without a specific application, I suggest, if a case is again brought up relating to these points, it should state specifically what is the railway profit arising out of the parish, which is liable to be rated within it.”

In a case in which a branch, which produced no profit per se, but contributed to the profit of the main line, was leased to the main line at a fixed rent; it was held that the main line, as occupier of the branch, was liable to be rated not merely with respect to the earnings of the branch in the parish, but also in respect to its value as bringing profit to the main line (b).

Where a railway company were authorized to levy a particular toll but did not levy it, because if they did, the carriage of goods in respect of which it was leviable would in their opinion be altogether lost, it was held that they were not rateable in respect of those tolls (c).

How to rate a railway.

Where, by an arrangement between the N. London R. Co. and the Blackwall R. Co., passengers were booked through and carried from stations on the former to stations on the latter line, the N. L. R. Co. paying over out of the whole fare charged a fixed and reasonable sum to the B. Co. for every passenger so carried, it was held that, in ascertaining the rateable value of a part of the N. L. R. Co.'s line in a particular parish, the aggregate of the sums so paid over to the B. Co. must be thrown altogether out of consideration (d).

We have now to consider whether the foregoing decisions do not afford some useful practical rules for rating a railway (e).

It having been decided, as we have seen (f), that the parochial principle is applicable to railway rating, it is necessary, as a preliminary step, to ascertain the amount of the gross receipts of the company earned in the parish which is about to levy the rate. The company's books will always furnish this information, and upon application being made by the parish officers, it is usual to give every facility for obtaining it (g). It may appear to be difficult to ascertain the gross receipts in a particular parish, but as the accounts are usually well kept, and invariably show what the traffic is to and from every station on the railway, a simple sum in arithmetic will work out the problem. Let us suppose, by way of illustration, that the rate is to be made for the parish of Fairmile, over which the railway runs for a distance of one mile, there being no station within the parish. Under these circumstances, it is obvious that all the passengers and other traffic which have passed from either of the stations on the railway beyond Fairmile to any other station below it, or vice versa, must have gone over the portion of the line situate in Fairmile. The quantities of this traffic, and the charges made in respect of it, must therefore be ascertained, and it is then only necessary to calculate the proportionate part of every fare and other receipts for traffic, which ought to be apportioned to this one mile, and the result shows the amount of the gross earnings in the parish. Nor is the calculation a difficult one. For instance, if the whole railway were fifty miles in length, one fiftieth of every through passenger's fare would represent the portion which was received in respect of Fairmile, and in like manner every other fare which has been received for other than through passengers will be subject to a proportionate division according to the number of miles travelled. And by adopting a similar calculation for goods traffic, the gross earnings in every parish may be very accurately ascertained.

Railway.*

Having then ascertained the gross earnings in the parish, we must next consider what deductions ought to be made. One class of these deductions may be conveniently arranged under the nine following heads:—

1. For maintenance of the permanent way.
2. Reproduction of the permanent way.
3. Locomotive and carriage account, viz., coals, coke, repairs to engines and carriages, wages to guards, firemen and drivers, oil, tallow and other incidental expenses.
4. Station and carrying charges, including clerks, porters, watchmen, police porters, clothing, gas, tickets, &c.
5. Direction and office expenses, including payments to directors, superintendents of departments, advertising, printing, stationery, travelling expenses and law charges.
6. Rent of stations, and repairs of stations and buildings.
7. Compensation fund to meet costs of accidents under Lord Campbell's Act, and other casual losses of a like nature.
8. Rates and taxes.
9. Government duty payable on passengers.

These items of allowance need not necessarily be divided into precisely the foregoing heads, for if the mode in which the accounts of the company are kept, or any other circumstance, should render it desirable to classify them in a different order or arrangement, any other plan may be followed, so that the desired result be ultimately attained. Let us then examine each item in some detail.

1. Maintenance of permanent way. This deduction should be the average annual cost incurred in keeping the line of railway in Fair-mile in repair, including the ballasting, fencing, draining and other similar expenses. This item of allowance has been generally ascertained without difficulty. In many cases, it has been ascertained at the quarter sessions that certain districts of the line are maintained under yearly contracts, at a certain specified sum per mile; and in such cases the contract price has been usually adopted. It may undoubtedly happen, in some rare cases, that the cost of keeping a particular portion of the railway in repair is greater than the ordinary and average cost of the line, and in strictness this ought to be taken into account. But as all parts of the line are necessarily used for the passage of the locomotive engines and carriages, both before and after they pass through the parish which enforces the rate; and as every portion of the line is mutually dependent upon the other portions for the creation of the entire earnings, it would probably require strong evidence to induce a Court of Quarter Sessions to refuse to adopt a mileage division of the costs of maintaining the way. Any excess of expenditure on a particular part of the line would probably arise rather from the nature of the soil over which it is carried than from any excess of traffic: and on the other hand, if it be clearly shown that the increased expenditure arises from the latter cause, the parish authorities will be entitled to the benefit which arises from the larger amount of the gross receipts; and they may, therefore, in such cases, properly permit an additional allowance to be made for the maintenance of the permanent way.

2. Reproduction of the permanent way. Besides the allowance for the mere actual annual repairs and maintenance of the way, the rule has been laid down in several cases (h), that an additional allowance should be made for the renewal and reproduction of the rails, and frame work, or sleepers, of the railway. This seems to be one of that class of deductions falling under the Parochial Assessment Act, which require a deduction from the gross rental in respect of the probable average annual costs of the repairs, and other expenses necessary to maintain the rated hereditament in a state to command the net rental. The facts stated in the decided cases show that, although, by annual repairs and partial renewals, the rails and sleepers of a railway are maintained in an efficient state, the necessity of a fundamental renewal and reproduction will nevertheless arise after a certain number of years. It is therefore proper to ascertain, on a mileage calculation, what sum set aside annually will accumulate to such a fund as will be sufficient to make the renewal when the period arrives, and it is now also firmly established that the company are entitled to make this deduction, although they do not, year by year, actually set aside any sum of money for this purpose. The contest which arises under this head of deduction, usually relates to the number of years which may be expected to elapse before the renewal of the rails and materials will be required. This will obviously vary according to the amount of the traffic, the nature of the soil, and other similar circumstances, and must be treated as a question of fact to be determined by the evidence of competent witnesses.

3. The locomotive account. The annual cost incurred by the various items of expenditure enumerated in the above account (i), for the whole line of railway, is readily ascertained when the accounts of a company are properly kept, and then by a simple process, which we shall endeavour to explain, the sum to be deducted in respect of the particular parish may be accurately ascertained. Suppose, for instance, that the total annual cost is found to be 5,000*l*. We proceed then to ascertain the number of miles run by all the locomotive engines during the year, over the whole line of railway, and we find the amount to be 100,000 miles. This being ascertained, a simple sum in arithmetic shows that for every mile run, a cost of one shilling has been incurred, and we come to the conclusion that this is the exact average cost of running a locomotive engine over one mile of railway. We again resort to the books of the company, and find that the locomotive engines passed through Fairmile, our supposed particular parish, on the up or down line, five thousand times during the year. We cannot, therefore, err if we conclude that the deduction for locomotive expenses should be five thousand shillings or 250*l*. But it may be objected that this mode of arriving at the cost of the locomotive power would be erroneous, if the parish of Fairmile happened to be situate on a branch railway, because it is well known that the cost of locomotive power, per mile run, is usually much greater on a branch line than on the trunk. This arises from the circumstance that trains pass over a branch railway less frequently than over the main line, and an engine placed on the former is subjected to long detentions at the junction, waiting to take her journey, whilst during the same period of time an engine on the main line performs a long journey without detention of any kind. The daily cost of two engines thus engaged may be nearly the same, but one may have travelled two hundred miles daily, whilst the other has not performed more than two short journeys on the branch line.

All the cases show that deductions must be made upon the parochial principle, just as the gross profits are ascertained, and it seems at first sight to be reasonable that the deductions should be ascertained on the principle of allowing all charges and expenses arising locally, which are necessary for keeping the subject of the assessment at the value which is made the measure of that assessment(k). On the other hand, the parish authorities, on a branch line, may justly say, that it is unfair to adopt the higher rate of expenses, caused by working the branch line, when, (as is generally the case,) the branch is chiefly worked as being a feeder of the traffic to the main line, and here it is without doubt, that the practical difficulty arises, which led to a difference of opinion in the Court of Queen's Bench(l). Upon (k) See R. v. Great Western R. Co. (second case), ante, 594; R. v. South Eastern R. Co., ante, 601, particularly the remarks made by Erle, J.

(l) Much has been said and written upon this subject, but the following remark may dispose of the matter satisfactorily, so far as the facts are concerned. Why does it answer the purpose of a railway company to work a branch line, when the expenses are equal to, or even exceed, the receipts? The answer is obvious. On a main line of railway, trains are running to and from the various termini at a certain cost, and by means of branch railways, additional traffic is brought to join these trains, without material increase of cost being occasioned on the main line: thus the passenger who contributed nothing to the profits whilst he travelled on the branch line, does contribute to the amount of profits as soon as he is brought to and traverses the main line. Mr. Justice Erle's significant suggestion (ante, 606), that "all is line or all is feeder," would seem to lead to the conclusion that a branch may be conveniently assessed upon the principle laid down in the text.

that occasion, the decision of the court is, as we have already seen, that if the value of the branch be enhanced by its contributing traffic to other parts of the railway, such increased value may be properly taken into consideration, but it will probably be found, in most instances, that the difficulty of ascertaining this increased value will be so great as to prevent parochial officers from availing themselves of the strict letter of the law. Lord Campbell, C. J., says:—

“In many cases the supposed advantage derived by a railway company from a portion of a railway in a particular parish, bringing passengers and goods to another portion out of the parish, may be almost inappreciable; and I would earnestly dissuade parishes from ever making any claim under this head, unless where upon clear evidence the claim can, in point of fact, be established.”

There is also much force in the remark made by Erle, J., that after an amalgamation of a branch with a main line of railway, all ought to be considered as line, or all as feeder (m), and parish officers will probably find it difficult to comply with the request made by the same learned judge, who concluded his judgment by saying:—

“As the judges differ on the question, whether a railway can be rated for more than it produces in the parish, on account of its tendency to make profit elsewhere, which is expressed by a metaphor from feeding, and on the question, whether, in a case for apportionment, one parish in making its rate can disregard the positions of other parishes within the apportionment, and as a generality cannot be tested without a specific application, I suggest, if a case is again brought up relating to these points, it should state specifically what is the railway profit arising out of the parish which is liable to be rated within it.”

Under these circumstances, therefore, we may perhaps safely arrive at the conclusion, that if, by reason of the difficulties which surround the attempt, no such increased value is attempted to be attached to the branch line, in making the assessment, it will be only just to allow the parish officers to make the deductions, in respect of the locomotive power, on its average cost per mile, throughout the whole line of railway, notwithstanding the actual cost on the branch may be considerably higher. And, indeed, the same liberality should be exercised towards the parishes over which such a branch line of railway runs, in making all similar calculations, for as many such lines are worked with little or no profit, it would otherwise follow that they yield no rateable value whatever (n).

As a general rule, in making deductions, Lord Campbell's remarks (o) may well be adopted. His lordship said:—

“Of these outgoings of a railway, some are general, having no more connexion with or influence on one part of the whole line than on any other, incurred for the sake of the whole line, and contributing to the profits everywhere. Of course these must be distributed, and to every mile must be apportioned some share, on whatever principle the apportionment is to be settled. Some, again, seem purely local; a tunnel here, an inclined plane there (we purposely mention striking and definite peculiarities), yet even these are contributing to the earnings everywhere; without these the traffic, on either side, could have no existence. It would be wrong to set these wholly and exclusively against the receipts earned in the same part of the line(o). We need not dwell on this, because in principle some distribution is on all hands agreed to be necessary; the only difficulty is, in determining what is to be adopted for making it justly, a difficulty, we believe, actually insurmountable in fact, if strict mathematical accuracy were insisted on. It is our business, however, only to lay down the general rule, and, in applying it, much must be left not only to the experience and acuteness, but also to the good sense and good faith and candour of the parties concerned, whose interests will be found in the end to be best consulted by this mode of dealing."

4. Station and carrying charges. Under this head of deduction, the items of expenditure are embraced, which we have already adverted to (p). It needs no argument to show that all the stations on a line of railway contribute, in some degree, to the realizing of the earnings acquired in every parish on the line. These stations must be maintained with a sufficient staff of officers and servants for the general purposes of the undertaking, and the charges for passengers and other traffic are made in respect of the accommodation furnished at the stations, as well as for the transit on the line. How then is this deduction to be apportioned to a particular parish? This will clearly appear if we imagine that there are only two stations on the railway, one at each terminus, and that Fairmile, having no station, is situate in the centre of the line. All the traffic which passes through that parish would, under such circumstances, be taken up and put down at one of these termini, and it is evident that the cost of maintaining the two stations would be properly ascertained by an equal mileage division, calculated in respect of the whole line. Thus, if the annual cost of each station be 1,000*l.*, and the whole line be fifty miles in length, the deduction on a mileage calculation would be at the rate of 40*l.* per mile. So far, this appears to be a simple mode of apportioning the cost of the stations; but it will be necessary to extend our inquiries to a more complicated state of circumstances, for there are usually many stations placed on the line of a railway, some of them first class stations, maintained at a great expense, and the others of a subordinate description. In such cases, we have still to carry out the principle already indicated. In the simple case, the stations contribute to the accommodation of the transit over Fairmile, equally with every other part of the line, and an equal mileage division is made. In the more complex state of circumstances, they may and usually do contribute, unequally, to the convenience of the transit over various parts of the line, and therefore it becomes necessary to ascertain the extent of the accommodation afforded by each station to Fairmile. Nor is this a difficult task. It is only necessary to ascertain the expenses of maintaining each station; then to find out the gross receipts in respect of the traffic using each station; and as the previous inquiry made, as we have already shown, to ascertain the gross receipts in Fairmile, will have furnished information showing what stations have been used for the purposes of the Fairmile traffic, it is presumed that a skilled accountant can arrive at a very near approximation of the proper deductions under this head. It may, perhaps, assist our inquiries, if we notice at this place that the expense attending a stationary engine, or any other similarly extraordinary expenditure at any point of the line of railway should be apportioned upon precisely the same principle as the station expenses. The total cost of maintaining the engine being first ascertained, it should be divided over those parts of the line whose traffic it maintains, in proportions depending upon the quantity of traffic in every parish which has been so maintained.

office expenses.

5. Direction(q) and office expenses. These are usually apportioned upon a mileage calculation over the whole railway, and although in some extreme cases this may be open to objection, especially with regard to law charges, it will probably be found to be a sufficient approximation to accuracy to make the deduction upon that principle.

Rent of stations.

6. In all the cases the rent of the stations(r) have been allowed as a separate item of deduction, with the approval of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Compensation
fund.

7. Compensation fund. This is a deduction the company are clearly entitled to make, and it is usually made in the same proportions as the direction and office expenses.

Rates and taxes.

8 and 9. Rates, taxes, and government duty. These are also deductions upon which no questions are likely to arise. Income tax which a tenant would have to pay on his net profits after payment of rent is not an allowable deduction(s).

Allowances in
and profits.

When all the above-mentioned deductions have been made from the gross receipts, the sum which remains does not represent the true rateable value of the railway, because no allowance has yet been made in respect of the capital which a tenant must invest for the purpose of working the line of railway. Locomotive engines of an expensive description, numerous carriages, waggons and trucks, and much valuable machinery, must be purchased for the purposes of the undertaking, and some amount of ready money must also be kept as a floating balance for carrying on the trade of a carrier. There is not much practical difficulty in ascertaining the quantity of rolling and other stock which is required for the proper working of a railway. It depends of course upon the amount of the traffic, the number of the branches, and other local circumstances peculiar to the line, and it is not usually left as a matter of speculation, because the existing stock affords a good test of the quantity actually required. Again we meet with the difficulty suggested by drawing the distinction between branch and main line, and, for the reasons already mentioned, we presume that a comparatively smaller quantity of rolling stock should be assigned to a branch line, than that which is assumed to be necessary for working the main line of the railway, where the chief traffic is attracted. Having then ascertained the quantity of stock which is necessary, the proper course seems to be to ascertain what amount of capital would be required to purchase or provide it, at the time the rate is made. The original cost price of it would probably be too high a calculation, because it would probably be depreciated in value since it was placed on the line. The profits must, therefore, be calculated on the actual value of the stock, for it cannot reasonably be supposed that if the company were about to give up the undertaking, they would not be willing to part with their stock at its actual value, or that if they refused to do so, the incoming tenant could not procure other stock of an equally efficient character at its real value to supply the deficiency (t). The necessary capital required for the purposes we have enumerated being thus ascertained, and a fair proportion assigned to Fairmile, the ordinary course is to allow five per cent. for ordinary interest of the money, and then to allow a certain undefinable percentage, to represent tenants' profits. This allowance has ranged in different cases from ten to thirty per cent. on the required capital. A further allowance for the annual depreciation of stock, after ordinary repairs have been allowed for, is also usually made. This varies from five to twelve-and-a-half per cent. according to the circumstances of each particular case, or the peculiar opinion entertained by justices. It is, however, perfectly obvious that the three last-mentioned items of allowance resolve themselves under one general head, and it would probably be the most just and equitable course to treat the interest of capital, the profits of trade, (acquired in great part by the use of personal chattels,) and the allowance in respect of the depreciation of stock, under one general allowance, which ought to be ample and sufficient, so that the residue should fairly represent the value of the land alone (u) on which the railway has been constructed.

In R. v. North Staffordshire R. Co. (x), which may conveniently be noticed here, four questions arose :—First, whether the percentage amount to be allowed for interest on capital and tenants' profits is to be calculated upon the capital invested in the rolling stock taken at its cost price, or upon the depreciated value of the rolling stock as estimated at the time when the rates were made, or at any other time. Secondly, whether the company were entitled to a deduction for interest on capital and tenants' profits upon a sum of 52,950*l.*, an additional amount of capital invested in turntables, cranes, weighing-machines, stationary steam-engines, lathes, electric telegraph and apparatus, office and station furniture, and gasworks, or upon any and what portion of such items; and if so, whether upon the sums originally invested in the said plant, or upon the depreciated value of the same estimated at the time the rates were made, or at any other time; or how otherwise a deduction, if any, should be made in respect of the last-mentioned plant, or any part thereof. Thirdly, whether the company were entitled to a further reduction for interest and tenants' profits, or either, upon the said floating capital: and Fourthly, whether the deduction to be allowed in respect of the stations, buildings and sidings along the line of railway ought to be ascertained, by taking the rateable value at which the same were assessed to the relief of the poor, or by allowing 6*l.* per cent. upon the original cost of construction, as contended for by the company, or how otherwise a reduction should be made in respect of the said stations, buildings and sidings. In delivering the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, Cockburn, C. J., said they were of opinion upon the first point that the allowance must be made with reference to the actual and not to the original value; the point having already been decided in R. v. Great Western R. Co. (y), in which decision they concurred. And his lordship proceeded :—

“ In addition to the reasons given in the judgment of the court in that case, it may be observed, that, as under the Parochial Assessment Act tenants' profits upon stock must necessarily be calculated with a view to their deduction from the gross earnings, in order to ascertain what a tenant would give for the entire property, nothing could be more inconvenient than that a different principle should prevail in calculating the profits in the two cases.

“ Now the question, when considered under the Parochial Assessment Act, must be looked at, not with reference to the railway company, who may have expended on the purchase of the stock a much larger sum than such stock would now realise, but with reference to an incoming tenant, and the amount of capital which such tenant would have to lay out in the purchase of the rolling stock necessary to carry on the undertaking. It is obvious that what it would be worth the while of a person or company about to embark in a commercial undertaking to give as rent for the premises in which it was to be carried on, would depend on the amount to be deducted, in addition to repairs and other necessary outgoings, from the gross earnings in respect of the profits due to the capital to be employed in the concern. But it is plain, that a tenant would calculate such profits on the amount of capital actually required to be expended on the stock, not on what may have been the value of such stock at some other time, or in other hands. Now it must be assumed that the stock, in its existing condition, is sufficiently effective to produce the earnings which, after the necessary deductions, constitute the improved value of the railway; and it cannot reasonably be supposed that if the company were about to give up the undertaking, they would not be willing to part with their stock at its actual value, or that, if they refused to do so, the incoming tenant could not procure other stock of an equally efficient character at its real value to supply the deficiency. In estimating, therefore, under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, what a tenant would pay, the profits must be calculated on the actual value of the stock. It cannot be supposed that, in exempting profits under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 80, a different principle of calculation was intended to be acted on.

“The second question is, whether the company are entitled to a deduction in respect of various articles therein specified, being things necessary for carrying on the business of the company. The articles to which such a question may have reference may be divided into three classes: first, things moveable, such as office and station furniture; secondly, things so attached to the freehold as to become part of it; and thirdly, things which, though capable of being removed, are yet so far attached as that it is intended they shall remain permanently connected with the railway or the premises used with it, and remain permanent appendages to it as essential to its working. It is clear that, in respect of the first class of articles, a deduction should be allowed. It is equally clear that no deduction should be allowed as to the second. As to the third, the question is finally settled by the decision of this court in R. v. Southampton Dock Co. (z).

“The third question, whether the company are entitled to a deduction in respect to the floating capital therein referred to, is one of considerable nicety, and which, as it appears to us, must depend on whether on the whole capital employed a greater delay occurs in realizing the returns than is ordinarily incidental to the employment of capital. No doubt, as the rent which the imaginary tenant contemplated by the Parochial Assessment Act could afford to pay, would be the difference between the gross earnings (after the necessary deductions) and the amount of profits due (reference being had to the nature of the undertaking) on the capital employed, whatever tends to diminish such profits must go, pro tanto, to diminish the rent. Any delay in realizing the profits beyond such as is generally incidental to the ordinary employment of capital, may therefore (as it must be presumed that it would be taken into account by the tenant) be fairly taken into account on determining the rateable value. On the other hand, it must be observed, that, as a very large proportion of the earnings of a railway company is of a ready money character, it may well be that when the whole of the capital and of the earnings are taken into account, the profits on the whole capital may be realized in a shorter time in this species of undertaking than on the average of commercial enterprises. If this should be the case, the delay in realizing the profits which might arise as to a part of the capital might well be considered to be compensated by the more than ordinary quickness of the return on the rest. We have no means before us of determining the question with reference to this view of the case. We can do no more than point out the principle by which we think it must be determined.

"As regards the fourth question, we are of opinion that the deduction to be allowed in respect of stations, buildings and sidings must be calculated on the actual value at which they ought to be assessed, and not on the original cost of construction."

We thus conclude our remarks on a subject which has been often discussed before many able judges by the most distinguished advocates, and as these eminent persons have candidly acknowledged that this branch of the law is surrounded by difficulties in application, all but insurmountable, the writer would shelter himself from severe criticism if he has failed to impart clear and perspicuous directions for rating a railway (a).

(a) The following remarks on some other points connected with this subject may be found useful. First, as to appeals:—An appeal against a poor-rate, on the ground of inequality of rating, may be made either to the special sessions appointed by the justices under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 6, or under 43 Eliz. c. 2, to the next general quarter sessions, which means the next practicable sessions after the rate was made. At some courts of quarter sessions, it is the practice to allow appeals against rates to be entered and respited, although there had been ample time to give notice of appeal, so as to try at the first sessions. But as the court of quarter sessions may, if they think fit, refuse, under such circumstances, to allow an appeal to be entered and respited, it is always desirable to give the notice for the next practicable sessions, unless some agreement to respite the appeal be made with the respondents. If, however, the sessions allow an appeal to be entered and respited, they cannot afterwards refuse to hear it. R. v. Justices of Wilts, 8 B. & C. 380. The stat. 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 4, requires that reasonable notice of appeal shall be given to the parish officers; and, by the rules of the various quarter sessions, the length of this notice was formerly specified. But now, by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 1, fourteen clear days' notice at least must be given, and the grounds of appeal must be specified in every notice. The statute 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, s. 4, requires that the notice of appeal "shall be in writing, and shall be signed by the person or persons giving the same, or his, her or their attorney, on his, her or their behalf; and such notice of appeal shall be delivered to, or left at the place of abode of, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, township, vill or place, or any two of them; and the particular causes or grounds of appeal shall be stated and specified in such notice." (See R. v. Eyre, 26 Law J. (M. C.) 14, 121, 125.) And, by sect. 6, "If any person or persons shall appeal against any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, because any other person or persons is or are rated or assessed in such rate or assessment, or is or are omitted to be rated or assessed therein, or because any other person or persons is or are rated or assessed in any such rate or assessment at any greater or less sum or sums of money than the sum or sums at which he, she or they ought to be rated or assessed therein, or for any other cause that may require any alteration to be made in such rate or assessment, with respect to any other person or persons, then and in every such case the person or persons so appealing for the causes aforesaid, or any of them, shall give such notice of appeal in writing, as hereinbefore mentioned, not only to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor, or any two or more of them, but also to the other person or persons so interested or concerned in the event of such appeal as aforesaid." Care must be taken to prepare the grounds of appeal in a proper form, as no objections can be taken which are not therein specified. See

R. v. Brooke, 9 B. & C. 915; and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 1; and see sections 5 and 6 as to the costs of appeals. If a rate is appealed against, the parish officers may support it, without calling the vestry together. R. v. Street, 22 L. J. (M. C.) 29.

Some difficulties have been suggested with respect to the proper mode by which railway companies, who are usually principal ratepayers in a parish, can exercise their right to vote at meetings of the vestry. When the vestry is held under 58 Geo. 3, c. 69, the 59 Geo. 3, c. 85, s. 2, provides as follows:—"That in all cases where any corporation or body politic or corporate or company shall be charged to the rate for the relief of the poor of such parish, either in the name of such corporation or of any officer of the said corporation, it shall and may be lawful for the clerk, secretary, steward or other agent duly authorized for that purpose, of such corporation or body politic or corporate or company, to be present at any vestry to be holden in the said parish under the said recited act; and such clerk, secretary, steward or agent shall be entitled to give such and so many vote or votes at such vestry, in respect of the amount of the rent, profit or value of such lands, tenements or hereditaments, as by the said act any inhabitant assessed to such rate present at such vestry might or ought to have and be entitled to in respect of such amount, anything in the said recited act to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding." In cases which do not fall within this act (and the observation is applicable to cases where a corporation is required to enter into a recognizance for any purpose), the proper course seems to be to appoint an attorney, under the seal of the corporation, to do the desired act, whether it be to vote or to enter into a recognizance.

A rate may be levied by distress; but, in the absence of this and every other remedy, a mandamus would perhaps lie. See R. v. Margate Pier Co., 3 B. & Ald. 220. If the company become possessed of any lands liable to be assessed to the poor-rate, they are from time to time, until the works shall be completed and assessed to the poor-rate, liable to make good the deficiency in the several assessments, by reason of such lands having been taken or used for the purposes of the works; and such deficiency must be computed according to the rental at which such lands, with any buildings thereon, were valued or rated at the time of the passing of the special act; and such deficiencies are made payable on demand. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 133, post, App. 70.

And the company are required every year to cause an annual account, in abstract, to be prepared, showing the total receipts and expenditure of all funds levied by virtue of that or the special act, for the year ending 31st December, or some other convenient day in each year, under certain specified heads, and duly audited and certified: and the company must, if required, transmit a copy of the account to the overseers of the poor of the several parishes through which the railway shall pass; and for neglecting to prepare or transmit such account, if required so to do, the company are liable to pay a penalty. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 107, post, App. 93.

With respect to the liability of a company to pay local rates, it appeared in a decided case that they had built bridges over their line of railway, upon land conveyed to them in fee, but with a reservation of the use of the bridges. There were walls on each side of the bridges. The commissioners for paving, &c., paved the road over the bridges, and it was decided that the company were liable to be rated for the walls on the sides of the bridges under 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, s. 3, the walls of the bridge being "dead walls" within the meaning of the act. Also, by Jervis, C. J., that they were liable under the words "void spaces," and by Maule, J., that they were liable for them as "public buildings." Arnell v. L. and N. W. R. Co., 20 L. J. (C. P.) 80; 12 C. B. 697. See Same v. Regent's Canal Co., 14 C. B. 564. In some acts of parliament, lands authorized to be taken for public works are altogether exempted from contributing to the poor-rate, or are required to be assessed in a certain prescribed mode. See R. v. Bristol Dock Co., 1 Q. B. 535; R. v. Monmouthshire Canal Co., 3 A. & E. 619; Todd v. London and South-Western R. Co., 7 M. & Gr. 366. Any objection to the rate on the ground of exemption must be taken by appeal to the quarter sessions, and not by action. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Jones, 30 L. J. (M. C.) 185, 239. An important decision may be here mentioned on the construction of the Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. Sect. 88 of that statute, after making all property liable to be rated, for the purposes of the act, on its net annual value, contains the following exemption: "Provided that the occupier of any land used as arable, meadow or pasture ground only, or as woodlands, market gardens, or nursery grounds, and the occupier of any land covered with water, or used only as a canal or towing-paths for the same, or as a railway constructed under the powers of any act of Parliament for public conveyance, shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such net annual value thereof." Held, that this exemption applies only to the line of the railway, including the sidings, turntables, and necessary platform or landing place for the use of the traffic; but that it does not extend to stations, warehouses, buildings, &c., ancillary to and necessary for the working of the railway. South Wales R. Co. v. Swansea Local Board of Health, 4 E. & B. 189; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 30. By the Local Government Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, "the occupier of any land used only as a railway constructed under the powers of any act of Parliament for public conveyance," is to be assessed to the district rate at one-fourth only of the net annual value as ascertained by the last poor-rate. It was held by the Court of Queen's Bench that a railway which had been constructed by a dock company in connexion with their docks, and joining a public railway and canal, under the powers of their private act, by which the company were bound to complete the railway for the use of the public on the payment of tolls, was a railway within the provision, although it was not constructed to carry passengers. R. v. Newport Dock Co., 31 L.J. (M.C.) 266.

PART V.

ON THE DISSOLUTION OF RAILWAY COMPANIES, AND THE RIGHTS OF ALLOTTEES TO RECOVER THEIR DEPOSITS.

A RAILWAY company, acting under a special act of Parliament, is constituted a body corporate, and can only be dissolved by force of an act of Parliament. Companies provisionally formed were frequently dissolved during the period which elapsed whilst our great railway system was in the course of its formation, and separate treatises were published (a) on a subject which interested a numerous class of unfortunate speculators. It would, however, be foreign to the purposes of this Work to treat on these bygone matters; and it is sufficient to show briefly the state of the statute law with respect to the dissolution of railway companies in general. Provisions for this object were first inserted in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111 (b), and it would seem that a railway company might have been dissolved under that statute (c). It is well known, however, that the many deficiencies in that act rendered it practically inoperative, and this led to the introduction of Lord Dalhousie's Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, which provided for the dissolution of unincorporated companies whose subscription had been entered into previously to the 3rd of July, 1846. The two next Winding-up Acts, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108 (which together with Lord Dalhousie's Act were repealed by the Companies Act, 1862 (d)), although they embraced unincorporated railway companies (c), did not originally apply to railway companies incorporated by act of Parliament, such companies being expressly excepted from their operation (f); but, by a subsequent statute, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 83, intituled "The Abandonment of Rail-

(a) See Farrer on the Winding-up Acts. The leading cases are Hutton v. Upfill, 2 H. L. C. 674; Bright v. Hutton, 3 H. L. C. 341; 16 Jur. 695. The latter case decided the long agitated question as to the extent of the liabilities of provisional committee-men to pay debts due from a company provisionally formed. In that case the defendant was a member of the provisional committee of a projected railway company, which had been provisionally registered, and the affairs of which were put under the authority of a managing committee. He accepted shares and paid a deposit on them, but did no further act. The scheme was abandoned, and it was decided in the House of Lords (after the judges had been consulted), that on these facts he was not liable to a creditor, for business done under the orders of the managing committee, towards completing the projected undertaking, and converting the association into a regular company, and that consequently he was not liable as a contributory under the Winding-up Acts.

ways Act, 1850" (g), the Board of Trade may, as we have already seen (h), in certain cases, authorize the abandonment of a railway authorized to be made by act of Parliament passed before 14th August, 1850, by issuing a warrant, and then, by sect. 31, it is enacted, "that where any such warrant as aforesaid shall have been granted for the abandonment of the whole railway of any railway company, in England or Ireland, any shareholder of such company may present a petition under the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, or any act for the amendment of such act (i), for the winding-up of the affairs of such company under the said act, and for that purpose the railway company, whose railway is so authorized to be abandoned, shall, if the court shall think fit so to order, (notwithstanding anything to the contrary thereof in the said Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Act, or in the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849,) be deemed to be a company to which the said act applies."

We may conclude this chapter by making a few remarks on the rights of subscribers or allottees of shares (k) to recover back their deposits on the failure of a proposed railway scheme. It is obvious that after a railway company is formed, it is absolutely necessary to incur large expenses, for the purpose of applying to Parliament for a special act, inasmuch as engineers must be employed to make surveys of the proposed line of railway, and plans, sections and books of reference must be prepared, and notices given, in compliance with the Standing Orders in Parliament. In addition to these and similar expenses, an unsuccessful application for a special act entails the heavy charges which always accompany a struggle before a committee in Parliament.

When, then, are the allottees of shares, who have paid deposits for (g) Post, App. 119. This act was not repealed by the Companies Act, 1862, which (sect. 199) expressly excepts railway companies incorporated by act of Parliament from the operation of that part of the act (Part VIII.) which applies to the winding-up of unregistered companies.

(h) Ante, 450.

(i) The Companies Act, 1862, which repealed the Winding-up Act, 1848, can hardly be considered an act for the amendment of the Winding-up Act, 1848; and it may therefore be well doubted whether a shareholder of a railway company could present a petition under Part IV. of the Companies Act, 1862, for the winding-up of the company. The Winding-up Act, 1848, would seem to be kept alive for the purposes of "The Abandonment of Railways Act, 1850."

(k) We have already considered in what cases allottees are liable to pay preliminary expenses, ante, 92. Where a plaintiff brought an action for money had and received to recover back his deposits, and the defendants pleaded that the affairs of the company had been wound up under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, it was held that the plea was bad, as it amounted to non-assumpsit. Owen v. Challis, 5 D. & L. 802; S. C., 6 C. B. 115; S. P., Coupland v. Challis, 2 Exch. 682. Nor is such a plea a bar to an action brought against the company by a creditor. *McKenzie v. scrip or shares in a proposed railway undertaking, entitled to recover back the amount of their deposits? One main point to be attended to is, to ascertain the contents of the prospectuses and letters of allotment which were issued by the promoters of the undertaking; because these documents form the basis of the contract which is entered into when the deposits are paid. Thus, if the prospectus announces a capital of 500,000*l.*, divided into 10,000 shares of 50*l.* each, and a party applies for a certain number of shares, and they are allotted to him, and he pays the deposit,—in this case, if the managers of the company, who receive the deposit, proceed with the undertaking and incur expenses, without having allotted the whole number of 10,000 shares, the allottee would be entitled to recover back the whole amount of his deposit. Thus, in Nockells v. Crosby (l), where a scheme for establishing a tontine was put forth, stating that the money subscribed was to be laid out at interest, and, after some subscriptions had been paid to the director, in whom the management of the concern was vested, but before any part of the money was laid out at interest, the directors resolved to abandon the project, it was decided that each subscriber might, in an action for money had and received, recover the whole of the money advanced by him, without the deduction of any part towards the payment of the expenses incurred. And in Pitchford v. Davis (m), Fox v. Clifton (n), Bourne v. Freeth (o), and other cases, the principle above laid down was fully recognized, and the same doctrine has been applied to railway companies in the well known case of Walstab v. Spottiswoode (p).

In like manner, where it was proved that the plaintiff had been induced to sign the subscribers' agreement, under circumstances which amounted to fraud in the defendants, the plaintiff recovered his deposit (q).

Care should therefore be taken, that the prospectus does not state with more confidence than the facts justify, that the plans are ready to be deposited, and that all notices have been duly given, so as to entitle the parties to apply for and obtain an act in the next session of Parliament; because, if it should turn out that these statements are not correct in fact, it may become a question whether an allottee, or holder of scrip, may not recover his money back from the managing directors, on the ground that there has been a total failure of consideration.

But in the absence of fraud, and if the allottee has executed the subscribers' agreement(r), or if he has placed himself in the same situation as if he had actually signed the document(s), then he is placed in very different circumstances, as to his right to recover back the deposits.

Jones v. Harrison.

Thus, where it appeared that the shares had been allotted to the allottee upon the terms of the following letter of allotment:—"The directors assume the right to carry out their intentions by the adoption of all such measures as they may deem requisite for obtaining the necessary parliamentary powers to form a company for the construction of the entire railway, or any part of it, with such branches, extensions or alterations as they may find expedient, and to apply the amount paid for deposits in discharge of any liabilities incurred by them under the general powers vested in them for the prosecution of the undertaking. A subscribers' agreement and parliamentary contract, in such form, and with such provisions as the committee may think necessary, will be prepared and lie at the company's offices for signature, from &c., both inclusive:" it was ruled, that the directors had authority to lay out the deposits in such necessary expenses as had been incurred by them in the prosecution of the scheme; and, it appearing that all the deposits had been so expended, the plaintiff was nonsuited(t). And where the letter of allotment merely stated that a call for only 10s. per share would be made, "the directors considering it unnecessary to lock up the large sum of money over and above what any expenses could require," it was decided that the case fell within the principle established in Jones v. Harrison, and that the money was deposited for a specific object, i. e. the payment of the expenses, which meant the preliminary expenses(u).

Willey v. Parratt.

Mowatt v. Lord Londesborough.

But where, by a circular letter, the promoters of a company stated that, in the event of the bill not being obtained, the whole of the deposits would be returned without deduction, it was ruled that an allottee of shares was entitled to recover back the deposits on the failure of this condition, although he had subsequently executed the subscribers' contract, which authorized the directors to reimburse themselves for preliminary expenses out of the deposits(x).

7 WILL. IV. & 1 VICT. CAP. 83.

An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties, and other Persons, to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament (a).

WHEREAS the Houses of Parliament are in the habit of requiring that, previous to the introduction of any bill into Parliament for making certain bridges, turnpike-roads, cuts, canals, reservoirs, aqueducts, waterworks, navigations, tunnels, archways, railways, piers, ports, harbours, ferries, docks and other works, to be made under the authority of Parliament, certain maps or plans and sections, and books and writings, or extracts or copies of or from certain maps, plans or sections, books and writings, shall be deposited in the office of the clerk of the peace for every county, riding or division in England or Ireland, or in the office of the sheriff clerk of every county in Scotland, in which such work is proposed to be made, and also with the parish clerk in every parish in England, the schoolmaster of every parish of Scotland, or in royal burghs with the town clerk, and the post-master of the post-town in or nearest to every parish in Ireland, in which such work is intended to be made, and with other persons; and whereas it is expedient that such maps, plans, sections, books, writings, and copies or extracts of and from the same, should be received by the said clerks of the peace, sheriff clerks, parish clerks, schoolmasters, town clerks, postmasters, and other persons, and should remain in their custody for the purposes hereinafter mentioned; be it therefore enacted, That whenever either of the houses of Parliament shall by its standing orders already made or hereafter to be made, require that any such maps, plans, sections, books or writings, or extracts or copies of the same, or any of them, shall be deposited as aforesaid, such maps, plans, sections, books, writings, copies and extracts shall be received by and shall remain with the clerks of the peace, sheriff clerks, parish clerks, schoolmasters, town clerks, postmasters and other persons with whom the same shall be directed by such standing orders to be deposited, and they are hereby respectively directed to receive and to retain the custody of all such documents and writings so directed to be deposited with them respectively, in the manner and for the purposes and under the rules and regulations concerning the same respectively, directed by such standing orders, and shall make such memorials and endorsements on and give such acknowledgments and receipts in respect of the same respectively as shall be thereby directed.

II. That all persons interested shall have liberty to, and the said clerks of the peace, sheriff clerks, parish clerks, schoolmasters, town clerks, and postmasters, and every of them are, and is hereby required, at all reasonable hours of the day, to permit all persons interested to inspect during a reasonable time, and make extracts from or copies of the said maps, plans, sections, books, writings, extracts and copies of or from the same, so deposited with them respectively, on payment by each person to the clerk of the peace, sheriff clerk, clerk of the parish, schoolmaster, town clerk, or postmaster, having the custody of any such map, plan, section, book, writing, extract or copy, one shilling for every such inspection, and the further sum of one shilling for every hour during which such inspection shall continue after the first hour, and after the rate of sixpence for every one hundred words copied therefrom.

(a) As to these standing orders, see ante, text, p. 13. This act applies to documents required to be deposited by general rules under "The Railway Companies Powers Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. 120, s. 34, post, and "The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864," 27 & 28 Vict. c. 121, s. 63, post.

APPENDIX.

Clerks of the peace, &c. to receive the documents herein mentioned, and retain them for the purposes directed by the standing orders of the houses of Parliament.

Clerks of the peace, &c. to permit such documents to be inspected or copied by persons interested.

APPENDIX.

Clerks of the peace, &c. for every omission to comply with the provisions of this act, liable to the penalty of 5*l.*, to be recovered in a summary way.

III. That in case any clerk of the peace, sheriff clerk, parish clerk, schoolmaster, town clerk, postmaster or other person, shall in any matter or thing refuse or neglect to comply with any of the provisions hereinbefore contained, every clerk of the peace, sheriff clerk, parish clerk, schoolmaster, town clerk, postmaster or other person, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding the sum of five pounds; and every such penalty shall, upon proof of the offence before any justice of the peace for the county within which such offence shall be committed, or by the confession of the party offending, or by the oath of any credible witness, be levied and recovered, together with the costs of the proceedings for the recovery thereof, by distress and sale of the goods and effects of the party offending, by warrant under the hand of such justice, which warrant such justice is hereby empowered to grant, and shall be paid to the person or persons making such complaint; and it shall be lawful for any such justice of the peace to whom any complaint shall be made of any offence committed against this act, to summon the party complained of before him, and on such summons to hear and determine the matter of such complaint in a summary way, and on proof of the offence to convict the offender, and to adjudge him to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, and to proceed to recover the same, although no information in writing or in print shall have been exhibited or taken by or before such justice; and all such proceedings by summons without information shall be as good, valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if an information in writing had been exhibited.

An Act to provide for the Conveyance of the Mails by Railways (c). [14th August, 1838.]

Postmaster-General may require railway companies to convey the mails.

Whereas it is expedient that provision should be made by law for the conveyance of the mails by railways at a reasonable rate of charge to the public (d); be it enacted, That in all cases of railways already made or in progress or to be hereafter made within the United Kingdom, by which passengers or goods shall be conveyed in or upon carriages drawn or impelled by the power of steam, or by any locomotive or stationary engines, or animal or other power whatever, it shall be lawful for the Postmaster-General, by notice in writing under his hand delivered to the company of proprietors of any such railway, to require that the mails or post letter-bags shall from and after the day to be named in any such notice (being not less than twenty-eight days from the delivery thereof) be conveyed and forwarded by such company on their railway, either by the ordinary trains of carriages, or by special trains, as need may be, at such hours or times in the day or night as the Postmaster-General shall direct, together with (e) the guards appointed and employed by the Postmaster-General in charge thereof, and any other officers of the Post Office; and thereupon the said company shall, from and after the day to be named in such notice, at their own costs, provide sufficient carriages and engines on such railways for the conveyance of such mails and post letter-bags to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General, and receive, take up, carry and convey, by such ordinary or special trains of carriages or otherwise, as need may be, all such mails or post letter-bags as shall for that purpose be tendered to them, or any of their officers, servants or agents, by any officer of the Post Office, and also receive, take up, carry and convey, in and upon the carriages carrying such mails or post letter-bags, the guards in charge thereof, and any other officers of the Post Office, and shall receive, take up, deliver and leave such mails or post letter-bags, guards and officers at such places in the line of such railway, on such days, at such hours or times in the day or night, and subject to all such reasonable regulations and restrictions as to speed of travelling, places, times and duration of stoppages, and times of arrival, as the Postmaster-General shall in that behalf from time to time order or direct: provided always, that the rate of speed to be required shall in no case exceed the maximum rate of speed prescribed by the directors of such railway or railways for the conveyance of passengers by their first class trains: but that no alteration in the rate of speed of any train by which the mails shall be conveyed shall be made until six calendar months' previous notice shall be given to the Postmaster-General of any such intended alteration.

II. That it shall be lawful for the Postmaster-General (if he shall see fit) to require that the whole of the inside of any carriage used on any railway for the conveyance of mails or post letter-bags shall be exclusively appropriated for the purpose of carrying the mails.

III. That the company of proprietors of any such railway shall, on being required so to do by the Postmaster-General, provide and furnish (in addition to the carriages aforesaid) a separate carriage or separate carriages, fitted up as the Postmaster-General, or such person as he shall nominate in that behalf, shall direct, for the purpose of sorting letters therein, and shall forward the same carriage or carriages by their railway, at such hours or times, and subject to all such reasonable regulations as aforesaid, as the Postmaster-General shall in that behalf order or direct; and such company of proprietors shall receive, take up, carry and convey in any such last-mentioned carriage or carriages, all such post letter-bags and officers of the Post Office as the Postmaster-General shall reasonably require, and shall deliver and leave any post letter-bags and officers of the Post Office at such places on the line of the railway as the Postmaster-General shall in that behalf from time to time reasonably order and direct.

IV. That, in case the Postmaster-General shall at any time be desirous of sending by any such railway any of her Majesty's mail coaches or mail carts, with the mails or post letter-bags and guards thereof, and carriages for sorting letters, with any officers of the Post Office therein, instead of sending the said mails or post letter-bags, guards and officers of the Post Office by carriages to be provided by such railway company as aforesaid, then and in any such case such railway company shall, at the request of the Postmaster-General, signified by such notice as aforesaid, cause such mail coaches or mail carts, with the mails or post letter-bags and guards thereof, and carriages for sorting letters, with any officers of the Post Office therein, to be conveyed by the usual or proper trucks or frames on their said railway, subject to such regulations and restrictions of the Postmaster-General as hereinbefore mentioned.

V. That for the greater security of the mails or post letter-bags so to be carried or conveyed by railways, the company of proprietors of such respective railways along which such mails or post letter-bags, mail coaches or carts and carriages for sorting letters shall be so required by the Postmaster-General to be conveyed, and their respective officers, servants and agents, shall obey, observe and perform all such reasonable regulations respecting the conveyance, delivering and leaving of such mails and post letter-bags, guards and officers of the Post Office, mail coaches or carts and carriages, on any such railways, or on the line thereof, as the Postmaster-General, or such officer of the Post Office as he shall nominate in that behalf, shall in his discretion from time to time give or make: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for any officer or servant of the Post Office to interfere with or give orders to the engineer or other person having the charge of any engine upon any railway along which mails or post letter-bags shall be conveyed; but if any cause of complaint shall arise, the same shall be stated to the conductor or other officer of the railway company having the charge of the train, or to the chief officer at any station upon the railway; and in case of any default or neglect on the part of any officers or servants of the railway company to comply with any of the regulations of the Postmaster-General or other officer of the Post Office so to be nominated as aforesaid, the railway company shall be wholly responsible for the same.

VI. That every company of proprietors of any railway along which such mails or post letter-bags, mail coaches, carts or carriages shall be so required by the Postmaster-General to be conveyed, shall be entitled to such reasonable remuneration to be paid by the Postmaster-General to any such company of proprietors for the conveyance of such mails, post letter-bags, mail guards, and other officers of the Post Office, mail coaches, carts and carriages in manner required by such Postmaster-General, or by such officer of the Post Office as he shall in that behalf nominate as aforesaid, as shall (either prior to or after the commencement of such service) be fixed and agreed on between the Postmaster-General and such company of proprietors, or in case of difference of opinion between them, then as shall be determined by arbitration as hereinafter provided, but so that the services which may be required by the Postmaster-General, or by such officer of the Post Office as he in that behalf shall nominate as aforesaid, to be performed by any such company of proprietors, be not suspended, postponed or deferred by reason of such remuneration not having been then fixed or agreed on between the said Postmaster-General and such company of proprietors, or by reason of the award on any reference to arbitration to determine the remuneration not having been then made.

VII. That, notwithstanding any agreement entered into between the Postmaster-General and any such company, or any award to be made on any such reference as aforesaid, fixing the amount of remuneration to be paid to such company for any services to be rendered by them as aforesaid, it shall be lawful and competent to and for the Postmaster-General, by notice in writing, to require, from and after the day to be named in any such notice, not being less than twenty-eight days from the delivery thereof, any addition to be made to the services in respect of which such agreement shall be entered into or award made; and in any such case, and also in case of a discontinuance of any part of such services as hereinafter provided, a fresh agreement shall be entered into between the Postmaster-General and such company, regulating the future amount of remuneration to be paid by the Postmaster-General to such company for such increased or diminished services, as the case may be; or if the parties cannot agree on such amount, the same shall be referred to arbitration in like manner as hereinbefore is mentioned and hereinafter provided as to any original agreement; and such arbitrators shall have power to award any compensation they may consider reasonable to be paid to any railway company for any loss that may have been occasioned to them by the discontinuance or alteration of the services previously agreed to be performed by them by any train or carriage specially required by the Postmaster-General to be forwarded for the conveyance of the mails, but so that nevertheless such increased or diminished services shall not be suspended, postponed, or deferred by reason of the amount of such increased or diminished remuneration not having been then fixed or agreed on between the Postmaster-General and such company of proprietors, or by reason of the award on any reference to arbitration to determine the amount of such increased or diminished remuneration not having been then made.

APPENDIX.

If required, carriage to be applied exclusively to such conveyance.

APPENDIX.

Postmaster-General may terminate services of railway companies on notice; or may terminate services of railway companies without notice, subject to certain conditions.

Royal arms to be painted on engines or carriages provided for the service of the Post Office.

Bye-laws of railway companies not to be repugnant to provisions of act.

Penalty for refusing or neglecting to convey mails.

VIII. That it shall be lawful for the Postmaster-General, and he is hereby authorized, at any time during the continuance of the services of any company of proprietors as aforesaid, to give to such company, by writing under his hand, six calendar months' previous notice that such services, or any part thereof, shall cease and determine; and thereupon, at the expiration of such six calendar months' notice, the said services, or such part thereof as aforesaid, and the remuneration for the same, shall cease and determine.

IX. That it shall be lawful for the Postmaster-General at any time during the continuance of the services of any company of proprietors as aforesaid, by notice in writing under his hand, absolutely to determine and put an end to the same or any part thereof, without giving any previous notice, or on giving any notice less than six calendar months in respect thereof, and thereupon the said services shall cease and determine accordingly: provided, nevertheless, that in case the Postmaster-General shall, without giving six calendar months' notice as aforesaid, at any time determine the services to be required by the Postmaster-General of any company of proprietors, or any part of such services, without any cause whatever, or for any cause other than the default by such company of proprietors in the performance of any of the services to be required of them by the Postmaster-General, or the breach by such company of proprietors of any of their engagements with the Postmaster-General, then and in any such case the Postmaster-General shall make to such company a full and fair compensation for all loss thereby occasioned, the amount whereof, in case the parties differ about the same, shall be ascertained by arbitration as hereinafter mentioned.

X. That on all carriages to be provided for the service of the Post Office on any such railway there shall on the outside be painted the royal arms, in lieu of the name of the owner and of the number of the carriage, and of all other requisites, if any, prescribed by law in respect of carriages passing on any such railway; but the want of such royal arms on any carriage belonging to or used by the Post Office shall not form an objection to such carriage running on any railway, anything to the contrary notwithstanding.

XI. That it shall not be competent or lawful to or for the company of proprietors of any railway to make any bye-laws, orders, rules, or regulations which shall militate against or be contrary or repugnant to any of the enactments herein contained; and that if any company of proprietors shall make or shall have made any such bye-laws, orders, rules, or regulations, either prior or subsequently to the Postmaster-General signifying to the said company his intention that the mails or post letter-bags, mail coaches, carts, or carriages shall be conveyed by such railway, all such bye-laws, orders, rules and regulations, so far as they shall militate against or be contrary or repugnant to any of the enactments herein contained, shall be and be deemed absolutely void and of no effect, in like manner as if such bye-laws, orders, rules or regulations had never been made or passed, anything to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding.

XII. That if the company of proprietors of any railway, or any of their respective officers, servants, or agents, shall refuse or neglect to carry or convey any mails or post letter-bags, when tendered to them for such purpose by the Postmaster-General or any officer of the Post Office, or shall refuse to carry on their railway any mail coaches, carts, or carriages as hereinbefore provided, when so required by the Postmaster-General, or shall refuse or neglect to receive, take up, deliver and leave any such mails or post letter-bags, mail guards or other officers of the Post Office, mail coaches, carts, or carriages, at such places, at such times, on such days, and subject to such regulations and restrictions as to speed of travelling, places, times, and duration of stoppages, as the Postmaster-General shall from time to time reasonably direct or appoint, as hereinbefore provided, or shall not obey, observe and perform all such regulations respecting the conveyance of the mails and post letter-bags, mail coaches, carts, and carriages, on any such railways as the Postmaster-General, or such officer of the Post Office as he shall nominate in that behalf, shall make for the purposes aforesaid, then and in any such case the company of proprietors who, or whose officer, servant, or agent, shall so offend in the premises, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding twenty pounds; provided nevertheless, that the payment of or liability to such penalty shall not in any manner lessen or affect the liability of any such company under any bond which may have been given by them under the provisions hereinafter contained.

XIII. That it shall be lawful for the Postmaster-General, if he shall so think fit, to require the company of proprietors of any railway already made, or in progress, or to be hereafter made within the United Kingdom, to give security by bond to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, conditioned to be void if such company shall from time to time carry or convey, or cause to be carried or conveyed, all such mails or post letter-bags, mail guards and other officers of the Post Office, mail coaches, carts, and carriages, in manner hereinbefore mentioned, when thereunto required by the Postmaster-General or any officer of the Post Office duly authorized for that purpose, and shall receive, take up, deliver, and leave all such mails or post letter-bags, guards, and officers, mail coaches, carts, and carriages, at such places, at such times, on such days, and subject to such regulations and restrictions as to speed of travelling, places, times, and duration of stoppages, as hereinbefore mentioned, and shall obey, observe, and perform all such regulations respecting the same as the Postmaster-General shall reasonably make, and shall well and truly do and perform, and cause to be done and performed, all such other acts, matters and things as by this act are required or directed to be done or performed by or on the part or behalf of such company, their officers, servants, and agents; and every such bond shall be taken in such sum and in such form as the Postmaster-General shall think proper; and every such security shall be renewed from time to time, whenever and so often as such bond shall be forfeited, and also whenever and so often as the Postmaster-General shall in his discretion require the same to be renewed; and if any company of proprietors of any such railway as aforesaid shall, when so required as aforesaid, refuse or neglect, for the space of one calendar month next after the delivery of any notice for such purpose to them given by or from the Postmaster-General, to execute to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, such bond to the effect and in manner aforesaid, or shall at any time refuse or neglect to renew such bond, whenever and so often as the same shall, by or in pursuance of this act, be required to be renewed, such company of proprietors shall forfeit one hundred pounds for every day during the period for which there shall be any refusal, neglect, or default to give or renew such security as aforesaid, after the expiration of the said one calendar month.

APPENDIX.

Postmaster-General may require railway companies to give security by bond.

XIV. Provided always, That in all cases in which any railway, or part of a railway, may previous to the passing of this act have been demised or let by the company of proprietors thereof, the body corporate or company, or other persons to whom the same shall have been so demised or let, their successors, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall during the continuance of such lease be liable to all the provisions of this act, for or in respect of such railway or part of a railway, in lieu of such company of proprietors; but so that such lessees (not being a body corporate or company), their executors, administrators, or assigns, shall not be required in respect of any such railway, or part of a railway, to give security under the foregoing enactment to any amount in any one bond exceeding the sum of one thousand pounds, and shall not in any one year be liable in damages to be recovered upon any bonds which they may have given to any amount exceeding the sum of one thousand pounds and costs of suit.

Lessees of railway, not being a body corporate or company, not to be required to give security by bond above 1,000*l*.

XV. That all notices under the provisions of this act, by or on behalf of the Postmaster-General to any company of proprietors of any railway as aforesaid, shall be considered as duly served on any company of proprietors in case the same shall be given or delivered to any one or more of the directors of such company, or to the secretary or clerk of such company, or be left at any station belonging to such company.

Service of notices.

XVI. That in all cases in which the Postmaster-General and any company of proprietors of any railway shall not be able to agree on the amount of remuneration or compensation to be paid by the Postmaster-General to such company of proprietors for any services performed, or to be performed by them as hereinbefore mentioned, the same shall be referred to the award of two persons, one to be named by the Postmaster-General and the other by such company; and if such two persons cannot agree on the amount of such remuneration or compensation, then to the umpirage of some third person, to be appointed by such two first-named persons previously to their entering upon the inquiry; and the said award or umpirage, as the case may be, shall be binding and conclusive on the said parties, and their respective successors and assigns.

For settling differences between Postmaster-General and railway companies in certain cases.

XVII. That after any contract entered into or award made under the authority of this act shall have continued in operation for a period of three years, it shall be competent for any railway company who may consider themselves aggrieved by the terms of remuneration fixed by such contract or award, by notice under their common seal, to require that it shall be referred to arbitrators to determine whether any and what alteration ought to be made therein; and thereupon such arbitrators or umpire, to be appointed as hereinbefore mentioned, shall proceed to inquire into the circumstances and make their award therein, as in the case of an original agreement: provided always, that the services performed by such railway company for the Post Office shall in no wise be interrupted or impeded thereby.

Railroad companies, after contracts have existed for a certain period, may refer them to arbitrators to decide as to their continuance.

APPENDIX.

Nomination of arbitrators to be within a limited time after application for references made.

Construction of terms.

1 Vict. c. 36.

XVIII. That in all references to be made under the authority of this act, the Post-master-General, or the railway company, as the case may be, shall nominate his or their arbitrator within fourteen days after notice from the other party, or in default, it shall be lawful for the arbitrator appointed by the party giving notice to name the other arbitrator; and such arbitrators shall proceed forthwith in the reference, and make their award therein within twenty-eight days after their appointment, or otherwise the matter shall be left to be determined by the umpire; and if such umpire shall refuse or neglect to proceed and make his award for the space of twenty-eight days after the matter shall have been referred to him, then a new umpire shall be appointed by the two first-named arbitrators, who shall in like manner proceed and make his award within twenty-eight days, or in default be superseded, and so toties quoties.

XIX. That whenever the term "company of proprietors," or "railway company," or "company," is used in this act, the same shall extend to and be construed to include the proprietors for the time being of any railway, whether a body corporate or individuals, and also (during the continuance of any demise or lease as aforesaid) any person, whether a body corporate, or company, or individuals, to whom any railway or part of a railway may, previous to the passing of this act, have been demised or let, and their successors, executors, administrators, and assigns, unless the subject or context be otherwise repugnant to such construction; and that the provisions of this act shall be construed according to the respective interpretations of the terms and expressions contained in an act passed in the first year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for consolidating the Laws relative to Offences against the Post Office of the United Kingdom, and for regulating the Judicial Administration of the Post Office Laws, and for explaining certain Terms and Expressions employed in those Laws," so far as those interpretations are not repugnant to the subject or inconsistent with the context of such provisions; and that this present act shall be deemed and construed to be a Post Office act, within the intent and meaning of the said last-mentioned act; and the pecuniary penalties hereby imposed shall be recovered and recoverable in the manner and form therein particularly mentioned and expressed with reference to the pecuniary penalties imposed by the Post Office acts: provided nevertheless, that any justice of the peace having jurisdiction for any county through which any railway shall pass, in respect of which any penalty or forfeiture under this act shall have been incurred, shall and may hear and determine any offence against this act which may subject any company to a pecuniary penalty not exceeding twenty pounds; and a summons issued under the Post Office acts by any such justice against any railway company for the recovery of any such penalty shall be deemed to be sufficiently served in case either the summons or a copy thereof be delivered to any officer, servant, or agent of such company, or be left at any station belonging to such company.

Proprietors of

Whereas by an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Highways in that part of Great Britain called England," it is amongst other things by the said act enacted, that, whenever a railroad shall cross any highway for carts or carriages, the proprietors of the said railroad shall make and maintain good and sufficient gates at each of the said crossings, and shall employ good and proper persons to attend to the opening and shutting of such gates, so that the persons, carts, or carriages passing along such road shall not be exposed to any danger or damage by the passing of any carriages or engines along the said railroad; and any complaint for any neglect in respect of the said gates shall be made within one month after the said neglect to one justice, who may summon the party so complained against to appear before the justices at their next special sessions for the highways, who shall hear and decide upon the said complaint, and the proprietor so offending shall forfeit any sum not exceeding five pounds: And whereas it is also by the said act further enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall apply to any turnpike roads, except where expressly mentioned, or to any roads, bridges, carriageways, cartways, horseways, bridleways, footways, causeways, churchyards, or pavements, which now are or may hereafter be paved, repaired, or cleansed, broken up, or diverted, under or by virtue of the provisions of any local or personal act or acts of Parliament: And whereas it is deemed expedient to amend the said provisions in the said act, and to extend the same to turnpike roads in England: Be it therefore enacted, That, wherever a railroad crosses or shall hereafter cross any turnpike road or any highway or statute labour road for carts or carriages in Great Britain, the proprietors or directors of the company of proprietors of the said railroad shall make and maintain good and sufficient gates across each end of such turnpike or other road as aforesaid at each of the said crossings, and shall employ good and proper persons to open and shut such gates, so that the persons, carts, or carriages, passing along such turnpike or highway shall not be exposed to any danger or damage by the passing of any carriages or engines along the said railroad (g); and any complaint for any neglect in respect of the said gates shall be made within one calendar month after the said neglect to any justice of the peace, or, if in Scotland, to the sheriff of the county, who may summon the party so complained against to appear before them or him at the next petty session or court to be holden for the district or division within which such gates are situate, who shall hear and decide upon the said complaint; and the proprietor or director so offending shall for each and every day of such neglect forfeit any sum not exceeding five pounds, together with such costs as to the justices or sheriff depute aforesaid before whom the conviction shall take place shall seem fit.

II. That the penalties by this act imposed, and the costs to be allowed and ordered by the authority of this act, shall, in England, be recovered and applied in the same manner as any penalties and costs under the said act, and, in Scotland, shall be recovered and applied to the maintenance of the statute labour roads within the district where the offence is committed.

An Act for regulating Railways (h). [10th August, 1840.]

Whereas it is expedient for the safety of the public to provide for the due supervision of railways; be it therefore enacted, That after two months from the passing of this act, no railway, or portion of any railway, shall be opened for the public conveyance of passengers or goods until one calendar month after notice in writing of the intention of opening the same shall have been given, by the company to whom such railway shall belong, to the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council appointed for trade and foreign plantations (i).

II. And be it enacted, That if any railway, or portion of any railway, shall be opened without due notice as aforesaid, the company to whom such railway shall belong shall forfeit to her Majesty the sum of twenty pounds for every day during which the same shall continue open, until the expiration of one calendar month after the company shall have given the like notice as is hereinbefore required before the opening of the railway; and any such penalty may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record (j).

III. And be it enacted, That the Lords of the said committee may order and direct every railway company to make up and deliver to them returns, according to a form to be provided by the Lords of the said committee, of the aggregate traffic in passengers, according to the several classes, and of the aggregate traffic in cattle and goods respectively, on the said railway, as well as of all accidents which shall have occurred thereon attended with personal injury, and also a table of all tolls, rates, and charges from time to time levied on each class of passengers, and on cattle and goods, conveyed on the said railway; and, if the returns herein specified shall not be delivered within thirty days after the same shall have been required, every such company shall forfeit to her Majesty the sum of twenty pounds for every day during which the said company shall wilfully neglect to deliver the same; and every such penalty may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record: provided always, that such returns shall be required, in like manner and at the same time, from all the said companies, unless the Lords of the said committee shall specially exempt any of the said companies, and shall enter the grounds of such exemption in the minutes of their proceedings.

IV. And be it enacted, That every officer of any company who shall wilfully make any false return to the Lords of the said committee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

V. That it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee, if and when they shall think fit, to authorize any proper person or persons to inspect any railway (k); and it shall be lawful for every person so authorized, at all reasonable times, upon producing his authority, if required, to enter upon and examine the said railway, and the stations, works, and buildings, and the engines and carriages belonging thereto (l): Provided always, that no person shall be eligible to the appointment as inspector as aforesaid who shall, within one year of his appointment, have been a director, or have held any office of trust or profit under any railway company (m).

VI. That every person wilfully obstructing any person, duly authorized as aforesaid, in the execution of his duty, shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place where the offence shall have been committed, forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding ten pounds; and, on default of payment of any penalty so adjudged, immediately, or within such time as the said justice of the peace shall appoint, the same justice, or any other justice having jurisdiction in the place where the offender shall be or reside, may commit the offender to prison for any period not exceeding three calendar months; such commitment to be determined on payment of the amount of the penalty; and every such penalty shall be returned to the next ensuing court of quarter sessions in the usual manner.

VII. And whereas many railway companies are or may hereafter be empowered by act of Parliament to make bye-laws, orders, rules, or regulations, and to impose penalties for the enforcement thereof, upon persons other than the servants of the said companies, and it is expedient that such powers should be under proper control (n), be it enacted, That true copies of all such bye-laws, orders, rules and regulations, made under any such powers by every such company before the passing of this act, certified in such manner as the Lords of the said committee shall from time to time direct, shall, within two calendar months after the passing of this act, be laid before the Lords of the said committee (o); and that every such bye-law, order, rule or regulation, not so laid before the Lords of the said committee within the aforesaid period, shall, from and after that period, cease to have any force or effect, saving in so far as any penalty may have been then already incurred under the same.

VIII. That no such bye-law, order, rule or regulation made under any such power, and which shall not be in force at the time of the passing of this act, and no order, rule or regulation annulling any such existing bye-law, rule, order or regulation which shall be made after the passing of this act, shall have any force or effect until two calendar months after a true copy of such bye-law, order, rule or regulation, certified as aforesaid, shall have been laid before the Lords of the said committee, unless the Lords of the said committee shall, before such period, signify their approbation thereof.

IX. That it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee, at any time either before or after any bye-law, order, rule or regulation (p) shall have been laid before them as aforesaid shall have come into operation, to notify to the company who shall have made the same, their disallowance thereof, and, in case the same shall be in force at the time of such disallowance, the time at which the same shall cease to be in force; and no bye-law, order, rule or regulation which shall be so disallowed shall have any force or effect whatsoever, or if it shall be in force at the time of such disallowance, it shall cease to have any force or effect at the time limited in the notice of such disallowance, saving in so far as any penalty may have been then already incurred under the same.

X. That so much of every clause, provision and enactment in any act of Parliament heretofore passed as may require the approval or concurrence of any justice of the peace, court of quarter sessions, or other person or persons, other than members of the said companies, to give validity to any bye-laws, orders, rules or regulations made by any such company, shall be repealed.

XI (q). That, whenever it shall appear to the Lords of the said committee that any of the provisions of the several acts of Parliament regulating any of the said companies, or the provisions of this act, have not been complied with on the part of any of the said companies, or any of their officers, and that it would be for the public advantage that the due performance of the same should be enforced, the Lords of the said committee shall certify the same to her Majesty's Attorney-General for England or Ireland, or to the Lord Advocate for Scotland, as the case may require; and thereupon the said Attorney-General or Lord Advocate shall, by information, or by action, bill, plaint, suit at law or in equity, or other legal proceeding, as the case may require, proceed to recover such penalties and forfeitures, or otherwise to enforce the due performance of the said provisions, by such means as any person aggrieved by such non-compliance, or otherwise authorized to sue for such penalties, might employ under the provisions of the said acts: Provided always, that no such certificate as aforesaid shall be given by the Lords of the said committee until twenty-one days after they shall have given notice of their intention to give the same to the company against or in relation to whom they shall intend to give the same (r).

XII. That no legal proceedings shall be commenced under the authority of the Lords of the said committee against any railway company for any offence against this act, or any of the several acts of Parliament relating to railways, except upon such certificate of the Lords of the said committee as aforesaid, and within one year after such offence shall have been committed (s).

XIII. That it shall be lawful for any officer, or agent of any railway company, or for any special constable duly appointed, and all such persons as they may call to their assistance, to seize and detain any engine-driver, guard, porter or other servant in the employ of such company who shall be found drunk while employed upon the railway, or commit any offence against any of the bye-laws, rules or regulations of such company, or shall wilfully, maliciously or negligently do or omit to do any act whereby the life or limb of any person passing along or being upon the railway belonging to such company, or the works thereof respectively, shall be or might be injured or endangered, or whereby the passage of any of the engines, carriages or trains shall be or might be obstructed or impeded, and to convey such engine-driver, guard, porter or other servant so offending, or any person counselling, aiding or assisting in such offence, with all convenient despatch, before some justice of the peace for the place within which such offence shall be committed, without any other warrant or authority than this act (t), and every such person so offending, and every person counselling, aiding or assisting therein as aforesaid, shall, when convicted before such justice as aforesaid (who is hereby authorized and required, upon complaint to him made, upon oath, without information in writing, to take cognizance thereof, and to act summarily in the premises), in the discretion of such justice, be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two calendar months, or, in the like discretion of such justice, shall for every such offence forfeit to her Majesty any sum not exceeding ten pounds, and in default of payment thereof shall be imprisoned, with or without hard labour as aforesaid, for such period not exceeding two calendar months, as such justice shall appoint: such commitment to be determined on payment of the amount of the penalty; and every such penalty shall be returned to the next ensuing court of quarter sessions in the usual manner (u).

XIV. Provided always, That (if upon the hearing of any such complaint he shall think fit) it shall be lawful for such justice, instead of deciding upon the matter of complaint summarily, to commit the person or persons charged with such offence for trial for the same at the quarter sessions for the county or place wherein such offence shall have been committed, and to order that any such person so committed shall be imprisoned and detained in any of her Majesty's gaols or houses of correction in the said county or place in the meantime, or to take bail for his appearance, with or without sureties, in his discretion; and every such person so offending, and convicted before such court of quarter sessions as aforesaid (which said court is hereby required to take cognizance of and hear and determine such complaint), shall be liable, in the discretion of such court, to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years.

XV. That, from and after the passing of this act, every person who shall wilfully do or cause to be done anything in such manner as to obstruct any engine or carriage using any railway, or to endanger the safety of persons conveyed in or upon the same, or shall aid or assist therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court before which he shall have been convicted, to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years (x).

XVI. That if any person shall wilfully obstruct or impede any officer or agent of any railway company in the execution of his duty upon any railway, or upon or in any of the stations or other works or premises connected therewith, or if any person shall wilfully trespass (y) upon any railway, or any of the stations or other works or premises connected therewith, and shall refuse to quit the same upon request to him made by any officer or agent of the said company, every such person so offending, and all others aiding or assisting therein, shall and may be seized and detained, by any such officer or agent, or any person whom he may call to his assistance, until such offender or offenders can be conveniently taken before some justice of the peace for the county or place wherein such offence shall be committed, and when convicted before such justice as aforesaid, (who is hereby authorized and required, upon complaint to him upon oath, to take cognizance thereof and to act summarily in the premises,) shall in the discretion of such justice forfeit to her Majesty any sum not exceeding five pounds, and in default of payment thereof shall or may be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two calendar months, such imprisonment to be determined on payment of the amount of the penalty.

XVIII. And whereas many railway companies are bound, by the provisions of the acts of Parliament by which they are incorporated or regulated, to make, at the expense of the owner or occupier of lands adjoining the railway, openings in the ledges or flanches thereof (except at certain places on such railway in the said act specified), for effecting communications between such railway and any collateral or branch railway to be laid down over such lands, and any disagreement or difference which shall arise as to the proper places for making any such openings in the ledges or flanches is by such acts directed to be referred to the decision of any two justices of the peace within their respective jurisdictions; and whereas it is expedient that so much of every clause, provision and enactment in any act of Parliament heretofore passed, as gives to any justice or justices the power of hearing or deciding upon any such disagreement or difference as to the proper places for any such openings in the ledges or flanches of any railway, should be repealed; be it therefore enacted, That so much of every such clause, provision and enactment as aforesaid, shall be repealed.

XIX. That in case any disagreement or difference shall arise between any such owner or occupier, or other persons, and any railway company, as to the proper places for any such openings in the ledges or flanches of any railway, (except at such places as aforesaid,) for the purpose of such communication, then the same shall be left to the decision of the Lords of the said committee, who are hereby empowered to hear and determine the same in such way as they shall think fit, and their determination shall be binding on all parties (z).

XX. That all notices, returns and other documents required by this act to be given to or laid before the Lords of the said committee, shall be delivered at or sent by the post to the office of the Lords of the said committee; and all notices, appointments, requisitions, certificates or other documents in writing, signed by one of the secretaries of the said committee, or by some officer appointed for that purpose by the Lords of the said committee, and purporting to be made by the Lords of the said committee, shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to have been made by the Lords of the said committee; and service of the same upon any one or more of the directors of any railway company, or on the secretary or clerk of the said company, or by leaving the same with the clerk or officer at one of the stations belonging to the said company, shall be deemed good service upon the said company.

XXI. That wherever the word "railway" is used in this act it shall be construed to extend to all railways constructed under the powers of any act of Parliament, and intended for (a) the conveyance of passengers in or upon carriages drawn or impelled by the power of steam or by any other mechanical power; and wherever the word "company" is used in this act, it shall be construed to extend to and include the proprietors for the time being of any such railway, whether a body corporate or individuals, and their lessees, executors, administrators and assigns, unless the subject or context be repugnant to such construction.

An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops (b). [30th July, 1842.]

3 & 4 Vict. c. 97. Whereas by an act passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for regulating Railways," provision was made for the supervision of railways; and whereas it is expedient for the safety of the public to make further provision for that purpose; be it enacted, That this act shall come into operation on the passing thereof.

Commencement of act.

Recited act and this act to be construed together.

IV. That no railway or portion of any railway shall be opened for the public conveyance of passengers until one calendar month after notice in writing of the intention of opening the same shall have been given, by the company to whom such railway shall belong, to the Lords of the committee of her Majesty's Privy Council appointed for trade and foreign plantations, and until ten days after notice in writing shall have been given by the said company to the Lords of the said committee of the time when the said railway or portion of railway will be, in their opinion, sufficiently completed for the safe conveyance of passengers, and ready for inspection (c).

Notice of intended opening of railway.

V. That if any railway or portion of any railway shall be opened without such notice as aforesaid, the company to whom such railway shall belong shall forfeit to her Majesty the sum of twenty pounds for every day during which the same shall continue open until the said notices shall have been duly given and shall have expired; and every such penalty may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record, or in the Court of Session or in any of the sheriffs' courts in Scotland.

If railway opened without notice, company to forfeit 20*l*.

VI. That if the officer or officers appointed by the Lords of the said committee to inspect any such railway or portion of railway shall, after inspection thereof, report in writing to the Lords of the said committee that, in his or their opinion, the opening of the same would be attended with danger to the public using the same, by reason of the incompleteness of the works or permanent way, or the insufficiency of the establishment for working such railway, together with the grounds of such opinion, it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee, and so from time to time, as often as such officers shall, after further inspection thereof, so report, to order and direct the company to whom such railway shall belong, to postpone such opening for any period not exceeding one calendar month at any one time, until it shall appear to the Lords of the said committee that such opening may take place without danger to the public; and if any such railway, or any portion thereof, shall be opened contrary to any such order and direction of the Lords of the said committee, the company to whom such railway shall belong shall forfeit to her Majesty the sum of twenty pounds for every day during which the same shall continue open contrary to such order and direction; and any such penalty may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record, or in the Court of Session, or in any of the sheriffs' courts in Scotland: Provided always, that no such order as aforesaid shall be binding upon any railway company unless therewith shall be delivered to the said company a copy of the report of the officer or officers on which such order shall be founded.

Board of Trade empowered to postpone the opening.

VII. That every railway company shall, within forty-eight hours after the occurrence upon the railway belonging to such company of any accident attended with serious personal injury to the public using the same, give notice thereof to the Lords of the said committee; and if any company shall wilfully omit to give such notice, every such company shall forfeit to her Majesty the sum of five pounds for every day during which the omission to give the same shall continue; and every such penalty may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record, or in the Court of Session, or in any of the sheriffs' courts in Scotland.

Notice of accidents to be given to the Board of Trade.

VIII. That the Lords of the said committee may order and direct any railway company to make up and deliver to them returns of serious accidents occurring in the course of the public traffic upon the railway belonging to such company, whether attended with personal injury or not, in such form and manner as the Lords of the said committee shall deem necessary and require for their information with a view to the public safety (d); and if any such returns shall not be so delivered within fourteen days after the same shall have been required, every such company shall forfeit to her Majesty the sum of five pounds for every day during which the said company shall neglect to deliver the same; and every such penalty may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record, or in the Court of Session, or in any of the sheriffs' courts in Scotland: Provided always, that all such returns shall be privileged communications, and shall not be evidence in any court whatsoever.

Board of Trade empowered to direct returns.

IX. And whereas by an act passed in the second and third years of her present Majesty (e), and intituled "An Act to amend an Act of the Fifth and Sixth Years of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, relating to Highways," it was enacted, that whenever a railway crosses, or shall hereafter cross, any turnpike road, or any other highway or statute labour road for carts or carriages in Great Britain, the proprietors or directors of the said railway shall make and maintain good and sufficient gates across each end of such turnpike or other road at each end of the said crossings, and shall employ good and proper persons to open and shut such gates, so that the persons, carts or carriages passing along such turnpike or other road shall not be exposed to any danger or damage by the passing of any carriages or engines along the said railway: And whereas by the acts relating to certain railways, it is provided that such gates shall be kept constantly closed across the railway, except during the time when carriages or engines passing along the railway shall have to cross such turnpike or other road; and whereas experience has shown that it is more conducive to safety that such gates should be kept closed across the turnpike or other road instead of across the railway: Be it therefore enacted, That, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any act of Parliament heretofore passed, such gates shall be kept constantly closed across each end of such turnpike or other roads, in lieu of across the railway, except during the time when horses, cattle, carts, or carriages passing along such turnpike or other road, shall have to cross such railway; and such gates shall be of such dimensions, and so constructed as, when closed across the ends of such turnpike or other roads, to fence in the railway, and prevent cattle or horses passing along the road from entering upon the railway while the gates are closed: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee, in any case in which they are satisfied that it will be more conducive for the public safety that the gates at any level crossing over any such turnpike or other road should be kept closed across the railway, to order and direct that such gates shall be kept so closed, instead of across the road; and such order of the Lords of the said committee shall be a sufficient authority for the directors or proprietors of any railway company to whom such order is addressed, for keeping such gates closed, in the manner directed by the Lords of the said committee (f).

X. And whereas it is expedient that further provision be made for the safety of the public in respect of the fences of railways (f): Be it enacted, That all railway companies shall be under the same liability of obligation to erect, and to maintain and repair, good and sufficient fences throughout the whole of their respective lines, as they would have been if every part of such fences had been originally ordered to be made under an order of justices, by virtue of the provisions to that effect in the acts of Parliament relating to such railways respectively (g).

XI. That where two or more railway companies whose railways have a common terminus or a portion of the same line of rails in common, or which form separate portions of one continued line of railway communication, shall not be able to agree upon arrangements for conducting at such common terminus, or at the point of junction between them, their joint traffic with safety to the public, it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee, upon the application of either of the parties, to decide the questions in dispute between them, so far as the same relate to the safety of the public, and to order and determine whether the whole or what proportion of the expenses attending on such arrangements shall be borne by either of the parties respectively; and if any railway company shall refuse or wilfully neglect to obey any such order made upon or against such company by the Lords of the said committee pursuant to this provision, such company shall forfeit to her Majesty the sum of twenty pounds per day for every day during which such refusal or neglect shall continue; and every such penalty may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record, or in the Court of Session, or in any of the sheriffs' courts in Scotland.

XII. And whereas powers of laying down branch lines opening into the ledges or flanches of main lines of railway, and of entering upon and passing along such main lines with carriages and waggons drawn by locomotive engines, or by other mechanical or animal power, and also powers to form roads or railways across existing railways on a level, have been given by various acts relative to railways, to the owners or occupiers of lands adjoining the railway, and to other persons with their consent; and whereas experience has shown that the exercise of such powers without limitation would in many cases be attended with danger to the public using such railway (h): Be it therefore enacted, That if, in the case of any railway on which passengers are conveyed by steam or other mechanical power, it shall appear to the Lords of the said committee that such power as aforesaid cannot be so exercised without seriously endangering the public safety, and that an arrangement may be made with a due regard to existing rights of property, it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee to order and direct that such powers shall only be exercised subject to such conditions as the Lords of the said committee shall direct: Provided always, that no railway shall be considered a passenger railway if two-thirds or more of the gross annual revenue of such railway shall be derived from the carriage thereon of coals, ironstone, or other metals or minerals.

XIII. And whereas in many cases railways have been made to cross turnpike roads, highways and private roads and tramways on the level, and the companies to whom such railways belong would in some cases be willing, at their own expense, to carry such roads and tramways over or under such railways by means of a bridge or archway for the greater safety of the public, but have no authority so to do: And whereas it would promote the public safety if railway companies were enabled, under the sanction and authority of the Lords of the said committee, to substitute bridges or archways for such level crossings as aforesaid: Be it therefore enacted, That in all cases where any railway company shall be willing, at their own expense, to carry any turnpike road, highway or private road or tramway over or under their railway by means of a bridge or arch in lieu of crossing the same on the level, it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee, on the application of the said company, and after hearing the several parties interested, if it shall appear to the Lords of the said committee that such level crossing endangers the public safety, and that the proposal of the company does not involve any violation of existing rights or interests without adequate compensation, to give the said company full power and authority for removing the danger at their own expense, either by building a bridge or by such other arrangement as the nature of the case shall require, subject to such conditions as the Lords of the said committee shall direct (i).

XIV. And whereas it is essential for the public safety, and also for the proper maintenance of railways in a state of efficiency for the public service, that railway companies should have the power, in case of accidents or slips happening, or being apprehended, to their cuttings and embankments or other works, to enter upon the lands adjoining their respective railways, for the purpose of repairing or renewing the same, and to do such works as may be necessary for the purpose; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lords of the said committee to empower any railway company, in case of any accident or slip happening or being apprehended to any cutting, embankment or other work belonging to them, to enter upon any lands adjoining their railway for the purpose of repairing or preventing such accident, and to do such works as may be necessary for the purpose: Provided always, that in case of necessity, it shall be lawful for any railway company to enter upon such lands, and do such works as aforesaid, without having obtained the previous sanction of the Lords of the said committee; but in every such case such railway company shall, within forty-eight hours after such entry, make a report to the Lords of the said committee, specifying the nature of such accident or apprehended accident, and of the works necessary to be done; and such powers shall cease and determine if the Lords of the said committee shall, after considering the said report, certify that their exercise is not necessary for the public safety: Provided also, that such works shall be as little injurious to the said adjoining lands as the nature of the accident, or apprehended accident, will admit of, and shall be executed with all possible despatch; and full compensation shall be made to the owners and occupiers of such lands for the loss, or injury, or inconvenience sustained by them respectively by reason of such works; the amount of which compensation, in case of any dispute about the same, shall be settled in the same manner as cases of disputed compensation are directed to be settled by the acts relating to the railway on which such works may become necessary: Provided always, that no land shall be taken permanently by any railway company for such works without a certificate from the Lords of the said committee, as hereinafter described.

XV. And whereas, by various acts relating to railways, compulsory powers are given to railway companies of purchasing and taking lands for the construction of such railways, and it is provided, that such compulsory powers shall not be exercised after the expiration of certain limited periods from the passing of the said acts; and whereas it is sometimes found necessary for the public safety that additional land shall be taken after the expiration of such periods, for the purpose of giving increased width to the embankments and inclination to the slopes of railways, or for making approaches to bridges or archways, or for doing such works for the repair or prevention of accidents as are hereinbefore described; be it therefore enacted, That in every case in which the Lords of the said committee shall certify that the public safety requires additional land to be taken by any railway company for such purposes as aforesaid, the compulsory powers of purchasing and taking land contained in the act or acts of such railway company, together with all the clauses and provisions relative thereto, shall, as regards such portion or portions of land as are mentioned in the certificate of the Lords of the said committee, revive and be in full force for such further period as shall be mentioned in such certificate: provided always, that any railway company applying to the Lords of the said committee for any such certificate shall give fourteen days' notice in writing, in the manner prescribed by the act or acts of such company for serving notices on land-owners, of their intention to make such application to all the parties interested in such lands, or such of them as shall be known to the company, and shall state in such notice the particulars of the lands required; and if any of such parties interested shall apply within the said period of fourteen days to the Lords of the said committee, such party shall be heard by them before any such certificate is given: provided also, that where any such application shall have been made by any railway company to the Lords of the said committee, upon which application any such certificate shall have been refused, the directors of such railway company shall, if required by the Lords of the said committee, repay to the party resisting such application any expenses which he or they may have incurred in resisting such application.

XVI. And whereas, by various acts relating to railways, it is enacted, that no carriage or waggon shall carry or bear at any one time, upon the railway (including the weight of such carriage) more than four tons, and experience has shown that it is in many cases more conducive to safety to use a heavier description of carriage or waggon upon railways than was originally contemplated: be it therefore enacted, That every provision contained in any such act or acts respectively limiting the weight to be carried or borne at any one time in any carriage or waggon upon any railway (including the weight of such carriage or waggon) to four tons, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and that, notwithstanding any thing in any act contained, it shall be lawful for any railway company to use, and to permit to be used, upon any railway carriages or waggons carrying or bearing (including the weight of such carriage) a greater weight than four tons, subject to such regulations as may from time to time be made and be in force pursuant to any act or acts of Parliament already or hereafter to be passed in that behalf.

XVII. And whereas by the said recited act for regulating railways (k), provision is made for the punishment of servants of railway companies guilty of misconduct, and it is expedient to extend such provision (l); be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any officer or agent of any railway company, or for any special constable duly appointed, and all such persons as they may call to their assistance, to seize and detain any engine-driver, waggon-driver, guard, porter, servant or other person employed by the said or by any other railway company, or by any other company or person, in conducting traffic upon the railway belonging to the said company, or in repairing and maintaining the works of the said railway, who shall be found drunk while so employed upon the said railway, who shall commit any offence against any of the bye-laws, rules or regulations of the said company, or who shall wilfully, maliciously or negligently do or omit to do any act whereby the life or limb of any person passing along or being upon such railway or the works thereof respectively shall be or might be injured or endangered, or whereby the passage of any engines, carriages or trains, shall be or might be obstructed or impeded, and to convey such engine-driver, guard, porter, servant or other person so offending, or any person counselling, aiding or assisting in such offence, with all convenient despatch, before some justice of the peace for the place within which such offence shall be committed, without any other warrant or authority than this act; and every such person so offending, and every person counselling, aiding or assisting therein as aforesaid, shall, when convicted upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses before such justice as aforesaid (who is hereby authorized and required, upon complaint to him made upon oath, without information in writing, to take cognizance thereof and to act summarily in the premises), in the discretion of such justice, be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two calendar months, or, in the like discretion of such justice, shall for every such offence forfeit to her Majesty any sum not exceeding ten pounds, and in default of payment thereof shall be imprisoned, with or without hard labour as aforesaid, for such period not exceeding two calendar months, as such justice shall appoint, such commitment to be determined on payment of the amount of the penalty; and every such penalty shall be returned to the next ensuing court of quarter sessions in the usual manner.

XVIII. That in all cases in which by the present or the said recited act for regulating railways, it is provided, that offenders shall be taken before one or more justices of the peace for the place within which the offence was committed, it shall be lawful, in case the offence is committed in Scotland, to take such offenders before the sheriff of the county, or other magistrate acting for the district within which such offence shall be committed, or where such offender shall be apprehended, without any warrant or authority other than this act; and such sheriff or magistrate is hereby empowered and required, on the application of the railway company, to proceed in all respects as if the words "sheriff or magistrate" had been substituted for the word "justice" in the said acts, and shall be entitled summarily, and without a jury, to execute the powers thereby and hereby committed to him.

XIX. That all notices, returns and other documents required by this act or by the said recited act, to be given to or laid before the Lords of the said committee, shall be delivered at or sent by the post to the office of the Lords of the said committee; and all notices, requisitions, orders, regulations, appointments, certificates, certified copies, and other documents in writing, signed by one of the secretaries of the said committee, or by some officer appointed for that purpose by the Lords of the said committee, and purporting to be made by the Lords of the said committee, shall, for the purposes of this and of the said recited act, be deemed to have been made by the Lords of the said committee, and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, without proof of the authority of the person signing the same, or of the signature thereto; and service of the same at one of the terminal offices of any railway company on the secretary or clerk of the said company, or by sending the same by post addressed to him at such office, shall be deemed good service upon the said company.

XX (m). That whenever it shall be necessary to move any of the officers or soldiers of her Majesty's forces of the line, ordnance corps, marines, militia, or the police force, by any railway, the directors thereof shall and are hereby required to permit such forces respectively, with their baggage, stores, arms, ammunition and other necessaries and things, to be conveyed at the usual hours of starting, at such prices or upon such conditions as may from time to time be contracted for between the Secretary-at-War and such railway companies for the conveyances of such forces, on the production of a route or order for their conveyance signed by the proper authorities (n).

XXI. That whenever the word "railway" is used in this or in the said recited act, it shall be construed to apply to all railways used or intended to be used (o) for the conveyance of passengers in or upon carriages drawn or impelled by the power of steam or by any other mechanical power; and whenever the word "company" is used in this or in the said recited act, it shall be construed to extend to and include the proprietors for the time being of any such railway, whether a body corporate or individuals, and their lessees, executors, administrators and assigns, unless in either of the above cases the subject or context be repugnant to such construction.

XXII. That all penalties under this act, for the application of which no special provision is made, shall be recovered in the name and for the use of her Majesty, in the manner provided by the said recited act for regulating railways.

An Act to repeal the Duties payable on Stage Carriages and on Passengers conveyed upon Railways, and certain other Stamp Duties in Great Britain, and to grant other Duties in lieu thereof, and also to amend the Laws relating to Stamp Duties (p). [5th August, 1842.]

By this statute, reciting 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 120, it is enacted, sect. 1, that the duties thereby imposed in respect of passengers conveyed for hire along any railway in Great Britain are repealed; and by sect. 2, in lieu of the duties by this act repealed there shall be raised, levied, collected and paid, unto and for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in and throughout Great Britain, for and in respect of (inter alia) the passengers conveyed upon any railway, the several duties or sums of money set down in figures against the same respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in the schedule to this act; and that the said schedule shall be deemed and taken to be a part of this act; and that all the said duties shall be under the care and management of the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes for the time being (q), and shall be denominated and deemed to be stamp duties.

The above-mentioned schedule contains the following duties in respect of passengers conveyed for hire, by carriages travelling upon railways; (that is to say,)

For and in respect of all passengers conveyed for hire upon or along any railway, a duty at and after the rate of 5*l.* for every 100*l.* upon all sums received or charged for the hire, fare or conveyance, of all such passengers.

IV. That the proprietor or company of proprietors of every railway in Great Britain, and every other person who shall carry or convey, or cause to be carried or conveyed, any passenger for hire in or upon any railway in Great Britain, shall, from time to time and at all times, keep and enter or cause to be entered in a book or books to be kept for that purpose, in such manner and form as the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes shall direct or approve, a just and true account of all and every sum and sums of money which shall be received or charged daily by or for such proprietor or company or other person for the hire, fare or conveyance of all such passengers as aforesaid, whether the same shall be received for the conveyance of passengers on the railway of such proprietor or company or other person only, or on such last-mentioned railway and any other railway, or on any such other railway only, and for or in respect of all which sums of money the duties charged by this act shall, in manner hereinafter directed, be paid by the said proprietor or company or other person so receiving or charging the same as aforesaid (r), without any deduction or abatement thereout on any account or pretence whatever; and the proprietor or company of proprietors of any railway so receiving or charging any such sums of money as aforesaid, shall also in like manner keep and enter or cause to be entered an account of all sums of money paid or accounted for, or to be paid or accounted for, by such proprietor or company to the proprietor or company of proprietors of any other railway (specifying the same) upon which any of such passengers shall be carried or conveyed, as his or their share or proportion of any such sums of money so received or charged as aforesaid, or as or for or in the nature of toll or otherwise for the use of such last-mentioned railway, in the conveyance of such passengers; and the proprietor or company of proprietors of every such last-mentioned railway shall in like manner keep and enter or cause to be entered an account of all sums of money so paid or accounted for to him or them as last aforesaid, and for or in respect of which the duties shall or ought to have been paid as aforesaid by such first-mentioned proprietor or company; and every such proprietor and company and other person and persons respectively shall, within five days after the first Monday in every calendar month (s), deliver to the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, or to the proper officer appointed for receiving the same, a true copy or true copies of the account or accounts by this act directed to be kept, so far as the same shall relate to all sums of money received or charged and paid or accounted for as aforesaid during the preceding four or five weeks, as the case may be; (that is to say,) from and including the first Monday in the preceding month up to the first Monday of the month in which such account shall be rendered or ought to be rendered as aforesaid; and to and with every such account there shall be annexed and delivered an affidavit (to be taken before any one of her Majesty's justices of the peace) of such proprietor or other person as aforesaid, or of the secretary, chief clerk, or accountant of such proprietor or company or other person, stating that the deponent is well acquainted with the books and accounts of the said proprietor, company or other person, and that he has examined and checked the same, and also the account to which such affidavit is annexed, and that to the best of his knowledge, information and belief, such last-mentioned account doth contain and is a true and faithful account of all and every sum and sums of money received or charged by or for such proprietor or company or other person aforesaid for the hire, fare or conveyance of passengers on any railway during the period comprised in such account, and of all other matters and things required by this act to be contained in such account; and such proprietor or company or other persons shall, at the time of delivering every such account, pay or cause to be paid to the Receiver General of Stamps and Taxes, or to the officer authorized by the said commissioners to receive the same, for the use of her Majesty, the duties chargeable under this act for or in respect of all and every the sum and sums of money so received or charged as aforesaid, and contained, or which ought to be contained, in such account.

Proprietors of railways to deduct the duty on the sums to be paid over to other proprietors.

V. Provides and enacts, That it shall be lawful (where there shall be no express contract or agreement between the parties to the contrary) for any such proprietor or company to deduct from and retain out of the monies to be paid over to any such other proprietor or company as aforesaid, the amount of the duties by this act chargeable thereon, and which such proprietor or company receiving such monies shall have paid or be liable to pay.

Books containing any such accounts to be open to inspection of officers of stamps.

VI. That all and every the book and books of every such proprietor or company or other person, in which any account relating to such passengers, or to the money received or charged for the hire, fare or conveyance of the same, or to any money received from or paid or accounted for to any other proprietor or company for such hire, fare or conveyance as aforesaid, or a proportion thereof, or as or for such toll as aforesaid, shall be entered or kept, shall be open for the inspection and examination at all seasonable times of any officer or officers of stamp duties authorized by the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes in that behalf; and every such officer shall be at liberty to take copies of or extracts from any such book or account as aforesaid; and if any such proprietor or other person, or the secretary or accountant, or any clerk or officer of any such proprietor or company or person, having or keeping the custody or possession of any such book, or having power to produce the same, shall, upon demand made by any such officer, and upon producing and showing his authority, refuse to permit such officer of stamp duties to inspect and examine such book, or to take copies thereof or extracts therefrom, or of or from any account entered or contained therein, or shall refuse to produce such book to such officer of stamp duties for his inspection and examination, every such person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 50*l*.

Penalty for refusing to permit inspection.

Railway proprietors to give bond for securing the duties.

VII. That the proprietor or company of proprietors of every such railway, and every other person, before any passengers shall be conveyed or caused to be conveyed by him or them on any railway as aforesaid, shall give security, by bond, to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, with a condition that such proprietor or company, or other person as aforesaid, shall from time to time enter and keep, and cause to be kept and rendered, in the manner directed by this act, the accounts by this act required to be kept and rendered by such proprietor and company and persons respectively, containing and setting forth justly, truly and faithfully all the several matters and things by this act required to be contained and set forth therein; and that such proprietor or company or person, and his or their secretary, accountant and clerk, and every other person under or subject to his or their order, direction or control, having the custody or possession of any books or book of such proprietor or company, or other person as aforesaid, in which any account relating to any passengers conveyed upon any railway, or the money received, charged, accounted for, or paid for the hire, fare or conveyance of the same, shall be contained or entered, shall from time to time, upon every reasonable request of any officer of stamp duties authorized as aforesaid, produce and show to such officer, and permit him to inspect and examine the same, and to take copies thereof or extracts therefrom, and of and from any account entered or contained therein; and that such proprietor or company, or other person aforesaid, shall and will well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, at the times and in manner directed by this act, all and every the duties which shall from time to time become chargeable under this act, and payable by him or them, upon or for or in respect of the passengers, or the hire or fare or conveyance of the passengers, which shall be so conveyed as aforesaid along any railway; and that such proprietor or company, or other person aforesaid, shall well and truly do and perform, and cause to be done and performed, all such acts, matters and things as by this act are required or directed to be done or performed by or on the part or behalf of such proprietors or company or other person; and every such bond shall be taken with sufficient sureties to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, and in such sum as the said commissioners may judge to be reasonable and proper; and every such security shall be renewed from time to time, whenever and so often as such bond shall be forfeited, or as the parties to the same or any of them shall die, or become bankrupt or insolvent, or reside in parts beyond the seas, and also whenever and so often as the said commissioners shall in their discretion require the same to be renewed; and if any proprietor or company of proprietors of any such railway, or other person as aforesaid, shall convey or cause to be conveyed upon any railway, any passengers for hire, without having first given such security by bond to her Majesty, in manner hereinbefore directed, or if any proprietor or company of proprietors of any railway shall permit or suffer any passengers to be conveyed for hire upon such last-mentioned railway, by any other person or company, before such other person or company shall have given security as aforesaid, and before a certificate signed by the proper officer of stamp duties in that behalf (which certificate such officer is hereby authorized and required to give), that such security hath been given, shall have been issued, or after notice in writing, signed by any authorized officer of stamp duties, and delivered to the secretary or chief clerk of the proprietor or company of proprietors of such railway, or left at the office of such railway, with any clerk or officer there, that any such security ought, in pursuance of this act, to be renewed, or is required to be renewed, and before a certificate signed as aforesaid, that the same has been renewed, shall have been issued; or if any such proprietor or company of proprietors, or other person, shall refuse or neglect to renew such security whenever and so often as the same is or shall by or in pursuance of this act be required to be renewed, such proprietor or company or person shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*, and the further sum of 100*l.* for every day during the period for which there shall be any refusal, neglect or default to give or renew such security as aforesaid, or for every day on which any such passengers shall be permitted to be conveyed before such security shall be given or renewed, and a certificate thereof issued as aforesaid according to the true intent and meaning of this act.

Bond for securing duties.

XXIV. That all pecuniary penalties imposed by or which may be incurred under this act may be sued or prosecuted for and recovered by the same ways and means, and in the same manner and form, and be mitigated and applied as any other penalty incurred under any act relating to the stamp duties may be sued for, prosecuted and recovered, mitigated and applied; and that all the powers, provisions, regulations, forfeitures, pains and penalties contained in or imposed by any act or acts in force with relation to any of the duties under the management of the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, so far as the same are or may be applicable in cases not by this act expressly provided for, and so far as the same shall not be superseded by, and as the same shall be consistent with, the express provisions of this act, shall be of full force and effect with respect to the duties by this act granted, and to the matters and things charged or chargeable therewith, in respect of which duty is hereby granted, and shall be applied and put in execution for recovering, securing and collecting the said duties hereby granted, and for preventing, detecting and punishing all frauds, forgeries and other offences relating thereto, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such powers, provisions, regulations, forfeitures, pains and penalties had been repeated and specially enacted in this act with reference to the duties by this act granted and made payable.

7 & 8 VICT. CAP. 85.

An Act to attach certain Conditions to the Construction of future Railways authorized, or to be authorized, by any Act of the present or succeeding Sessions of Parliament; and for other Purposes in relation to Railways (t).

[9th August, 1844.]

If, after twenty-one years from the passing of the act for the construction of any future railway, the profits shall exceed 10l. per cent., the treasury may revise the scale of tolls and fix a new scale.

Proviso.

Option of purchase of future railways.

Proviso.

Existing railways not to be subjected to the options.

Reservation to Parliament of the consideration of future policy in regard to the said options.

Whereas it is expedient that the concession of powers for the establishment of new lines of railway should be subjected to such conditions as are hereinafter contained for the benefit of the public (u); be it enacted, That if at any time after the end of twenty-one years from and after the first day of January, next after the passing of any act of the present or of any future session of Parliament, for the construction of any new line of passenger railway, whether such new line be a trunk, branch, or junction line, and whether such new line be constructed by a new company incorporated for the purpose, or by any existing company, the clear annual profits divisible upon the subscribed and paid-up capital stock of the said railway, upon the average of the three then last preceding years, shall equal or exceed the rate of ten pounds for every hundred pounds of such paid-up capital stock, it shall be lawful for the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, upon giving to the said company three calendar months' notice in writing, of their intention so to do, to revise the scale of tolls, fares and charges limited by the act or acts relating to the said railway, and to fix such new scale of tolls, fares and charges applicable to such different classes and kinds of passengers, goods and other traffic on such railway, as in the judgment of the said Lords Commissioners, assuming the same quantities and kinds of traffic to continue, shall be likely to reduce the said divisible profits to the said rate of ten pounds in the hundred: Provided always, that no such revised scale shall take effect, unless accompanied by a guarantee to subsist as long as any such revised scale of tolls, fares and charges shall be in force, that the said divisible profits, in case of any deficiency therein, shall be annually made good to the said rate of ten pounds for every hundred pounds of such capital stock: Provided also, that such revised scale shall not be again revised or such guarantee withdrawn, otherwise than with the consent of the company, for the further period of twenty-one years.

II. That whatever may be the rate of divisible profits on any such railway, it shall be lawful for the said Lords Commissioners, if they shall think fit, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, at any time after the expiration of the said term of twenty-one years, to purchase any such railway, with all its hereditaments, stock and appurtenances, in the name and on behalf of her Majesty, upon giving to the said company three calendar months' notice in writing of their intention, and upon payment of a sum equal to twenty-five years' purchase of the said annual divisible profits, estimated on the average of the three then next preceding years: Provided, that if the average rate of profits for the said three years shall be less than the rate of ten pounds in the hundred, it shall be lawful for the company, if they shall be of opinion that the said rate of twenty-five years' purchase of the said average profits is an inadequate rate of purchase of such railway, reference being had to the prospects thereof, to require that it shall be left to arbitration, in case of difference, to determine what (if any) additional amount of purchase-money shall be paid to the said company: Provided also, that such option of purchase shall not be exercised, except with the consent of the company, while any such revised scale of tolls, fares and charges shall be in force.

III. Provided always, That the option of revision or purchase shall not be applied to any railway made or authorized to be made by any act previous to the present session; and that no branch or extension of less than five miles in length of any such line of railway shall be taken to be a new railway within the provisions of this act; and that the said option of purchase shall not be exercised as regards any branch or extension of any railway, without including such railway in the purchase, in case the proprietors thereof shall require that the same be so included.

IV. And whereas it is expedient, that the policy of revision or purchase should in no manner be prejudged by the provisions of this act, but should remain for the future consideration of the legislature, upon grounds of general and national policy: and whereas it is not the intention of this act that, under the said powers of revision or purchase, if called into use, the public resources should be employed to sustain an undue competition against any independent company or companies: be it enacted, That no such notice as hereinbefore mentioned, whether of revision or purchase, shall be given until provision shall have been made by Parliament, by an act or acts to be passed in that behalf, for authorizing the guarantee or the levy of the purchase-money hereinbefore mentioned, as the case may be, and for determining, subject to the conditions hereinbefore mentioned, the manner in which the said options or either of them shall be exercised; and that no bill for giving powers to exercise the said options, or either of them, shall be received in either house of Parliament, unless it be recited in the preamble to such bill, that three months' notice of the intention to apply to Parliament for such powers has been given by the said Lords Commissioners to the company or companies to be affected thereby.

APPENDIX.

V. That from and after the commencement of the period of three years next preceding the period at which the option of revision or purchase becomes available, full and true accounts shall be kept of all sums of money received and paid on account of any railway within the provisions hereinbefore contained (distinguishing, if the said railway shall be a branch railway or one worked in common with other railways, the receipts, and giving an estimate of the expenses on account of the said railway, from those on account of the trunk line or other railways), by the directors of the company to whom such railway belongs, or by whom the same may be worked; and every such railway company shall once in every half year during the said period of three years cause a half-yearly account in abstract to be prepared, showing the total receipt and expenditure on account of the said railway for the half year ending the thirtieth day of June and the thirty-first day of December respectively, or such other convenient days as shall in each case be directed by the said Lords Commissioners, under distinct heads of receipt and expenditure, with a statement of the balance of such account, duly audited and certified under the hands of two or more directors of the said railway company, and shall send a copy of the said account to the said Lords Commissioners on or before the last days of August and February respectively, or such other days as shall in each case be directed by the said Lords Commissioners, in each year; and it shall be lawful for the said Lords Commissioners, if and when they shall think fit, to appoint any proper person or persons to inspect the accounts and books of the said company during the said period of three years; and it shall be lawful for any person so authorized, at all reasonable times, upon producing his authority, to examine the books, accounts, vouchers and other documents of the company, at the principal office or place of business of the company, and to take copies or extracts therefrom.

Accounts to be kept, and to be open to inspection.

VI. And whereas it is expedient to secure to the poorer class of travellers the means of travelling by railway at moderate fares, and in carriages in which they may be protected from the weather (x); be it enacted, That on and after the several days hereinafter specified, all passenger railway companies which shall have been incorporated by any act of the present session, or which shall be hereafter incorporated, or which by any act of the present or any future session have obtained or shall obtain, directly or indirectly, any extension or amendment of the powers conferred on them respectively by their previous acts, or have been or shall be authorized to do any act unauthorized by the provisions of such previous acts, shall, by means of one train at the least, to travel along their railway from one end to the other of each trunk, branch or junction line belonging to or leased by them (y), so long as they shall continue to carry other passengers over such trunk, branch or junction line, once at the least each way on every week-day, except Christmas-day and Good Friday (such exception not to extend to Scotland), provide for the conveyance of third-class passengers to and from the terminal and other ordinary passenger stations of the railway, under the obligations contained in their several acts of Parliament, and with the immunities applicable by law to carriers of passengers by railway; and also under the following conditions; (that is to say,)

Companies to provide one cheap train each way daily.

Such train shall start at an hour to be from time to time fixed by the directors, subject to the approval of the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations:

Such train shall travel at an average rate of speed not less than twelve miles an hour for the whole distance travelled on the railway, including stoppages:

Such train shall, if required, take up and set down passengers at every passenger station which it shall pass on the line:

The carriages in which passengers shall be conveyed by such train shall be provided with seats, and shall be protected from the weather, in a manner satisfactory to the Lords of the said committee:

The fare or charge for each third-class passenger by such train shall not exceed one penny for each mile travelled (z):

Each passenger by such train shall be allowed to take with him half-a-hundred weight of luggage, not being merchandize or other articles carried for hire or profit, without extra charge; and any excess of luggage shall be charged by weight, at a rate not exceeding the lowest rate of charge for passengers' luggage by other trains:

Children under three years of age, accompanying passengers by such train, shall be taken without any charge; and children of three years and upwards, but under twelve years of age, at half the charge for an adult passenger:

APPENDIX.

Penalty for non-compliance.

Board of Trade to have a discretionary power of allowing alternative arrangements.

When no tax to be levied.

Where companies run trains on the Sunday, cheap trains to be likewise provided.

Railway companies to afford additional facilities for the transmission of the mails.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 98, ante, p. 2.

Certain companies to convey military and police forces at certain charges.

5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, ante, p. 10.

And with respect to all railways subject to these obligations, which shall be open on or before the first day of November next, these obligations shall come into force on the said first day of November: and with respect to all other railways subject to these obligations, they shall come into force on the day of opening of the railway, or the day after the last day of the session in which the act shall be passed by reason of which the company will become subject thereunto, which shall first happen.

VII. That if any railway company shall refuse or wilfully neglect to comply with the provisions of this act as to the said cheap trains within a reasonable time, or shall attempt to evade the operation of such order, such company shall forfeit to her Majesty a sum not exceeding twenty pounds for every day during which such refusal, neglect or evasion shall continue.

VIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, That, except as to the amount of fare or charge for each passenger by such cheap trains, which shall in no case exceed the rates hereinbefore in such case provided, the Lords of the said committee shall have a discretionary power, upon the application of any railway company, of dispensing with any of the conditions hereinbefore required in regard to the conveyance of passengers by such cheap trains as aforesaid, in consideration of such other arrangements, either in regard to speed, covering from the weather, seats or other particulars, as to the Lords of the said committee shall appear more beneficial and convenient for the passengers by such cheap trains under the circumstances of the case, and shall be sanctioned by them accordingly; and any railway company which shall conform to such other conditions as shall be so sanctioned by the Lords of the said committee shall not be liable to any penalty for not observing the conditions which shall have been so dispensed with by the Lords of the said committee, in regard to the said cheap trains and the passengers conveyed thereby.

IX. That no tax shall be levied upon the receipts of any railway company from the conveyance of passengers at fares not exceeding one penny for each mile by any such cheap train as aforesaid (a).

X. That whenever any railway company subject to the hereinbefore-mentioned obligation of running cheap trains shall, from and after the days hereinbefore specified on which the said obligation is to accrue, run any train or trains on Sundays for the conveyance of passengers, it shall, under the obligations contained in its act or acts of Parliament, and with the immunities applicable by law to carriers of passengers by railway, by such train each way, on every Sunday, as shall stop at the greatest number of stations, provide sufficient carriages for the conveyance of third-class passengers at the terminal and other stations, at which such Sunday train may ordinarily stop; and the fare or charge for each third-class passenger by such train shall not exceed one penny for each mile travelled.

XI. And whereas by an act passed in the second year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act to provide for the Conveyance of the Mails by Railways," provision was made for the transmission of the mails by railway, and it is expedient that such provision should be extended (b); be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Postmaster-General to require, in the manner and subject to the conditions as to payment for service performed prescribed by the said act, that the mails be forwarded upon any such railway as is hereinbefore last mentioned at any rate of speed which the Inspector-General of Railways for the time being shall certify to be safe, not exceeding twenty-seven miles in the hour, including stoppages; and it shall be also lawful for the Postmaster-General to send any mail-guard with bags not exceeding the weight of luggage allowed to any other passenger (or subject to the general rules of the company for any excess of that weight) by any trains other than a mail train, upon the same conditions as any other passenger: Provided, that in such last-mentioned case nothing herein or in the last-recited act contained shall be construed to authorize the Postmaster-General to require the conversion of a regular mail train into an ordinary train, or to exercise any control over the company in respect of any ordinary train, nor shall the company be responsible for the safe custody or delivery of any mail bags so sent.

XII. And whereas by an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops," it was among other things enacted, that, whenever it shall be necessary to move any of the officers or soldiers of her Majesty's forces of the line, ordnance corps, marines, militia, or the police force, by any railway, the directors thereof shall and are hereby required to permit such forces respectively, with their baggage, stores, arms, ammunition and other necessaries and things, to be conveyed at the usual hours of starting, at such prices, or upon such conditions as may from time to time be contracted for between the Secretary-at-War and such railway companies for the conveyance of such forces, on the production of a route or order for their conveyance, signed by the proper authorities; and whereas it is expedient to amend such provision in regard to the prices and conditions of conveyance by any new railway, or any railway obtaining new powers from Parliament (c); be it enacted, That all railway companies which have been, or shall be incorporated by any act of the present or any future session, or which by any act of the present or any future session shall have obtained, or shall obtain any extension or amendment of the powers conferred by their previous acts, or any of them, or have been or shall be authorized to do any act unauthorized by the provisions of such previous acts, shall be bound to provide such conveyance as aforesaid for the said military, marine and police forces, at fares not exceeding two-pence per mile for each commissioned officer proceeding on duty, such officer being entitled to conveyance in a first-class carriage, and not exceeding one penny for each mile for each soldier, marine or private of the militia or police force, and also for each wife, widow, or child above twelve years of age of a soldier, entitled by act of Parliament, or by competent authority, to be sent to their destination at the public expense, children under three years of age so entitled being taken free of charge, and children of three years of age or upwards, but under twelve years of age, so entitled, being taken at half the price of an adult; and such soldiers, marines and privates of the militia or police force, and their wives, widows and children so entitled, being conveyed in carriages which shall be provided with seats, with sufficient space for the reasonable accommodation of the persons conveyed, and which shall be protected against the weather; provided, that every officer conveyed shall be entitled to take with him one hundred weight of personal luggage without extra charge, and every soldier, marine, private, wife or widow, shall be entitled to take with him or her half-a-hundred weight of personal luggage without extra charge, all excess of the above weights of personal luggage being paid for at the rate of not more than one halfpenny per pound, and all public baggage, stores, arms, ammunition and other necessaries and things, (except gunpowder and other combustible matters, which the company shall only be bound to convey at such prices and upon such conditions as may be from time to time contracted for between the Secretary-at-War and the company,) shall be conveyed at charges not exceeding two-pence per ton per mile, the assistance of the military or other forces being given in loading and unloading such goods (d).

XIII. And whereas electrical telegraphs have been established on certain railways, and may be more extensively established hereafter, and it is expedient to provide for their due regulation: be it enacted, That every railway company, on being required so to do by the Lords of the said committee, shall be bound to allow any person or persons authorized by the Lords of the said committee, with servants and workmen, at all reasonable times to enter into or upon their lands, and to establish and lay down upon such lands adjoining the line of such railway, a line of electrical telegraph for her Majesty's service, and to give to him and them every reasonable facility for laying down the same, and for using the same for the purpose of receiving and sending messages on her Majesty's service, subject to such reasonable remuneration to the company as may be agreed upon between the company and the Lords of the said committee, or in case of disagreement as may be settled by arbitration: Provided always, that, subject to a prior right of use thereof for the purposes of her Majesty, such telegraph may be used by the company for the purposes of the railway, upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the parties, or, in the event of difference, as may be settled by arbitration.

Companies to allow lines of electrical telegraph to be established.

XIV (e). That where a line of electrical telegraph shall have been established upon any railway by the company to whom such railway belongs, or by any company, partnership, person or persons, otherwise than exclusively for her Majesty's service, or exclusively for the purposes of the railway, or jointly for both, the use of such electrical telegraph, for the purpose of receiving and sending messages, shall, subject to the prior right of use thereof for the service of her Majesty and for the purposes of the company, and subject also to such equal charges and to such reasonable regulations as may be from time to time made by the said railway company, be open for the sending and receiving of messages by all persons alike, without favour or preference.

Electrical telegraph established by private parties to be open to the public.

XV. And whereas by an act passed in the fourth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act to regulate Railways," power is given to the Lords of the said com-

Appointment of inspectors by Board of Trade.

(d) By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 69, s. 18, whenever it shall be necessary to move any of the officers or men in her Majesty's navy, or belonging to any naval coast volunteers, or any other officers or men under the command or government of the Admiralty, every railway company shall, upon the production of a route or order for the conveyance of such officers or men, signed by any officer or person authorized by the Lord High Admiral or Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral in that behalf, be bound to provide conveyance for such officers or men, and their personal luggage, and also any public baggage, stores, arms, ammunition and other necessaries and things, by the railway of such company, at the usual hours of starting, in like manner and at the like fares and rates of charge, and upon the like conditions as under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, or any other act applicable to such company, such company would be bound to provide such conveyance for the officers and men of her Majesty's forces of the line, ordnance corps, marines, militia and police force, and their personal luggage, and any public baggage, stores, arms, ammunition and other necessaries and things of the said forces.

APPENDIX.

Repealing provisions of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 11.

If railway companies contravene or exceed the provisions of their acts, or of any general act, the Board of Trade to certify the same to the Attorney-General, &c., who shall proceed against them.

Notice to be given to the company.

mittee to appoint any proper person or persons to inspect any railway, and the stations, works and buildings, and the engines and carriages belonging thereto, and in order to carry the provisions of this act into execution, it is expedient that the said power be extended: be it enacted, That the said power given to the Lords of the said committee of appointing proper persons to inspect railways shall extend to authorize the appointment by the Lords of the said committee of any proper person or persons, for such purposes of inspection as are by the said act authorized, and also for the purpose of enabling the Lords of the said committee to carry the provisions of this and of the said act and of any general act relating to railways into execution; and that so much of the last-recited act as provides that no person shall be eligible to the appointment as inspector who shall, within one year of his appointment, have been a director, or have held any office of trust or profit under any railway company, shall be repealed: Provided always, that no person to be appointed as aforesaid shall exercise any powers of interference in the affairs of the company.

XVI. And whereas by the said act of the fourth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act for regulating Railways," it is among other things enacted, that whenever it shall appear to the Lords of the said committee that any of the provisions of the several acts of Parliament regulating any railway companies, or the provisions of that act, have not been complied with on the part of any of the said companies or any of their officers, and that it would be for the public advantage that the due performance of the same should be enforced, the Lords of the said committee shall certify the same to her Majesty's Attorney-General for England or Ireland, or to the Lord Advocate for Scotland, as the case may require; and thereupon the said Attorney-General or Lord Advocate shall, by information, or by action, bill, plaint, suit at law or in equity, or other legal proceeding (as the case may require), proceed to recover such penalties and forfeitures, or otherwise to enforce the due performance of the said provisions, by such means as any person aggrieved by such non-compliance, or otherwise authorized to sue for such penalties, might employ under the provisions of the said acts: Provided always, that no such certificate as aforesaid shall be given by the Lords of the said committee until twenty-one days after they shall have given notice of their intention to give the same to the company against or in relation to whom they shall intend to give the same: And whereas it is expedient that more effectual provision should be made, not only for enforcing a compliance on the part of railway companies with the provisions of their acts, but also for restraining railway companies from performing acts unauthorized by such provisions: be it enacted, That so much of the said act as is hereinbefore recited shall be repealed.

XVII (f). That whenever it shall appear to the Lords of the said committee that any of the provisions of the several acts of Parliament regulating any railway company, or the provisions of this act or of any general act relating to railways, have not been complied with on the part of any railway company or any of its officers, or that any railway company has acted or is acting in a manner unauthorized by the provision of the act or acts of Parliament relating to such railway, or in excess of the powers given and objects defined by the said act or acts, and it shall also appear to the Lords of the said committee that it would be for the public advantage that the company should be restrained from so acting, the Lords of the said committee shall certify the same to her Majesty's Attorney-General for England or Ireland, or to the Lord Advocate for Scotland, as the case may require; and thereupon the said Attorney-General or Lord Advocate shall, in case such default of the railway company shall consist of non-compliance with the provisions of the act or acts relating thereto or of this act, or of any general act relating to railways, proceed by information, or by action, bill, plaint, suit at law or in equity, or other legal proceeding, as the case may require, to recover such penalties and forfeitures, or otherwise to enforce the due performance of the said provisions, by such means as any person aggrieved by such non-compliance, or otherwise authorized to sue for such penalties, might employ under the provisions of the said acts; and in case the default of the railway company shall consist in the commission of some act or acts unauthorized by law, then the said Attorney-General or Lord Advocate, upon receiving such certificate as aforesaid, shall proceed by suit in equity, or such other legal proceeding as the nature of the case may require, to obtain an injunction or order (which the judge in equity or other judge to whom the application is made shall be authorized and required to grant, if he shall be of opinion that the act or acts of the railway company complained of is or are not authorized by law) to restrain the company from acting in such illegal manner, or to give such other relief as the nature of the case may require.

XVIII. Provided always, That no such certificate as aforesaid shall be given by the Lords of the said committee until twenty-one days after they shall have given notice to the company against or in relation to whom they shall intend to give such certificate of their intention to give such certificate; and that no legal proceedings shall be commenced under the authority of the Lords of the said committee against any railway company for any offence against any of the several acts relating to railways or this act, or any general act relating to railways, except upon such certificate of the Lords of the said committee as aforesaid, and within one year after such offence shall have been committed.

(f) Founded on Fifth Report, 1844. In Attorney-General v. Great Northern R. Co., 29 L. J. (Ch.) 794, it was held that the

XIX. And whereas many railway companies have borrowed money in a manner unauthorized by their acts of incorporation or other acts of Parliament relating to the said companies, upon the security of loan notes, or other instruments purporting to give a security for the repayment of the principal sums borrowed at certain dates, and for the payment of interest thereon in the meantime: And whereas such loan notes or other securities issued otherwise than under the provision of some act or acts of Parliament have no legal validity, and it is expedient that the issue of such illegal securities should be stopped; but such loan notes or other securities having been issued and received in good faith as between the borrower and lender, and for the most part for the lawful purposes of the undertaking, and in ignorance of their legal invalidity, it is expedient to confirm such as have been already issued (g); be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this act any railway company issuing any loan note or other negotiable or assignable instrument purporting to bind the company as a legal security for money advanced to the said railway company otherwise than under the provisions of some act or acts of Parliament authorizing the said railway company to raise such money and to issue such security, shall for every such offence forfeit to her Majesty a sum equal to the sum for which such loan note or other instrument purports to be such security: Provided always, that any company may renew any such loan note or other instrument issued by them prior to the passing of this act for any period or periods not exceeding five years from the passing of this act.

XX. That where any railway company, before the twelfth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, shall have issued or contracted to issue any such loan notes or other unauthorized instruments, the company may and shall pay off such loan notes or other instruments as the same may fall due, subject as hereinbefore provided; and until the same shall be so paid off the said loan notes or other instruments shall entitle the holders thereof to the payment by the company of the principal sum and interest thereby agreed to be paid.

XXI. That a register of all such loan notes or other instruments shall be kept by the secretary; and such register shall be open, without fee or reward, at all reasonable times, to the inspection of any shareholder or auditor of the undertaking, and of every person interested in any such loan note or other instrument, desirous of inspecting the same.

XXII. And whereas the remedies now in force for the recovery of tithe commutation rent-charges are in many instances ineffectual for such parts thereof as are charged upon lands taken for the purposes of a railway, and it is therefore expedient to extend the said remedies when the said rent-charges may have been duly apportioned; be it enacted, That in all cases in which any such rent-charge, or part of any rent-charge, has been or hereafter shall be duly apportioned under the provisions of the acts for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales upon lands taken or purchased by any railway company for the purposes of such company, or upon any part of such lands, it shall be lawful for every person entitled to the said rent-charge or parts of such rent-charge, in case the same has been or shall be in arrear and unpaid for the space of twenty-one days next after any half-yearly day fixed for the payment thereof, to distrain for all arrears of the said rent-charge upon the goods, chattels and effects of the said company, whether on the land charged therewith, or any other lands, premises or hereditaments of such company, whether situated in the same parish or elsewhere, and to dispose of the distress when taken, and otherwise to demean himself in relation thereto, as any landlord may for arrears of rent reserved on a lease for years: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall give or be construed to give a legal right to such rent-charge, when but for this act such rent-charge was not or could not be duly apportioned.

XXIII. That all notices, requisitions, orders, regulations, appointments, certificates, certified copies, and other documents in writing, signed by some officer appointed for that purpose by the Lords of the said committee, shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to have been made by the Lords of the said committee; and all certificates of anything done by the Lords of the said committee in relation to this act, and certified copies of the minutes of proceedings or correspondence of the Lords of the said committee in relation thereto, signed by such officer, shall be deemed sufficient evidence thereof; and that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, without proof of the authority of the person signing the same, or of the signature thereto, and service of the same at one of the principal offices of any railway company on the secretary or clerk of the said company, or by sending the same by post, addressed to him at such office, shall be deemed good service upon the said company; and all notices, returns and other documents required by this act to be given to or laid before the Lords of the said committee, shall be delivered at or sent by post addressed to the office of the Lords of the said committee.

APPENDIX.

Prosecutions to be under the sanction of the Board of Trade, and within one year after the offence.

Issue of loan notes and other illegal securities by railway companies prohibited.

Loan notes already issued may be renewed.

Loan notes already issued to be paid when due.

Register of loan notes.

Remedy for recovery of tithe-rent charged on railway land.

Communications to and from Board of Trade, service of notices &c.

APPENDIX.

Penalties.

XXIV. That all penalties under this act for the application of which no special provision is made shall be recovered in the name and for the use of her Majesty, and may be recovered in any of her Majesty's courts of record or in the Court of Session or in any of the sheriff courts in Scotland.

Interpretation of act.

XXV. That where the word "railway" is used in this act, it shall be construed to extend to railways constructed under the powers of any act of Parliament; and when the words "passenger railway" are used in this act, they shall be construed to extend to railways constructed under the powers of any act of Parliament upon which one-third or more of the gross annual revenue is derived from the conveyance of passengers by steam or other mechanical power; and whenever the word "company" is used in this act, it shall be construed to extend to include the proprietors for the time being of any such railway; and that where a different sense is not expressly declared, or does not appear by the context, every word importing the singular number or the masculine gender shall be taken to include females as well as males, and several persons and things as well as one person or thing.

An Act for consolidating in one Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts with respect to the Constitution of Companies incorporated for carrying on Undertakings of a Public Nature (h). [8th May, 1845.]

The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act.

Whereas it is expedient to comprise in one general act sundry provisions relating to the constitution and management of joint-stock companies, usually introduced into acts of Parliament authorizing the execution of undertakings of a public nature by such companies, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several acts relating to such undertakings as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves: May it therefore please your Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That this act shall apply to every joint-stock company which shall by any act which shall hereafter be passed be incorporated for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, and this act shall be incorporated with such act; and all the clauses and provisions of this act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such act, shall apply to the company which shall be incorporated by such act, and to the undertaking for carrying on which such company shall be incorporated, so far as the same shall be applicable thereto respectively, and such clauses and provisions, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other act which shall be incorporated with such act, shall, save as aforesaid, form part of such act, and be construed together therewith as forming one act.

II. And with respect to the construction of this act, and of other acts to be incorporated therewith, be it enacted as follows:—

"the special act;"

The expression "the special act" used in this act shall be construed to mean any act which shall be hereafter passed incorporating a joint-stock company for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, and with which this act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word "prescribed," used in this act in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special act; and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if instead of the word "prescribed," the expression "prescribed for that purpose in the special act" had been used; and the expression "the undertaking" shall mean the undertaking or works, of whatever nature, which shall by the special act be authorized to be executed.

"the undertaking."Interpretations in this and the special act:

III. The following words and expressions, both in this and the special act, shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the subject or the context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,) number;

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number; and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number:

gender;

IV. And be it enacted, That, in citing this act in other acts of Parliament and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845."	"secretary,"
V. And whereas it may be convenient in some cases to incorporate with acts of Parliament hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this act : Be it therefore enacted, That for the purpose of making any such incorporation, it shall be sufficient in any such act to enact that the clauses and provisions of this act, with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this act in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter), shall be incorporated with such act ; and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such act, form part of such act, and such act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such act shall relate (i).	Short title of the act.
And, with respect to the distribution of the capital of the company into shares, be it enacted as follows :—	Form in which portions of this act may be incorporated with other acts.
VI. The capital (j) of the company shall be divided into shares of the prescribed number and amount (k), and such shares shall be numbered in arithmetical progression, beginning with number 1 ; and every such share shall be distinguished by its appropriate number.	Distribution of Capital.
VII. All shares in the undertaking shall be personal estate, and transmissible as such, and shall not be of the nature of real estate (l).	Capital to be divided into shares.
VIII. Every person who shall have subscribed the prescribed sum or upwards to the capital of the company, or shall otherwise have become entitled to a share in the company, and whose name shall have been entered on the register of shareholders hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed a shareholder of the company (m).	Shares to be personal estate.
IX. The company shall keep a book, to be called the "Register of Shareholders ;" and in such book shall be fairly and distinctly entered, from time to time, the names of the several corporations, and the names and additions of the several persons entitled to shares in the company, together with the number of shares to which such shareholders shall be respectively entitled, distinguishing each share by its number, and the amount of the subscriptions paid on such shares, and the surnames or corporate names of the said shareholders (n), shall be placed in alphabetical order ; and such book shall be authenticated by the common seal of the company being affixed thereto (o) ; and such authentication shall be	Shareholders.

APPENDIX.

Addresses of

tion shall take place at the first ordinary meeting, or at the next subsequent meeting of the company, and so from time to time at each ordinary meeting of the company (p).

X. In addition to the said register of shareholders, the company shall provide a book, to be called the "Shareholders' Address Book," in which the secretary shall from time to time enter in alphabetical order the corporate names and places of business of the several shareholders of the company being corporations, and the surnames of the several other shareholders, with their respective christian names, places of abode and descriptions, so far as the same shall be known to the company; and every shareholder, or if such shareholder be a corporation, the clerk or agent of such corporation, may at all convenient times peruse such book gratis, and may require a copy thereof or of any part thereof: and for every hundred words so required to be copied, the company may demand a sum not exceeding sixpence.

shares to be issued to the shareholders.

XI. On demand of the holder of any share, the company shall cause a certificate of the proprietorship of such share to be delivered to such shareholder; and such certificate shall have the common seal of the company affixed thereto: and such certificate shall specify the share in the undertaking to which such shareholder is entitled; and the same may be according to the form in the Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, or to the like effect; and for such certificate the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or, if no amount be prescribed, then a sum not exceeding two shillings and sixpence.

Certificate to be evidence.

XII. The said certificate shall be admitted in all courts as prima facie evidence of the title of such shareholder, his executors, administrators, successors or assigns, to the share therein specified; nevertheless, the want of such certificate shall not prevent the holder of any share from disposing thereof.

Certificate to be
destroyed.

XIII. If any such certificate be worn out or damaged, then, upon the same being produced at some meeting of the directors, such directors may order the same to be cancelled, and thereupon another similar certificate shall be given to the party in whom the property of such certificate, and of the share therein mentioned, shall be at the time vested; or, if such certificate be lost or destroyed, then, upon proof thereof to the satisfaction of the directors, a similar certificate shall be given to the party entitled to the certificate so lost or destroyed; and in either case a due entry of the substituted certificate shall be made by the secretary in the register of shareholders; and for every such certificate so given or exchanged the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed, then a sum not exceeding two shillings and sixpence.

Transfer of Shares.

And with respect to the transfer or transmission of shares (q), be it enacted as follows:—

Transfer of shares to be by
stamped.

XIV. Subject to the regulations herein or in the special act contained, every shareholder may sell and transfer all or any of his shares in the undertaking, or all or any part of his interest in the capital stock of the company, in case such shares shall, under the provision hereinafter contained, be consolidated into capital stock; and every such transfer (r) shall be by deed duly stamped (s), in which the consideration shall be duly stated; and such deed may be according to the form in the Schedule (B.) to this act annexed, or to the like effect.

Transfers of shares to be registered, &c.

XV. The said deed of transfer (when duly executed) shall be delivered to the secretary, and be kept by him; and the secretary shall enter a memorial thereof in a book to be called the "Register of Transfers," and shall indorse such entry on the deed of transfer, and shall, on demand, deliver a new certificate to the purchaser (t); and for every such entry, together with such indorsement and certificate, the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or, if no amount be prescribed, then a sum not exceeding two shillings and sixpence; and on the request of the purchaser of any share an indorsement of such transfer shall be made on the certificate of such share, instead of a new certificate being granted; and such indorsement, being signed by the secretary, shall be considered in every respect the same as a new certificate; and until such transfer (u) has been so delivered to the secretary as aforesaid, the vendor of the share shall continue liable to the company for any calls that may be made upon such share, and the purchaser of the share shall not be entitled to receive any share of the profits of the undertaking, or to vote in respect of such share.

Transfer not to
calls paid.

XVI. No shareholder shall be entitled to transfer any share, after any call shall have been made in respect thereof (x), until he shall have paid such call, nor until he shall have paid all calls for the time being due on every share held by him (y).

XVII. It shall be lawful for the directors to close the register of transfers for the prescribed period, or, if no period be prescribed, then for a period not exceeding fourteen days previous to each ordinary meeting, and they may fix a day for the closing of the same, of which seven days' notice shall be given by advertisement in some newspaper as after mentioned; and any transfer made during the time when the transfer books are so closed shall, as between the company and the party claiming under the same, but not otherwise, be considered as made subsequently to such ordinary meeting.

XVIII. If the interest in any share have become transmitted in consequence of the death (z) or bankruptcy or insolvency of any shareholder (a), or in consequence of the marriage of a female shareholder, or by any other lawful means than by a transfer according to the provisions of this or the special act, such transmission shall be authenticated by a declaration in writing as hereinafter mentioned, or in such other manner as the directors shall require (b); and every such declaration shall state the manner in which and the party to whom such share shall have been so transmitted, and shall be made and signed by some credible person before a justice, or before a Master or Master Extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery; and such declaration shall be left with the secretary, and thereupon he shall enter the name of the person entitled under such transmission in the register of shareholders; and for every such entry the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, and where no amount shall be prescribed, then not exceeding five shillings; and until such transmission has been so authenticated, no person claiming by virtue of any such transmission shall be entitled to receive any share of the profits of the undertaking, nor to vote in respect of any such share as the holder thereof.

XIX. If such transmission be by virtue of the marriage of a female shareholder, the said declaration shall contain a copy of the register of such marriage, or other particulars of the celebration thereof, and shall declare the identity of the wife with the holder of such share; and if such transmission have taken place by virtue of any testamentary instrument, or by intestacy, the probate of the will or the letters of administration, or an official extract therefrom, shall, together with such declaration, be produced to the secretary; and upon such production in either of the cases aforesaid the secretary shall make an entry of the declaration in the said register of transfers.

XX. The company shall not be bound to see to the execution of any trust, whether express, implied or constructive, to which any of the said shares may be subject (c); and the receipt of the party in whose name any such share shall stand in the books of the company, or, if it stands in the names of more parties than one, the receipt of one of the parties named in the register of shareholders, shall from time to time be a sufficient discharge to the company for any dividend or other sum of money payable in respect of such share, notwithstanding any trusts to which such share may then be subject, and whether or not the company have had notice of such trusts; and the company shall not be bound to see to the application of the money paid upon such receipt.

And with respect to the payment of subscriptions, and the means of enforcing the payment of calls, be it enacted as follows:—

XXI. The several persons who have subscribed any money towards the undertaking, or their legal representatives, respectively (d), shall pay the sums respectively so subscribed, or such portion thereof as shall from time to time be called for by the company, at such times and places as shall be appointed by the company; and with respect to the provisions herein or in the special act contained for enforcing the payment of calls, the word "shareholder" shall extend to and include the legal personal representatives of such shareholder (e).

XXII. It shall be lawful for the company (f) from time to time to make such calls (g) of money upon the respective shareholders, in respect of the amount of capital respectively subscribed or owing by them, as they shall think fit, provided that twenty-one days notice at the least be given of each call (h), and that no call exceed the prescribed

- amount, if any, and that successive calls be not made at less than the prescribed interval, if any, and that the aggregate amount of calls made in any one year do not exceed the prescribed amount, if any; and every shareholder shall be liable to pay the amount of the calls so made, in respect of the shares held by him, to the persons and at the times and places from time to time appointed by the company.
- XXIII. If, before or on the day appointed for payment, any shareholder do not pay the amount of any call to which he is liable, then such shareholder shall be liable to pay interest for the same at the rate allowed by law from the day appointed for the payment thereof to the time of the actual payment.
- XXIV. It shall be lawful for the company, if they think fit, to receive from any of the shareholders willing to advance the same, all or any part of the monies due upon their respective shares beyond the sums actually called for; and upon the principal monies so paid in advance, or so much thereof as from time to time shall exceed the amount of the calls then made upon the shares in respect of which such advance shall be made, the company may pay interest at such rate, not exceeding the legal rate of interest for the time being, as the shareholder paying such sum in advance and the company shall agree upon.
- XXV. If at the time appointed by the company for the payment of any call, any shareholder fail to pay the amount of such call, it shall be lawful for the company to sue such shareholder for the amount thereof in any court of law or equity having competent jurisdiction, and to recover the same, with lawful interest, from the day on which such call was payable (i).
- XXVI. In any action or suit to be brought by the company against any shareholder to recover any money due for any call, it shall not be necessary to set forth the special matter, but it shall be sufficient for the company to declare (k), that the defendant is the holder of one share or more in the company, (stating the number of shares,) and is indebted to the company in the sum of money to which the calls in arrear shall amount in respect of one call or more upon one share or more, (stating the number and amount of each of such calls,) whereby an action hath accrued to the company by virtue of this and the special act (l).
- XXVII. On the trial or hearing of such action or suit it shall be sufficient to prove that the defendant at the time of making such call was a holder of one share or more in the undertaking, and that such call was in fact made, and such notice thereof given as is directed by this or the special act; and it shall not be necessary to prove the appointment of the directors who made such call, nor any other matter whatsoever (m); and thereupon the company shall be entitled to recover what shall be due upon such call, with interest thereon, unless it shall appear either that any such call exceeds the prescribed amount, or that due notice of such call was not given, or that the prescribed interval between two successive calls had not elapsed, or that calls amounting to more than the sum prescribed for the total amount of calls in one year had been made within that period.
- XXVIII. The production of the register of shareholders shall be prima facie evidence (n) of such defendant being a shareholder, and of the number and amount of his shares.
- And with respect to the forfeiture (o) of shares for non-payment of calls, be it enacted as follows:—
- XXIX. If any shareholder fail to pay any call payable by him, together with the interest, if any, that shall have accrued thereon, the directors, at any time after the expiration of two months from the day appointed for payment of such call, may declare the share in respect of which such call was payable forfeited, and that whether the company have sued for the amount of such call, or not (p).
- XXX. Before declaring any share forfeited, the directors shall cause notice of such intention to be left at or transmitted by the post to the usual or last place of abode of the person appearing by the register of shareholders to be the proprietor of such share; and if the holder of any such share be abroad, or if his usual or last place of abode be not in the English courts (ante, 99, text,) that calls, payable by instalments, may be enforced; and also that the day appointed for the payment of the last instalment may be deemed the day on which the call is payable, and that twenty-one days' notice previous thereto is a valid notice within the above section.
- (i) As to the right of the company to set off claims for calls, in answer to an action brought against them for plaintiff's services, ante, 100, text, note (s).
- (k) See the form of the declaration, and the cases on this section, post, tit. Forms.

known to the directors, by reason of its being imperfectly described in the Shareholders' Address Book, or otherwise, or if the interest in any such share shall be known by the directors to have become transmitted otherwise than by transfer, as hereinbefore mentioned, but a declaration of such transmission shall not have been registered as aforesaid, and so the address of the parties to whom the same may have been transmitted, or may for the time being belong, shall not be known to the directors, the directors shall give public notice of such intention in the London or Dublin Gazette, according as the company's principal place of business shall be situate in England or Ireland, and also in some newspaper, as after mentioned; and the several notices aforesaid shall be given twenty-one days at least before the directors shall make such declaration of forfeiture.

XXXI. The said declaration of forfeiture shall not take effect so as to authorize the sale or other disposition of any share until such declaration shall have been confirmed at some general meeting of the company, to be held after the expiration of two months at the least from the day on which such notice of intention to make such declaration of forfeiture shall have been given; and it shall be lawful for the company to confirm such forfeiture at any such meeting, and by an order at such meeting, or at any subsequent general meeting, to direct the share so forfeited to be sold or otherwise disposed of.

XXXII. After such confirmation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the directors to sell the forfeited share, either by public auction or private contract, and if there be more than one such forfeited share, then either separately or together, as to them shall seem fit; and any shareholder may purchase any forfeited share so sold (q).

XXXIII. A declaration in writing, by some credible person not interested in the matter, made before any justice, or before any Master or Master Extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, that the call in respect of a share was made, and notice thereof given, and that default in payment of the call was made, and that the forfeiture of the share was declared and confirmed in manner hereinbefore required, shall be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated; and such declaration, and the receipt of the treasurer of the company for the price of such share, shall constitute a good title to such share; and a certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to such purchaser, and thereupon he shall be deemed the holder of such share, discharged from all calls due prior to such purchase; and he shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money, nor shall his title to such share be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale.

XXXIV. The company shall not sell or transfer more of the shares of any such defaulter than will be sufficient, as nearly as can be ascertained at the time of such sale, to pay the arrears then due from such defaulter on account of any calls, together with interest, and the expenses attending such sale and declaration of forfeiture; and if the money produced by the sale of any such forfeited shares be more than sufficient to pay all arrears of calls and interest thereon due at the time of such sale, and the expenses attending the declaration of forfeiture and sale thereof, the surplus shall, on demand, be paid to the defaulter.

XXXV. If payment of such arrears of calls and interest and expenses be made before any share so forfeited and vested in the Company shall have been sold, such share shall revert to the party to whom the same belonged before such forfeiture, in such manner as if such calls had been duly paid.

And with respect to the remedies of creditors of the company against the shareholders (r), be it enacted as follows:—

XXXVI. If any execution, either at law or in equity, shall have been issued against the property or effects of the company, and if there cannot be found sufficient whereon to levy such execution, then such execution may be issued against any of the shareholders to the extent of their shares respectively in the capital of the company not then paid up: Provided always, that no such execution shall issue against any shareholder except upon an order of the court in which the action, suit or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court after sufficient notice in writing to the persons sought to be charged (s); and upon such motion such court may order execution to issue accordingly; and for the purpose of ascertaining the names of the shareholders, and the amount of capital remaining to be paid upon their respective shares, it shall be lawful for any person entitled to any such execution, at all reasonable times, to inspect the register of shareholders without fee.

XXXVII. If by means of any such execution any shareholder shall have paid any sum of money beyond the amount then due from him in respect of calls, he shall forthwith be reimbursed such additional sum by the directors out of the funds of the company.

And with respect to the borrowing of money by the company on mortgage or bond (t), be it enacted as follows:—

XXXVIII. If the company be authorized by the special act to borrow money on Forfeiture to be confirmed by a general meeting.

Sale of forfeited shares.

Evidence as to forfeiture of shares.

No more shares to be sold than sufficient for payment of calls.

APPENDIX.

Power to re-borrow.	mortgage or bond, it shall be lawful for them, subject to the restrictions contained in the special act, to borrow on mortgage or bond such sums of money as shall from time to time, by an order of a general meeting of the company, be authorized to be borrowed, not exceeding in the whole the sum prescribed by the special act, and for securing the repayment of the money so borrowed, with interest, to mortgage the undertaking, and the future calls on the shareholders, or to give bonds in manner hereinafter mentioned. XXXIX. If, after having borrowed any part of the money so authorized to be borrowed on mortgage or bond, the company pay off the same, it shall be lawful for them again to borrow the amount so paid off, and so from time to time; but such power of reborrowing shall not be exercised without the authority of a general meeting of the company, unless the money be so reborrowed in order to pay off any existing mortgage or bond.
Evidence of authority for borrowing.	XL. Where by the special act the company shall be restricted from borrowing any money on mortgage or bond until a definite portion of their capital shall be subscribed or paid up, or where by this or the special act the authority of a general meeting is required for such borrowing, the certificate of a justice that such definite portion of the capital has been subscribed or paid up, and a copy of the order of a general meeting of the company authorizing the borrowing of any money, certified by one of the directors or by the secretary to be a true copy, shall be sufficient evidence of the fact of the capital required to be subscribed or paid up having been so subscribed or paid up, and of the order for borrowing money having been made; and upon production to any justice of the books of the company, and of such other evidence as he shall think sufficient, such justice shall grant the certificate aforesaid.
Mortgages and bonds to be stamped.	XLI. Every mortgage and bond for securing money borrowed by the company shall be by deed under the common seal of the company, duly stamped, and wherein the consideration shall be truly stated; and every such mortgage deed or bond may be according to the form in the Schedule (C.) or (D.) to this act annexed, or to the like effect (u).
Rights of mortgagees.	XLII. The respective mortgagees shall be entitled one with another to their respective proportions of the tolls, sums, and premises comprised in such mortgages, and of the future calls payable by the shareholders, if comprised therein, according to the respective sums in such mortgages mentioned to be advanced by such mortgagees respectively, and to be repaid the sums so advanced, with interest, without any preference one above another by reason of priority of the date of any such mortgage, or of the meeting at which the same was authorized (x).
Application of calls, notwithstanding mortgage.	XLIII. No such mortgage (although it should comprise future calls on the shareholders) shall, unless expressly so provided, preclude the company from receiving and applying to the purposes of the company any calls to be made by the company.
Rights of obligees.	XLIV. The respective obligees in such bonds shall, proportionally according to the amount of the monies secured thereby, be entitled to be paid, out of the tolls or other property or effects of the company, the respective sums in such bonds mentioned and thereby intended to be secured, without any preference one above another by reason of priority of date of any such bond, or of the meeting at which the same was authorized, or otherwise howsoever (y).
Register of mortgages and bonds.	XLV. A register of mortgages and bonds shall be kept by the secretary, and within fourteen days after the date of any such mortgage or bond an entry or memorial, specifying the number and date of such mortgage or bond, and the sums secured thereby, and the names of the parties thereto, with their proper additions, shall be made in such register; and such register may be perused at all reasonable times by any of the shareholders, or by any mortgagee or bond creditor of the company, or by any person interested in any such mortgage or bond, without fee or reward.
Transfers of mortgages and bonds to be stamped.	XLVI. Any party entitled to any such mortgage or bond may from time to time transfer his right and interest therein to any other person; and every such transfer shall be by deed duly stamped, wherein the consideration shall be truly stated; and every such transfer may be according to the form in Schedule (E.) to this act annexed, or to the like effect.
Transfers of mortgages and bonds to be registered.	XLVII. Within thirty days after the date of every such transfer, if executed within the United Kingdom, or otherwise within thirty days after the arrival thereof in the United Kingdom, it shall be produced to the secretary, and thereupon the secretary shall cause an entry or memorial thereof to be made in the same manner as in the case of the original mortgage; and after such entry every such transfer shall entitle the transferee to the full benefit of the original mortgage or bond in all respects; and no party, having made such transfer, shall have power to make void, release or discharge the mortgage or bond so transferred, or any money thereby secured; and for such entry the company may demand a sum not exceeding the prescribed sum, or, where no sum shall be prescribed, the sum of two shillings and sixpence; and until such entry the company shall not be in any manner responsible to the transferee in respect of such mortgage.
Payment of interest on monies borrowed.	XLVIII. The interest of the money borrowed upon any such mortgage or bond shall be paid at the periods appointed in such mortgage or bond, and, if no period be appointed, half-yearly, to the several parties entitled thereto, and in preference to any dividends payable to the shareholders of the company.

XLIX. The interest on any such mortgage or bond shall not be transferable, except by deed duly stamped.

L. The company may, if they think proper, fix a period for the repayment of the principal money so borrowed, with the interest thereof, and in such case the company shall cause such period to be inserted in the mortgage deed or bond; and upon the expiration of such period the principal sum, together with the arrears of interest thereon, shall, on demand, be paid to the party entitled to such mortgage or bond; and if no other place of payment be inserted in such mortgage deed or bond, such principal and interest shall be payable at the principal office or place of business of the company (z).

LI. If no time be fixed in the mortgage deed or bond for the repayment of the money so borrowed, the party entitled to the mortgage or bond may, at the expiration or at any time after the expiration of twelve months from the date of such mortgage or bond, demand payment of the principal money thereby secured, with all arrears of interest, upon giving six months' previous notice for that purpose; and in the like case the company may at any time pay off the money borrowed, on giving the like notice; and every such notice shall be in writing or print, or both, and if given by a mortgagee or bond creditor shall be delivered to the secretary or left at the principal office of the company, and if given by the company shall be given either personally to such mortgagee or bond creditor or left at his residence, or if such mortgagee or bond creditor be unknown to the directors, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, such notice shall be given by advertisement in the London or Dublin Gazette, according as the principal office of the company shall be in England or Ireland, and in some newspaper as after mentioned.

LII. If the company shall have given notice of their intention to pay off any such mortgage or bond at a time when the same may lawfully be paid off by them, then at the expiration of such notice all further interest shall cease to be payable on such mortgage or bond, unless on demand of payment made pursuant to such notice, or at any time thereafter, the company shall fail to pay the principal and interest due at the expiration of such notice on such mortgage or bond.

LIII. Where by the special act the mortgagees of the company shall be empowered to enforce the payment of the arrears of interest, or the arrears of principal and interest, due on such mortgages, by the appointment of a receiver, then, if within thirty days after the interest accruing upon any such mortgage has become payable, and, after demand thereof in writing, the same be not paid, the mortgagee may, without prejudice to his right to sue for the interest so in arrear in any of the superior courts of law or equity, require the appointment of a receiver, by an application to be made as hereinafter provided: and if within six months after the principal money owing upon any such mortgage has become payable, and after demand thereof in writing the same be not paid, the mortgagee, without prejudice to his right to sue for such principal money, together with all arrears of interest, in any of the superior courts of law or equity, may, if his debt amount to the prescribed sum alone, or, if his debt does not amount to the prescribed sum, he may, in conjunction with other mortgagees whose debts, being so in arrear, after demand as aforesaid, shall, together with his, amount to the prescribed sum, require the appointment of a receiver, by an application to be made as hereinafter provided (a).

LIV. Every application for a receiver in the cases aforesaid shall be made to two justices, and on any such application it shall be lawful for such justices, by order in writing, after hearing the parties, to appoint some person to receive the whole or a competent part of the tolls or sums liable to the payment of such interest, or such principal and interest, as the case may be, until such interest, or until such principal and interest, as the case may be, together with all costs, including the charges of receiving the tolls or sums aforesaid, be fully paid; and upon such appointment being made, all such tolls and sums of money as aforesaid shall be paid to and received by the person so to be appointed; and the money so to be received shall be so much money received by or to the use of the party to whom such interest, or such principal and interest, as the case may be, shall be then due, and on whose behalf such receiver shall have been appointed; and after such interest and costs, or such principal, interest and costs, have been so received, the power of such receiver shall cease.

LV. At all seasonable times the books of accounts of the company shall be open to the inspection of the respective mortgagees and bond creditors thereof, with liberty to take extracts therefrom, without fee or reward.

APPENDIX.

Loans.

Power to convert loan into capital.

New shares to be considered same as original shares.

If old shares at premium, new shares to be offered to the shareholders.

Shares to vest in the parties accepting; otherwise to be disposed of by the directors.

If not at a premium, to be issued as company think fit.

Consolidation of Shares.

Power to consolidate shares into stock.

Proprietors of stock may transfer the same.

Register of stock.

Proprietors of stock entitled to dividends.

And with respect to the conversion of the borrowed money into capital, be it enacted as follows :—

LVI. It shall be lawful for the company, if they think fit, unless it be otherwise provided by the special act, to raise the additional sum so authorized to be borrowed, or any part thereof, by creating new shares of the company, instead of borrowing the same, or having borrowed the same, to continue at interest only a part of such additional sum, and to raise part thereof by creating new shares ; but no such augmentation of capital as aforesaid shall take place without the previous authority of a general meeting of the company.

LVII. The capital so to be raised by the creation of new shares shall be considered as part of the general capital, and shall be subject to the same provisions in all respects, whether with reference to the payment of calls, or the forfeiture of shares on nonpayment of calls, or otherwise, as if it had been part of the original capital, except as to the times of making calls for such additional capital, and the amount of such calls, which respectively it shall be lawful for the company from time to time to fix as they shall think fit.

LVIII. If at the time of any such augmentation of capital taking place by the creation of new shares the then existing shares be at a premium, or of greater actual value than the nominal value thereof, then, unless it be otherwise provided by the special act, the sum so to be raised shall be divided into shares of such amount as will conveniently allow the same to be apportioned among the then shareholders in proportion to the existing shares held by them respectively ; and such new shares shall be offered to the then shareholders in the proportion aforesaid ; and such offer shall be made by letter under the hand of the secretary given to, or sent by post addressed to, each shareholder according to his address in the Shareholders' Address Book, or left at his usual or last place of abode.

LIX. The said new shares shall vest in and belong to the shareholders who shall accept the same, and pay the value thereof to the company at the time and by the instalments which shall be fixed by the company ; and if any shareholder fail for one month after such offer of new shares to accept the same, and pay the instalments called for in respect thereof, it shall be lawful for the company to dispose of such shares in such manner as they shall deem most for the advantage of the company.

LX. If at the time of such augmentation of capital taking place the existing shares be not at a premium, then such new shares may be of such amount, and may be issued in such manner and on such terms, as the company shall think fit.

And with respect to the consolidation of the shares into stock, be it enacted as follows :—

LXI. It shall be lawful for the company from time to time, with the consent of three-fifths of the votes of the shareholders present in person or by proxy at any general meeting of the company, when due notice for that purpose shall have been given, to convert or consolidate all or any part of the shares then existing in the capital of the company, and in respect whereof the whole money subscribed shall have been paid up, into a general capital stock, to be divided amongst the shareholders, according to their respective interests therein.

LXII. After such conversion or consolidation shall have taken place, all the provisions contained in this or the special act which require or imply that the capital of the company shall be divided into shares of any fixed amount, and distinguished by numbers, shall, as to so much of the capital as shall have been so converted or consolidated into stock, cease and be of no effect, and the several holders of such stock may thenceforth transfer their respective interests therein, or any parts of such interests, in the same manner and subject to the same regulations and provisions as or according to which any shares in the capital of the company might be transferred under the provisions of this or the special act ; and the company shall cause an entry to be made in some book, to be kept for that purpose, of every such transfer ; and for every such entry they may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or, if no amount be prescribed, a sum not exceeding two shillings and sixpence.

LXIII. The company shall from time to time cause the names of the several parties who may be interested in any such stock as aforesaid, with the amount of the interest therein possessed by them respectively, to be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose, and to be called "The Register of Holders of Consolidated Stock ;" and such book shall be accessible at all seasonable times to the several holders of shares or stock in the undertaking.

LXIV. The several holders of such stock shall be entitled to participate in the dividends and profits of the company, according to the amount of their respective interests in such stock, and such interests shall, in proportion to the amount thereof, confer on the holders thereof respectively the same privileges and advantages, for the purpose of voting at meetings of the company, qualification for the office of directors, and for other purposes, as would have been conferred by shares of an equal amount in the capital of the company, but so that none of such privileges or advantages, except the participation in the dividends and profits of the company, shall be conferred by any aliquot part of such amount of consolidated stock as would not, if existing in shares, have conferred such privileges or advantages respectively.

LXV. And be it enacted, That all the money raised by the company, whether by subscriptions of the shareholders, or by loan or otherwise, shall be applied, firstly, in paying the costs and expenses incurred in obtaining the special act, and all expenses incident thereto; and, secondly, in carrying the purposes of the company into execution.

And with respect to the general meetings of the company, and the exercise of the right of voting by the shareholders, be it enacted as follows (b):—

LXVI. The first general meeting of the shareholders of the company shall be held within the prescribed time, or, if no time be prescribed, within one month after the passing of the special act, and the future general meetings shall be held at the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed, in the months of February and August in each year, or at such other stated periods as shall be appointed for that purpose by an order of a general meeting; and the meetings so appointed to be held as aforesaid shall be called "ordinary meetings;" and all meetings, whether ordinary or extraordinary, shall be held in the prescribed place, if any, and if no place be prescribed, then at some place to be appointed by the directors.

LXVII. No matters, except such as are appointed by this or the special act to be done at an ordinary meeting, shall be transacted at any such meeting, unless special notice of such matters have been given in the advertisement convening such meeting (c).

LXVIII. Every general meeting of the shareholders, other than an ordinary meeting, shall be called an "extraordinary meeting;" and such meetings may be convened by the directors at such times as they think fit.

LXIX. No extraordinary meeting shall enter upon any business not set forth in the notice upon which it shall have been convened.

LXX. It shall be lawful for the prescribed number of shareholders, holding in the aggregate shares to the prescribed amount, or, where the number of shareholders or amount of shares shall not be prescribed, it shall be lawful for twenty or more shareholders holding in the aggregate not less than one-tenth of the capital of the company, by writing under their hands, at any time to require the directors to call an extraordinary meeting of the company; and such requisition shall fully express the object of the meeting required to be called, and shall be left at the office of the company, or given to at least three directors, or left at their last or usual places of abode; and forthwith upon the receipt of such requisition the directors shall convene a meeting of the shareholders; and if for twenty-one days after such notice the directors fail to call such meeting, the prescribed number, or such other number as aforesaid, of shareholders, qualified as aforesaid, may call such meeting, by giving fourteen days' public notice thereof.

LXXI. Fourteen days' public notice at the least of all meetings, whether ordinary or extraordinary, shall be given by advertisement, which shall specify the place, the day, and the hour of meeting; and every notice of an extraordinary meeting, or of an ordinary meeting, if any other business than the business hereby or by the special act appointed for ordinary meetings is to be done thereat, shall specify the purpose for which the meeting is called (d).

LXXII. In order to constitute a meeting, (whether ordinary or extraordinary,) there shall be present, either personally or by proxy, the prescribed quorum, and if no quorum be prescribed, then shareholders holding in the aggregate not less than one-twentieth of the capital of the company, and being in number not less than one for every five hundred pounds of such required proportion of capital, unless such number would be more than twenty, in which case twenty shareholders, holding not less than one-twentieth of the capital of the company, shall be the quorum; and if within one hour from the time appointed for such meeting the said quorum be not present, no business shall be transacted at the meeting other than the declaring of a dividend, in case that shall be one of the objects of the meeting, but such meeting shall, except in the case of a meeting for the election of directors, hereinafter mentioned, be held to be adjourned sine die.

LXXIII. At every meeting of the company one or other of the following persons shall preside as chairman; that is to say, the chairman of the directors, or in his absence the deputy chairman (if any), or in the absence of the chairman and deputy chairman some one of the directors of the company to be chosen for that purpose by the meeting, or in the absence of the chairman and deputy chairman and of all the directors, any shareholder to be chosen for that purpose by a majority of the shareholders present at such meeting.

LXXIV. The shareholders present at any such meeting shall proceed in the execution of the powers of the company with respect to the matters for which such meeting shall have been convened, and those only; and every such meeting may be adjourned from time to time, and from place to place; and no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which such adjournment took place.

APPENDIX.

Votes of shareholders.

LXXV. At all general meetings of the company every shareholder shall be entitled to vote according to the prescribed scale of voting, and where no scale shall be prescribed every shareholder shall have one vote for every share up to ten, and he shall have an additional vote for every five shares beyond the first ten shares held by him up to one hundred, and an additional vote for every ten shares held by him beyond the first hundred shares: Provided always, that no shareholder shall be entitled to vote at any meeting unless he shall have paid all the calls then due upon the shares held by him.

Manner of voting.

LXXVI. The votes may be given either personally or by proxies (e), being shareholders, authorized by writing according to the form in the Schedule (F.) to this act annexed, or in a form to the like effect, under the hand of the shareholder nominating such proxy, or, if such shareholder be a corporation, then under their common seal; and every proposition at any such meeting shall be determined by the majority of votes of the parties present, including proxies, the chairman of the meeting being entitled to vote, not only as a principal and proxy, but to have a casting vote if there be an equality of votes.

Regulations as to proxies.

LXXVII. No person shall be entitled to vote as a proxy unless the instrument appointing such proxy have been transmitted to the secretary of the company the prescribed period, or, if no period be prescribed, not less than forty-eight hours before the time appointed for holding the meeting at which such proxy is to be used.

Votes of joint shareholders.

LXXVIII. If several persons be jointly entitled to a share, the person whose name stands first in the register of shareholders as one of the holders of such share shall, for the purpose of voting at any meeting, be deemed the sole proprietor thereof; and on all occasions the vote of such first-named shareholder, either in person or by proxy, shall be allowed as the vote in respect of such share, without proof of the concurrence of the other holders thereof.

Votes of lunatics and minors, &c.

LXXIX. If any shareholder be a lunatic or idiot, such lunatic or idiot may vote by his committee; and if any shareholder be a minor, he may vote by his guardian or any one of his guardians; and every such vote may be given either in person or by proxy.

Proof of a particular majority of votes only required in the event of a poll being demanded.

LXXX. Whenever in this or the special act the consent of any particular majority of votes at any meeting of the company is required in order to authorize any proceeding of the company, such particular majority shall only be required to be proved in the event of a poll being demanded at such meeting (f); and if such poll be not demanded, then a declaration by the chairman that the resolution authorizing such proceeding has been carried, and an entry to that effect in the book of proceedings of the company, shall be sufficient authority for such proceeding without proof of the number or proportion of votes recorded in favour of or against the same.

Appointment and Rotation of Directors.

And with respect to the appointment and rotation of directors, be it enacted as follows (g):—

Number of directors.

LXXXI. The number of directors shall be the prescribed number.

Power to vary the number of directors.

LXXXII. Where the company shall be authorized by the special act to increase or to reduce the number of the directors, it shall be lawful for the company from time to time, in general meeting, after due notice for that purpose, to increase or reduce the number of the directors within the prescribed limits, if any, and to determine the order of rotation in which such reduced or increased number shall go out of office, and what number shall be a quorum at their meetings.

Election of directors.

LXXXIII. The directors appointed by the special act shall, unless thereby otherwise provided, continue in office until the first ordinary meeting to be held in the year next after that in which the special act shall have passed; and at such meeting the shareholders present, personally or by proxy, may either continue in office the directors appointed by the special act, or any number of them, or may elect a new body of directors, or directors to supply the places of those not continued in office, the directors appointed by the special act being eligible as members of such new body (h); and at the first ordinary meeting to be held every year thereafter the shareholders present, personally or by proxy, shall elect persons to supply the places of the directors then retiring from office, agreeably to the provisions hereinafter contained; and the several persons elected at any such meeting, being neither removed nor disqualified, nor having resigned, shall continue to be directors until others are elected in their stead, as hereinafter mentioned.

Existing directors continued on failure of meeting for election of directors.

LXXXIV. If at any meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place the prescribed quorum shall not be present within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting, no election of directors shall be made, but such meeting shall stand adjourned to the following day at the same time and place; and if at the meeting so adjourned the prescribed quorum be not present within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting, the existing directors shall continue to act and retain their powers until new directors be appointed at the first ordinary meeting of the following year.

LXXXV. No person shall be capable of being a director unless he be a shareholder, nor unless he be possessed of the prescribed number (if any) of shares; and no person holding an office or place of trust or profit under the company, or interested in any contract with the company (i), shall be capable of being a director; and no director shall be capable of accepting any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or of being interested in any contract with the company, during the time he shall be a director.

LXXXVI. If any of the directors at any time subsequently to his election accept or continue to hold any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or be either directly or indirectly concerned in any contract with the company, or participate in any manner in the profits of any work to be done for the company, or if such director at any time cease to be a holder of the prescribed number of shares in the company, then in any of the cases aforesaid the office of such director shall become vacant, and thenceforth he shall cease from voting or acting as a director (k).

LXXXVII. Provided always, that no person, being a shareholder or member of any incorporated joint-stock company, shall be disqualified or prevented from acting as a director by reason of any contract entered into between such joint-stock company and the company incorporated by the special act; but no such director, being a shareholder or member of such joint-stock company, shall vote on any question as to any contract with such joint-stock company.

LXXXVIII. The directors appointed by the special act, and continued in office as aforesaid, or the directors elected to supply the places of those retiring as aforesaid, shall, subject to the provision hereinbefore contained for increasing or reducing the number of directors, retire from office at the times and in the proportions following, the individuals to retire being in each instance determined by ballot among the directors, unless they shall otherwise agree; (that is to say,)

At the end of the first year after the first election of directors, the prescribed number, and, if no number be prescribed, one-third of such directors, to be determined by ballot among themselves, unless they shall otherwise agree, shall go out of office.

At the end of the second year the prescribed number, and, if no number be prescribed, one-half of the remaining number of such directors, to be determined in like manner, shall go out of office.

At the end of the third year the prescribed number, and, if no number be prescribed, the remainder of such directors, shall go out of office.

And in each instance the places of the retiring directors shall be supplied by an equal number of qualified shareholders; and at the first ordinary meeting in every subsequent year, the prescribed number, and, if no number be prescribed, one-third of the directors, being those who have been longest in office, shall go out of office, and their places shall be supplied in like manner; nevertheless, every director so retiring from office may be re-elected immediately or at any future time, and after such re-election shall, with reference to the going out by rotation, be considered as a new director: Provided always, that, if the prescribed number of directors be some number not divisible by three, and the number of directors to retire be not prescribed, the directors shall in each case determine what number of directors, as nearly one-third as may be, shall go out of office, so that the whole number shall go out of office in three years.

LXXXIX. If any director die, or resign, or become disqualified or incompetent to act as a director, or cease to be a director by any other cause than that of going out of office by rotation as aforesaid, the remaining directors, if they think proper so to do, may elect in his place some other shareholder, duly qualified, to be a director (l); and the shareholder so elected to fill up any such vacancy shall continue in office as a director so long only as the person in whose place he shall have been elected would have been entitled to continue if he had remained in office.

And with respect to the powers of the directors, and the powers of the company to be exercised only in general meeting, be it enacted as follows:—

XC. The directors shall have the management and superintendence of the affairs of the company (m), and they may lawfully exercise all the powers of the company (n), except as to such matters as are directed by this or the special act to be transacted by a general meeting of the company, but all the powers so to be exercised shall be exercised in accordance with and subject to the provisions of this and the special act; and the exercise of all such powers shall be subject also to the control and regulation of any general meeting specially convened for the purpose, but not so as to render invalid any act done by the directors prior to any resolution passed by such general meeting.

XCI. Except as otherwise provided by the special act, the following powers of the company (that is to say), the choice and removal of the directors, except as hereinbefore mentioned, and the increasing or reducing of their number where authorized by the special act, the choice of auditors, the determination as to the remuneration of the directors, auditors, treasurer and secretary, the determination as to the amount of money to be borrowed on mortgage, the determination as to the augmentation of capital, and the declaration of dividends, shall be exercised only at a general meeting of the company.

And with respect to the proceedings and liabilities of the directors, be it enacted as follows (o):—

XCII. The directors shall hold meetings at such times as they shall appoint for the purpose, and they may meet and adjourn as they think proper, from time to time, and from place to place (p); and at any time any two of the directors may require the secretary to call a meeting of the directors, and in order to constitute a meeting of directors, there shall be present at the least the prescribed quorum, and when no quorum shall be prescribed, there shall be present at least one-third of the directors; and all questions at any such meeting shall be determined by the majority of votes of the directors present, and in case of an equal division of votes, the chairman shall have a casting vote in addition to his vote as one of the directors.

XCIII. At the first meeting of directors held after the passing of the special act, and at the first meeting of the directors held after each annual appointment of directors, the directors present at such meeting shall choose one of the directors to act as chairman of the directors for the year following such choice, and shall also, if they think fit, choose another director to act as deputy-chairman for the same period; and if the chairman or deputy-chairman die or resign, or cease to be a director, or otherwise become disqualified to act, the directors present at the meeting next after the occurrence of such vacancy shall choose some other of the directors to fill such vacancy; and every such chairman or deputy-chairman so elected as last aforesaid shall continue in office so long only as the person in whose place he may be so elected would have been entitled to continue if such death, resignation, removal, or disqualification had not happened.

XCIV. If at any meeting of the directors neither the chairman nor deputy-chairman be present, the directors present shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

XCV. It shall be lawful for the directors to appoint one or more committees, consisting of such number of directors as they think fit, within the prescribed limits, if any, and they may grant to such committees respectively power on behalf of the company to do any acts relating to the affairs of the company which the directors could lawfully do, and which they shall from time to time think proper to entrust to them.

XCVI. The said committees may meet from time to time, and may adjourn from place to place, as they think proper, for carrying into effect the purposes of their appointment; and no such committee shall exercise the powers entrusted to them except at a meeting at which there shall be present the prescribed quorum, or, if no quorum be prescribed, then a quorum to be fixed for that purpose by the general body of directors; and at all meetings of the committees one of the members present shall be appointed chairman; and all questions at any meeting of the committee shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman shall have a casting vote, in addition to his vote as a member of the committee.

XCVII. The power which may be granted to any such committee to make contracts, as well as the power of the directors to make contracts on behalf of the company, may lawfully be exercised as follows (q); (that is to say,)

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing and under seal (r), such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company in writing, and under the common seal of the company, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same.

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing, and signed by the parties to be charged therewith, then such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company in writing, signed by such committee or any two of them, or any two of the directors, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same.

And all contracts made according to the provisions herein contained shall be effectual in law, and shall be binding upon the company and their successors, and all other parties thereto, their heirs, executors or administrators, as the case may be; and on any default in the execution of any such contract, either by the company or any other party thereto, such actions or suits may be brought, either by or against the company, as might be brought had the same contracts been made between private persons only (s).

XCVIII. The directors shall cause notes, minutes, or copies, as the case may require, of all appointments made or contracts entered into by the directors, and of the orders and proceedings of all meetings of the company, and of the directors and committees of directors, to be duly entered in books, to be from time to time provided for the purpose, which shall be kept under the superintendence of the directors (t); and every such entry shall be signed by the chairman of such meeting: and such entry, so signed, shall be received as evidence in all courts, and before all judges, justices, and others, without proof of such respective meetings have been duly convened or held, or of the persons making or entering such orders or proceedings being shareholders or directors or members of committee respectively, or of the signature of the chairman, or of the fact of his having been chairman, all of which last-mentioned matters shall be presumed until the contrary be proved.

XCIX. All acts done by any meeting of the directors, or of a committee of directors, or by any person acting as a director, shall, notwithstanding it may be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such directors or persons acting as aforesaid, or that they or any of them were or was disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director.

C. No director, by being party to or executing in his capacity of director any contract, or other instrument on behalf of the company, or otherwise lawfully executing any of the powers given to the directors, shall be subject to be sued or prosecuted, either individually or collectively, by any person whomsoever (u); and the bodies or goods or lands of the directors shall not be liable to execution of any legal process by reason of any contract or other instrument so entered into, signed or executed by them, or by reason of any other lawful act done by them in the execution of any of their powers as directors; and the directors, their heirs, executors and administrators, shall be indemnified out of the capital of the company for all payments made or liability incurred in respect of any acts done by them, and for all losses, costs and damages which they may incur in the execution of the powers granted to them; and the directors for the time being of the company may apply the existing funds and capital of the company for the purposes of such indemnity, and may, if necessary for that purpose, make calls of the capital remaining unpaid (if any).

And with respect to the appointment and duties of auditors, be it enacted as follows (x):—

CI. Except where by the special act auditors shall be directed to be appointed otherwise than by the company, the company shall, at the first ordinary meeting after the passing of the special act, elect the prescribed number of auditors, and, if no number is prescribed, two auditors, in like manner as is provided for the election of directors; and at the first ordinary meeting of the company in each year thereafter the company shall in like manner elect an auditor to supply the place of the auditor then retiring from office, according to the provision hereinafter contained; and every auditor elected as hereinbefore provided, being neither removed nor disqualified, nor having resigned, shall continue to be an auditor until another be elected in his stead.

CII. Where no other qualification shall be prescribed by the special act, every auditor shall have at least one share in the undertaking; and he shall not hold any office in the company, nor be in any other manner interested in its concerns, except as a shareholder.

CIII. One of such auditors (to be determined in the first instance by ballot between themselves, unless they shall otherwise agree, and afterwards by seniority) shall go out of office at the first ordinary meeting in each year; but the auditor so going out shall be immediately re-eligible, and after any such re-election shall, with respect to the going out of office by rotation, be deemed a new auditor.

CIV. If any vacancy takes place among the auditors in the course of the current year, then at any general meeting of the company the vacancy may, if the company think fit, be supplied by election of the shareholders.

directors ought to be chosen shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to any ordinary meeting at which an auditor ought to be appointed.

CVI. The directors shall deliver to such auditors the half-yearly or other periodical accounts and balance sheet fourteen days at the least before the ensuing ordinary meeting at which the same are required to be produced to the shareholders, as hereinafter provided.

CVII. It shall be the duty of such auditors to receive from the directors the half-yearly or other periodical accounts and balance sheet required to be presented to the shareholders, and to examine the same.

CVIII. It shall be lawful for the auditors to employ such accountants and other persons as they may think proper, at the expense of the company, and they shall either make a special report on the said accounts, or simply confirm the same; and such report or confirmation shall be read, together with the report of the directors, at the ordinary meeting.

And with respect to the accountability of the officers of the company (y), be it enacted as follows:—

CIX. Before any person entrusted with the custody or control of monies, whether treasurer, collector, or other officer of the company, shall enter upon his office, the directors shall take sufficient security from him for the faithful execution of his office.

CX. Every officer employed by the company shall from time to time, when required by the directors, make out and deliver to them, or to any person appointed by them for that purpose, a true and perfect account in writing, under his hand, of all monies received by him on behalf of the company; and such account shall state how, and to whom, and for what purpose, such monies shall have been disposed of; and, together with such account, such officer shall deliver the vouchers and receipts for such payments; and every such officer shall pay to the directors, or to any person appointed by them to receive the same, all monies which shall appear to be owing from him upon the balance of such accounts.

CXI. If any such officer fail to render such account, or to produce and deliver up all the vouchers and receipts relating to the same in his possession or power, or to pay the balance thereof when thereunto required, or if, for three days after being thereunto required, he fail to deliver up to the directors, or to any person appointed by them to receive the same, all papers and writings, property, effects, matters and things in his possession or power relating to the execution of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, or belonging to the company, then, on complaint thereof being made to a justice, such justice shall summon such officer to appear before two or more justices, at a time and place to be set forth in such summons, to answer such charge; and upon the appearance of such officer, or, in his absence, upon proof that such summons was personally served upon him, or left at his last known place of abode, such justices may hear and determine the matter in a summary way, and may adjust and declare the balance owing by such officer; and if it appear, either upon confession of such officer, or upon evidence, or upon inspection of the account, that any monies of the company are in the hands of such officer, or owing by him to the company, such justices may order such officer to pay the same; and if he fail to pay the amount, it shall be lawful for such justices to grant a warrant to levy the same by distress, or, in default thereof, to commit the offender to gaol, there to remain without bail for a period not exceeding three months, unless the same be sooner paid.

CXII. If any such officer refuse to make out such account in writing, or to produce and deliver to the justices the several vouchers and receipts relating thereto, or to deliver up any books, papers or writings, property, effects, matters or thing in his possession or power belonging to the company, such justices may lawfully commit such offender to gaol, there to remain until he shall have delivered up all the vouchers and receipts (if any) in his possession or power relating to such accounts, and have delivered up all books, papers, writings, property, effects, matters and things (if any) in his possession or power belonging to the company.

CXIII. Provided always, that if any director or other person acting on behalf of the company shall make oath that he has good reason to believe, upon grounds to be stated in his deposition, and does believe, that it is the intention of any such officer as aforesaid to abscond, it shall be lawful for the justice before whom the complaint is made, instead of issuing his summons, to issue his warrant for the bringing such officer before such two justices as aforesaid; but no person executing such warrant shall keep such officer in custody longer than twenty-four hours, without bringing him before some justice; and it shall be lawful for the justice before whom such officer may be brought either to discharge such officer, if he think there is no sufficient ground for his detention, or to order such officer to be detained in custody, so as to be brought before two justices, at a time and place to be named in such order, unless such officer give bail to the satisfaction of such justice for his appearance before such justices, to answer the complaint of the company.

CXIV. No such proceeding against, or dealing with, any such officer as aforesaid shall deprive the company of any remedy which they might otherwise have against such officer, or any surety of such officer.

(y) See the cases on this subject, ante, 83, text.

APPENDIX.

And with respect to the keeping of accounts, and the right of inspection thereof by the shareholders (z), be it enacted as follows:—

CXV. The directors shall cause full and true accounts to be kept of all sums of money received or expended on account of the company by the directors, and all persons employed by or under them, and of the matters and things for which such sums of money shall have been received or disbursed and paid.

Accounts.

Accounts to be kept.

CXVI. The books of the company shall be balanced at the prescribed periods; and, if no periods be prescribed, fourteen days at least before each ordinary meeting; and forthwith, on the books being so balanced, an exact balance sheet shall be made up, which shall exhibit a true statement of the capital stock, credits and property of every description belonging to the company, and the debts due by the company at the date of making such balance sheet, and a distinct view of the profit or loss which shall have arisen on the transactions of the company in the course of the preceding half-year; and, previously to each ordinary meeting, such balance sheet shall be examined by the directors, or any three of their number, and shall be signed by the chairman or deputy chairman of the directors.

Books to be balanced.

CXVII. The books so balanced, together with such balance sheet as aforesaid, shall for the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed, for fourteen days previous to each ordinary meeting, and for one month thereafter, be open for the inspection of the shareholders at the principal office or place of business of the company; but the shareholders shall not be entitled at any time, except during the periods aforesaid, to demand the inspection of such books, unless in virtue of a written order, signed by three of the directors.

Inspection of accounts by shareholders at stated times.

CXVIII. The directors shall produce to the shareholders assembled at such ordinary meeting the said balance sheet, applicable to the period immediately preceding such meeting, together with the report of the auditors thereon as hereinbefore provided.

Balance sheet to be produced at the meeting.

CXIX. The directors shall appoint a book-keeper to enter the accounts aforesaid in books to be provided for the purpose; and every such book-keeper shall permit any shareholder to inspect such books, and to take copies or extracts therefrom, at any reasonable time during the prescribed periods, and, if no periods be prescribed, during one fortnight before and one month after every ordinary meeting: and if he fail to permit any such shareholder to inspect such books, or take extracts or copies therefrom, during the periods aforesaid, he shall forfeit to such shareholder, for every such offence, a sum not exceeding five pounds.

Book-keeper to allow inspection of the accounts at the appointed times.

And with respect to the making of dividends (a), be it enacted as follows:—

Dividends.

CXX. Previously to every ordinary meeting at which a dividend is intended to be declared, the directors shall cause a scheme to be prepared, showing the profits (if any) of the company for the period current since the preceding ordinary meeting at which a dividend was declared, and apportioning the same, or so much thereof as they may consider applicable to the purposes of dividend, among the shareholders, according to the shares held by them respectively, the amount paid thereon, and the periods during which the same may have been paid, and shall exhibit such scheme at such ordinary meeting, and at such meeting a dividend may be declared according to such scheme.

Previously to declaration of dividends, a scheme to be prepared.

CXXI. The company shall not make any dividend whereby their capital stock will be in any degree reduced: Provided always, that the word "dividend" shall not be construed to apply to a return of any portion of the capital stock, with the consent of all the mortgagees and bond creditors of the company, due notice being given for that purpose at an extraordinary meeting to be convened for that object.

Dividend not to be made so as to reduce capital.

CXXII. Before apportioning the profits to be divided among the shareholders, the directors may, if they think fit, set aside thereout such sum as they may think proper to meet contingencies, or for enlarging, repairing or improving the works connected with the undertaking, or any part thereof, and may divide the balance only among the shareholders.

Power to directors to set apart fund for contingencies.

CXXIII. No dividend shall be paid in respect of any share until all calls then due in respect of that and every other share held by the person to whom such dividend may be payable shall have been paid.

Dividend not to be paid unless all calls paid.

And with respect to the making of bye-laws, be it enacted as follows:—

Bye-laws.

CXXIV. It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to make such bye-laws as they think fit, for the purpose of regulating the conduct of the officers and servants of the company, and for providing for the due management of the affairs of the company in all respects whatsoever, and from time to time to alter or repeal any such bye-laws, and make others, provided such bye-laws be not repugnant to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom where the same are to have effect, or to the provisions of this or the special act; and such bye-laws shall be reduced into writing, and shall have affixed thereto the common seal of the company; and a copy of such bye-laws shall be given to every officer and servant of the company affected thereby.

CXXV. It shall be lawful for the company, by such bye-laws, to impose such reasonable penalties upon all persons, being officers or servants of the company, offending against such bye-laws, as the company think fit, not exceeding five pounds for any one offence.

CXXVI. All the bye-laws to be made by the company shall be so framed as to allow the justice before whom any penalty imposed thereby may be sought to be recovered, to order a part only of such penalty to be paid, if such justice shall think fit.

CXXVII. The production of a written or printed copy of the bye-laws of the company, having the common seal of the company affixed thereto, shall be sufficient evidence of such bye-laws, in all cases of prosecution under the same.

And with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration (b), be it enacted as follows:—

CXXVIII. When any dispute authorized or directed by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator, each party, on the request of the other party, shall, by writing under his hand, nominate and appoint an arbitrator, to whom such dispute shall be referred; and after any such appointment shall have been made, neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as such revocation; and if, for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing shall have been served by the one party on the other party to appoint an arbitrator, such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbitrator, then, upon such failure, the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbitrator, may appoint such arbitrator to act on behalf of both parties, and such arbitrator may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute; and in such case the award or determination of such single arbitrator shall be final.

CXXIX. If before the matters so referred shall be determined any arbitrator appointed by either party die, or become incapable, or refuse, or for seven days neglect to act as arbitrator, the party by whom such arbitrator was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place; and if for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose he fail to do so, the remaining or other arbitrator may proceed ex parte; and every arbitrator so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbitrator at the time of such his death, refusal or disability as aforesaid.

CXXX. Where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrators shall, before they enter upon the matters referred to them, nominate and appoint by writing under their hands an umpire to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ; and if such umpire shall die, or refuse or for seven days neglect to act, they shall forthwith after such death, refusal, or neglect, appoint another umpire in his place; and the decision of every such umpire on the matters so referred to him shall be final.

CXXXI. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbitrators shall refuse, or shall, for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration, neglect to appoint an umpire, it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they think fit, in any case in which a railway company shall be one party to the arbitration, on the application of either party to such arbitration, to appoint an umpire; and the decision of such umpire on the matters on which the arbitrators shall differ shall be final.

CXXXII. The said arbitrators or their umpire may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose.

CXXXIII. Except where by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, it shall be otherwise provided, the costs of and attending every such arbitration to be determined by the arbitrators shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators or their umpires, as the case may be.

CXXXIV. The submission to any such arbitration may be made a rule of any of the superior courts, on the application of either of the parties.

And with respect to the giving of notices (c), be it enacted as follows:—

CXXXV. Any summons or notice, or any writ or other proceeding at law or in equity, requiring to be served upon the company, may be served by the same being left at, or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given personally to the secretary, or, in case there be no secretary, then by being given to any one director of the company.

CXXXVI. Notices requiring to be served by the company upon the shareholders may,

(c) This is applicable to the service of a declaration in ejectment. Doe d. Burgess v. Roe, 4 Dow. & L. 311; 16 M. & W. 98.

unless expressly required to be served personally, be served by the same being transmitted through the post, directed according to the registered address or other known address of the shareholder, within such period as to admit of its being delivered in the due course of delivery within the period (if any) prescribed for the giving of such notice; and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that such notice was properly directed, and that it was so put into the post-office.

CXXXVII. All notices directed to be given to the shareholders shall, with respect to any share to which persons are jointly entitled, be given to whichever of the said persons shall be named first in the register of shareholders; and notice so given shall be sufficient notice to all the proprietors of such share.

CXXXVIII. All notices required by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, to be given by advertisement, shall be advertised in the prescribed newspaper, or, if no newspaper be prescribed, or if the prescribed newspaper cease to be published, in a newspaper circulating in the district within which the company's principal place of business shall be situate (d).

CXXXIX. Every summons, notice, or other such document requiring authentication by the company, may be signed by two directors, or by the treasurer or the secretary of the company, and need not be under the common seal of the company, and the same may be in writing or in print, or partly in writing and partly in print.

CXL. And be it enacted, That, if any person against whom the company shall have any claim or demand become bankrupt, or take the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, it shall be lawful for the secretary or treasurer of the company, in all proceedings against the estate of such bankrupt or insolvent, or under any fiat, sequestration or act of insolvency against such bankrupt or insolvent, to represent the company, and act in their behalf, in all respects as if such claim or demand had been the claim or demand of such secretary or treasurer, and not of the company (e).

CXLI. And be it enacted, That, if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special act, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if, before action brought in respect thereof, such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the court where such action shall be pending, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit; and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defendants are allowed to pay money into court.

And with respect to the recovery of damages not specially provided for, and penalties (f), be it enacted as follows:—

CXLII. In all cases where any damages, costs or expenses are by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, directed to be paid, and the method of ascertaining the amount or enforcing the payment thereof is not provided for, such amount, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by two justices; and if the amount so ascertained be not paid by the company or other party liable to pay the same within seven days after demand, the amount may be recovered by distress of the goods of the company or other party liable as aforesaid; and the justices by whom the same shall have been ordered to be paid, or either of them, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

CXLIII. If sufficient goods of the company cannot be found whereon to levy any such damages, costs or expenses, payable by the company, the same may, if the amount thereof do not exceed twenty pounds, be recovered by distress of the goods of the treasurer of the company; and the justices aforesaid, or either of them, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly; but no such distress shall issue against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days' previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress as aforesaid, he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all costs and expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the company coming into his custody or control, or he may sue the company for the same.

CXLIV. Where in this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, any question of compensation, expenses, charges or damages is referred to the determination of any one justice, or more, it shall be lawful for any justice, upon the application of either party, to summon the other party to appear before one justice, or before two justices, as the case may require, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and upon the appearance of such parties, or, in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such one justice, or such two justices, as the case may be, to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties, or any of them, and their witnesses, on oath; and the costs of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such justices, and they shall determine the amount thereof.

APPENDIX.

Publication of penalties.

Penalty for defacing boards used for such publication.

CXLV. The company shall publish the short particulars of the several offences for which any penalty is imposed by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law of the company affecting other persons than the shareholders, officers or servants of the company, and of the amount of every such penalty, and shall cause such particulars to be painted on a board, or printed upon paper and pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal place of business of the company, and where any such penalties are of local application shall cause such boards to be affixed in some conspicuous place in the immediate neighbourhood to which such penalties are applicable or have reference; and such particulars shall be renewed as often as the same or any part thereof is obliterated or destroyed; and no such penalty shall be recoverable unless it shall have been published and kept published in the manner hereinbefore required.

Penalties to be summarily recovered before two justices.

CXLVI. If any person pull down or injure any board put up or affixed as required by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, for the purpose of publishing any bye-law or penalty, or shall obliterate any of the letters or figures thereon, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding five pounds, and shall defray the expenses attending the restoration of such board.

CXLVII. Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two justices; and on complaint being made to any justice he shall issue a summons, requiring the party complained against to appear before two justices at a time and place to be named in such summons; and every such summons shall be served on the party offending, either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or, in his absence, after proof of the due service of such summons, it shall be lawful for two justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and that although no information in writing or in print shall have been exhibited before them, and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such costs attending the conviction as such justices shall think fit.

Penalties may be levied by distress.

CXLVIII. If forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such costs as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and costs shall be levied by distress; and such justices, or either of them, shall issue their or his warrant of distress accordingly.

Imprisonment in default of distress.

CXLIX. It shall be lawful for any such justice to order any offender so convicted as aforesaid to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to the warrant of distress to be issued for levying such penalty or forfeiture and costs, unless the offender give sufficient security, by way of recognizance or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the justice, for his appearance before him on the day appointed for such return, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking such security; but if before issuing such warrant of distress it shall appear to the justice, by the admission of the offender or otherwise, that no sufficient distress can be had within the jurisdiction of such justice whereon to levy such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, he may, if he thinks fit, refrain from issuing such warrant of distress; and in such case, or if such warrant shall have been issued, and upon the return thereof such insufficiency as aforesaid shall be made to appear to the justice, then such justice shall, by warrant, cause such offender to be committed to gaol, there to remain without bail for any term not exceeding three months, unless such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, be sooner paid and satisfied.

Distress how to be levied.

CL. Where in this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty or otherwise, is directed to be levied by distress, such sum of money shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party liable to pay the same; and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and chattels, after satisfying such sum of money, and the expenses of the distress and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been distrained.

Distress not unlawful for want of form.

CLI. No distress levied by virtue of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall such party be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

Application of penalties.

CLII. The justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed may, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, award not more than one-half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed for the benefit of the poor of such parish; or, if the place wherein the offence shall have been committed shall be extra-parochial, then such justices shall direct such remainder to be applied for the benefit of the poor of such extra-parochial place, or of any adjoining parish or district, and shall order the same to be paid over to the proper officer for that purpose.

CLIII. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before a justice, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CLIV. If, through any act, neglect or default on account whereof any person shall have incurred any penalty imposed by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, any damage to the property of the company shall have been committed by such person, he shall be liable to make good such damage, as well as to pay such penalty; and the amount of such damages shall, in case of dispute, be determined by the justices by whom the party incurring such penalty shall have been convicted; and on non-payment of such damages, on demand, the same shall be levied by distress, and such justices, or one of them, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

CLV. It shall be lawful for any justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such justice shall have jurisdiction, under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath or to give evidence before such justice, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds for every such offence.

CLVI. It shall be lawful for any officer or agent of the company, and all persons called by him to his assistance, to seize and detain any person who shall have committed any offence against the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such officer or agent, and convey him, with all convenient dispatch, before some justice, without any warrant or other authority than this or the special act, and such justice shall proceed with all convenient dispatch to the hearing and determining of the complaint against such offender.

CLVII. The justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule (G.) to this act annexed.

CLVIII. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of the superior courts.

CLIX. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any justice with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the general quarter sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, or unless ten days' notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the court thereon.

CLX. At the quarter sessions for which such notice shall be given the court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the costs, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special act by all the parties interested, be it enacted as follows:—

CLXI. The company shall, at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special act, keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special act, printed by the printers to her Majesty, or some of them; and where the undertaking shall be a railway, canal or other like undertaking, the works of which shall not be con-

8 & 9 VICT. c. 18.

An Act for consolidating in One Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the taking of Lands for Undertakings of a Public Nature.

[8th May, 1845.]

Whereas it is expedient to comprise in one general act sundry provisions usually introduced into acts of parliament relative to the acquisition of lands required for undertakings or works of a public nature, and to the compensation to be made for the same, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several acts relating to such undertakings as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves: May it therefore please your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That this act shall apply to every undertaking authorized by any act which shall hereafter be passed, and which shall authorize the purchase or taking of lands for such undertaking, and this act shall be incorporated with such act (i); and all the clauses and provisions of this act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such act, shall apply to the undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same shall be applicable to such undertaking, and shall, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other act which shall be incorporated with such act, form part of such act, and be construed, together therewith, as forming one act (k).

APPENDIX.

Interpretations in this act:

And with respect to the construction of this act and of acts to be incorporated therewith, be it enacted as follows:—

“special act;”

II. The expression “the special act,” used in this act, shall be construed to mean any act which shall be hereafter passed which shall authorize the taking of lands for the undertaking to which the same relates, and with which this act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word “prescribed,” used in this act in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special act, and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if, instead of the word “prescribed,” the expression “prescribed for that purpose in the special act” had been used; and the expression “the works” or “the undertaking” shall mean the works or undertaking, of whatever nature, which shall by the special act be authorized to be executed; and the expression “the promoters of the undertaking” shall mean the parties, whether company, undertakers, commissioners, trustees, corporations or private persons, by the special act empowered to execute such works or undertaking.

“the undertaking;”

“promoters of the undertaking.”

Interpretations in this and the special act:

III. The following words and expressions, both in this and the special act, shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something either in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say),— number;

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number;

gender;

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females;

“lands;”

The word “lands” shall extend to messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments of any tenure;

“lease;”

The word “lease” shall include an agreement for a lease;

“month;”

The word “month” shall mean calendar month;

“superior courts;”

The expression “superior courts” shall mean her Majesty’s superior courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, as the case may require;

“oath;”

The word “oath” shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, or other declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other persons exempted by law from the necessity of taking an oath;

“county;”

The word “county” shall include any riding or other like division of a county, and shall also include county of a city or county of a town;

“the sheriff;”

The word “sheriff” shall include under-sheriff; or other legally competent deputy (l); and where any matter in relation to any lands is required to be done by any sheriff, or by any clerk of the peace, the expression “the sheriff,” or the expression “the clerk of the peace,” shall in such case be construed to mean the sheriff or the clerk of the peace of the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port or place where such lands shall be situate; and if the lands in question, being the property of one and the same party, be situate not wholly in one county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port or place, the same expression shall be construed to mean the sheriff or clerk of the peace of any county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port or place where any part of such lands shall be situate;

“the clerk of the peace;”

The word “justices” shall mean justices of the peace acting for the county, city, liberty, cinque port or place where the matter requiring the cognizance of any such justice shall arise, and who shall not be interested in the matter; and where such matter shall arise in respect of lands, being the property of one and the same party, situate not wholly in any one county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port or place, the same shall mean a justice acting for the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port or place where any part of such lands shall be situate, and who shall not be interested in such matter; and where any matter shall be authorized or required to be done by two justices, the expression “two justices” shall be understood to mean two justices assembled and acting together (m);

“two justices;”

“owner;”

Where under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, any notice shall be required to be given to the owner of any lands, or where any act shall be authorized or required to be done with the consent of any such owner, the word “owner” shall be understood to mean any person or corporation who, under the provisions of this or the special act, would be enabled to sell and convey lands to the promoters of the undertaking;

(k) See Re Westminster Bridge Act, 1859; 33 L. J. (Ch.) 372.

(l) This does not prevent a warrant to hold an inquisition from being directed to the sheriff in cases where the under-sheriff is disqualified by interest. Worsley v. South Devon R. Co., 20 Law J. (Q. B.) 254.

(m) As to what may be done under this act by one justice of the metropolitan police courts, see 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 14.

The expression "the Bank" shall mean the Bank of England where the same shall relate to monies to be paid or deposited in respect of lands situate in England, and shall mean the Bank of Ireland where the same shall relate to monies to be paid or deposited in respect of lands situate in Ireland.

APPENDIX.

"the Bank."

IV. And be it enacted, That in citing this act in other acts of parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expressssion "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845."

Short title of the act.

V. And whereas it may be convenient in some cases to incorporate with acts of parliament hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this act; be it therefore enacted, That, for the purpose of making any such incorporation, it shall be sufficient in any such act to enact that the clauses of this act with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated, (describing such matter as it is described in this act in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter), shall be incorporated with such act, and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such act, form part of such act, and such act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such act shall relate.

Form in which portions of this act may be incorporated with other acts.

And with respect to the purchase of lands by agreement (n), be it enacted as follows (o):—

Purchase of Lands by Agreement.

VI. Subject to the provisions of this and the special act it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to agree with the owners of any lands by the special act authorized to be taken, and which shall be required for the purposes of such act, and with all parties having any estate or interest in such lands, or by this or the special act enabled to sell and convey the same, for the absolute purchase, for a consideration in money, of any such lands, or such parts thereof as they shall think proper, and of all estates and interests in such lands of what kind soever.

Power to purchase lands by agreement.

VII. It shall be lawful for all parties, being seised, possessed of, or entitled to any such lands, or any estate or interest therein, to sell and convey or release the same to the promoters of the undertaking, and to enter into all necessary agreements for that purpose; and particularly it shall be lawful for all or any of the following parties so seised, possessed, or entitled as aforesaid so to sell, convey, or release; (that is to say), all corporations, tenants in tail or for life, married women seised in their own right, or entitled to dower, guardians, committees of lunatics and idiots, trustees or feoffees in trust for charitable or other purposes, executors and administrators, and all parties for the time being entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits of any such lands in possession or subject to any estate in dower, or to any lease for life, or for lives and years, or for years, or any less interest; and the power so to sell and convey or release as aforesaid may lawfully be exercised by all such parties, other than married women entitled to dower, or lessees for life or for lives and years, or for years, or for any less interest, not only on behalf of themselves and their respective heirs, executors, administrators and successors, but also for and on behalf of every person entitled in reversion, remainder, or expectancy after them or in defeasance of the estates of such parties, and as to such married women, whether they be of full age or not, as if they were sole and of full age, and as to such guardians, on behalf of their wards, and as to such committees, on behalf of the lunatics and idiots of whom they are the committees respectively, and that to the same extent as such wives, wards, lunatics, and idiots respectively could have exercised the same power under the authority of this or the special act if they had respectively been under no disability, and as to such trustees, executors and administrators, on behalf of their cestui que trusts, whether infants, issue unborn, lunatics, femmes covert, or other persons, and that to the same extent as such cestui que trusts respectively could have exercised the same powers under the authority of this and the special act as if they had respectively been under no disability.

Parties under disability enabled to sell and convey.

VIII. The power hereinafter given to enfranchise copyhold lands, as well as every other power required to be exercised by the lord of any manor pursuant to the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, and the power to release lands from any rent, charge, or incumbrance, and to agree for the apportionment of any such rent, charge, or incumbrance, shall extend to and may lawfully be exercised by every party hereinbefore enabled to sell and convey or release lands to the promoters of the undertaking.

Parties under disability to exercise other powers.

IX. The purchase money or compensation to be paid for any lands to be purchased or taken from any party under any disability or incapacity, and not having power to sell or convey such lands except under the provisions of this or the special act, and the com-

Amount of compensation in case of parties under

(n) These clauses are extended to purchases of land, &c. for public purposes, by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, s. 6, post.

disability to be ascertained by valuation, and paid into the Bank.

Where vendor absolutely entitled, lands may be sold on chief rents.

Payment of rents to be charged on tolls.

Power to purchase lands required for additional accommodation.

Authority to sell and repurchase such lands.

Restraint on purchase from incapacitated persons.

Municipal corporations not to sell without the approbation of the Treasury.

Purchase of Lands otherwise than by Agreement.

compensation to be paid for any permanent damage or injury to any such lands, shall not, except where the same shall have been determined by the verdict of a jury, or by arbitration, or by the valuation of a surveyor appointed by two justices under the provision hereinafter contained, be less than shall be determined by the valuation of two able practical surveyors, one of whom shall be nominated by the promoters of the undertaking, and the other by the other party, and if such two surveyors cannot agree in the valuation, then by such third surveyor as any two justices shall, upon application of either party, after notice to the other party, for that purpose nominate; and each of such two surveyors if they agree, or if not then the surveyor nominated by the said justices, shall annex to the valuation a declaration in writing, subscribed by them or him, of the correctness thereof; and all such purchase-money or compensation shall be deposited in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested, in manner hereinafter mentioned.

X. It shall be lawful for any person, seised in fee of, or entitled to dispose of absolutely for his own benefit (p), any lands authorized to be purchased for the purposes of the special act, to sell and convey such lands or any part thereof unto the promoters of the undertaking, in consideration of an annual rent-charge payable by the promoters of the undertaking, but, except as aforesaid, the consideration to be paid for the purchase of any such lands, or for any damage done thereto, shall be in a gross sum (q).

XI. The yearly rents reserved by any such conveyance shall be charged on the tolls or rates, if any, payable under the special act, and shall be otherwise secured in such manner as shall be agreed between the parties, and shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking as such rents become payable; and if at any time any such rents be not paid within thirty days after they so become payable, and after demand thereof in writing, the person to whom any such rents shall be payable may either recover the same from the promoters of the undertaking, with costs of suit, by action of debt in any of the superior courts, or it shall be lawful for him to levy the same by distress of the goods and chattels of the promoters of the undertaking (r).

XII. In case the promoters of the undertaking shall be empowered by the special act to purchase lands for extraordinary purposes, it shall be lawful for all parties who, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, would be enabled to sell and convey lands, to sell and convey the lands so authorized to be purchased for extraordinary purposes.

XIII. It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to sell the lands which they shall have so acquired for extraordinary purposes, or any part thereof, in such manner, and for such considerations, and to such persons, as the promoters of the undertaking may think fit, and again to purchase other lands for the like purposes, and afterwards sell the same, and so from time to time; but the total quantity of land to be held at any one time by the promoters of the undertaking, for the purposes aforesaid, shall not exceed the prescribed quantity.

XIV. The promoters of the undertaking shall not, by virtue of the power to purchase land for extraordinary purposes, purchase more than the prescribed quantity from any party under legal disability, or who would not be able to sell and convey such lands except under the powers of this and the special act; and if the promoters of the undertaking purchase the said quantity of land from any party under such legal disability, and afterwards sell the whole or any part of the land so purchased, it shall not be lawful for any party being under legal disability to sell to the promoters of the undertaking any other lands in lieu of the lands so sold or disposed of by them.

XV. Nothing in this or the special act contained shall enable any municipal corporation to sell for the purposes of the special act, without the approbation of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any three of them, any lands which they could not have sold without such approbation before the passing of the special act, other than such lands as the company are by the powers of this or the special act empowered to purchase or take compulsorily (s).

And with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement (t), be it enacted as follows (u):—

XVI. Where the undertaking is intended to be carried into effect by means of a capital to be subscribed by the promoters of the undertaking, the whole of the capital or estimated sum for defraying the expenses of the undertaking shall be subscribed under contract binding the parties thereto, their heirs, executors and administrators, for the payment of the several sums by them respectively subscribed, before it shall be lawful to put in force any of the powers of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, in relation to the compulsory taking of land for the purposes of the undertaking (x).

(q) The words in italics repealed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, s. 1, post.

(s) See 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 96.

(t) None of the provisions which follow, except sects. 16 and 17, apply to Irish railways, which are regulated by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 70, post.

(u) On this subject generally, ante, text, 173.

(x) This does not apply to Extension

XVII. A certificate under the hands of two justices, certifying that the whole of the prescribed sum has been subscribed, shall be sufficient evidence thereof, and on the application of the promoters of the undertaking, and the production of such evidence as such justices think proper and sufficient, such justices shall grant such certificate accordingly.

XVIII. When the promoters of the undertaking shall require to purchase or take any of the lands which by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, they are authorized to purchase or take, they shall give notice thereof to all the parties interested in such lands, or to the parties enabled by this act to sell and convey or release the same, or such of the said parties as shall, after diligent inquiry, be known to the promoters of the undertaking, and by such notice shall demand from such parties the particulars of their estate and interest in such lands, and of the claims made by them in respect thereof; and every such notice shall state the particulars of the lands so required, and that the promoters of the undertaking are willing to treat for the purchase thereof, and as to the compensation to be made to all parties for the damage that may be sustained by them by reason of the execution of the works (y).

XIX. All notices required to be served by the promoters of the undertaking upon the parties interested in or entitled to sell any such lands shall either be served personally on such parties or left at their last usual place of abode, if any such can after diligent inquiry be found, and in case any such parties shall be absent from the United Kingdom, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or, if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands (z).

XX. If any such party be a corporation aggregate such notice shall be left at the principal office of business of such corporation, or, if no such office can after diligent inquiry be found, shall be served upon some principal member, if any, of such corporation, and such notice shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or, if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands.

XXI. If, for twenty-one days after the service of such notice, any such party shall fail to state the particulars of his claim (a) in respect of any such land, or to treat with the promoters of the undertaking in respect thereof, or if such party and the promoters of the undertaking shall not agree as to the amount of the compensation to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking for the interest in such lands belonging to such party, or which he is by this or the special act enabled to sell, or for any damage that may be sustained by him by reason of the execution of the works, the amount of such compensation shall be settled in the manner hereinafter provided for settling cases of disputed compensation.

XXII. If no agreement be come to between the promoters of the undertaking and the owners of or parties by this act enabled to sell and convey or release any land taken or required for or injuriously affected by the execution of the undertaking, or any interest in such lands, as to the value of such lands or of any interest therein, or as to the compensation to be made in respect thereof, and if in any such case the compensation claimed shall not exceed fifty pounds, the same shall be settled by two justices (b).

XXIII. If the compensation claimed or offered in any such case shall exceed fifty pounds, and if the party claiming compensation desire to have the same settled by arbitration, and signify such desire by notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking, before they have issued their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury in respect of such lands, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, stating in such notice the nature of the interest in respect of which such party claims compensation, and the amount of the compensation so claimed, the same shall be so settled accordingly; but unless the party claiming compensation shall as aforesaid signify his desire to have the question of such compensation settled by arbitration, or if when the matter shall have been referred to arbitration the arbitrators or their umpire shall for three months have failed to make their or his award (c), or if no final award shall be made, the question of such compensation shall be settled by the verdict of a jury (d), as hereinafter provided.

XXIV. It shall be lawful for any justice, upon the application of either party with respect to any question of disputed compensation by this or the special act, or any act

In case of death of single arbitrator the matter to begin de novo.

If either arbitrator refuse to act, the other to proceed ex parte.

incorporated therewith, authorized to be settled by two justices, to summon the other party to appear before two justices, at a time and place to be named in the summons, and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such justices to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses, upon oath, and the costs of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such justices, and they shall settle the amount thereof.

XXV. When any question of disputed compensation by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, authorized or required to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator, each party, on the request of the other party, shall nominate and appoint an arbitrator (e), to whom such dispute shall be referred (f); and every appointment of an arbitrator shall be made on the part of the promoters of the undertaking under the hands of the said promoters or any two of them, or of their secretary or clerk (g), and on the part of any other party under the hand of such party, or if such party be a corporation aggregate under the common seal of such corporation; and such appointment shall be delivered to the arbitrator, and shall be deemed a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same shall be made; and after any such appointment shall have been made neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as a revocation; and if, for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing, in which shall be stated the matter so required to be referred to arbitration, shall have been served by the one party on the other party to appoint an arbitrator, such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbitrator, then upon such failure the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbitrator, may appoint such arbitrator to act on behalf of both parties, and such arbitrator may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute, and in such case the award or determination of such single arbitrator shall be final.

XXVI. If, before the matters so referred shall be determined, any arbitrator appointed by either party die, or become incapable, the party by whom such arbitrator was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place, and if, for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose, he fail to do so, the remaining or other arbitrator may proceed ex parte; and every arbitrator so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbitrator at the time of such his death or disability as aforesaid.

XXVII. Where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed such arbitrators shall, before they enter upon the matters referred to them, nominate and appoint, by writing under their hands, an umpire (h) to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under the provisions of this or the special act, and if such umpire shall die, or become incapable to act, they shall forthwith after such death or incapacity appoint another umpire in his place, and the decision of every such umpire on the matters so referred to him shall be final.

XXVIII. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbitrators shall refuse, or shall, for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration, neglect to appoint an umpire, the Board of Trade, in any case in which a railway company shall be one party to the arbitration, and two justices in any other case, shall, on the application of either party to such arbitration, appoint an umpire (i), and the decision of such umpire on the matters on which the arbitrators shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under this or the special act, shall be final.

XXIX. If, when a single arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrator shall die or become incapable to act before he shall have made his award, the matters referred to him shall be determined by arbitration under the provisions of this or the special act in the same manner as if such arbitrator had not been appointed.

XXX. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, either of the arbitrators refuse or for seven days neglect (k) to act, the other arbitrator may proceed ex parte, and the decision of such other arbitrator shall be as effectual as if he had been the single arbitrator appointed by both parties.

(e) There should be a nomination, and an announcement of it to the other party, ante, text, 285.

(f) If either party objects to the arbitrator appointed by the other, on a sufficient ground, it seems that he ought not to proceed with the reference, ante, text, 284, note (o). As to the mode of conducting the arbitration, generally, ante, text, 295.

(k) What amounts to a refusal and neglect, ante, text, 287.

XXXI. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, and where neither of them shall refuse or neglect to act as aforesaid, such arbitrators shall fail to make their award within twenty-one days after the day on which the last of such arbitrators shall have been appointed, or within such extended time (l) (if any) as shall have been appointed for that purpose by both such arbitrators under their hands, the matters referred to them shall be determined by the umpire to be appointed as aforesaid.

XXXII. The said arbitrators or their umpire may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose (m).

XXXIII. Before any arbitrator or umpire shall enter into the consideration of any matters referred to him, he shall in the presence of a justice make and subscribe the following declaration (n); that is to say,

"I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely declare, That I will faithfully and honestly, and to the best of my skill and ability, hear and determine the matters referred to me under the provisions of the act [naming the special act]. A. B.

"Made and subscribed in the presence of ."

And such declaration shall be annexed to the award when made; and if any arbitrator or umpire having made such declaration shall wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

XXXIV. All the costs of any such arbitration, and incident thereto, to be settled by the arbitrators (o), shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking (p), unless the arbitrators shall award the same or a less sum than shall have been offered by the promoters of the undertaking, in which case each party shall bear his own costs incident to the arbitration, and the costs of the arbitrators shall be borne by the parties in equal proportions.

XXXV. The arbitrators shall deliver their award in writing to the promoters of the undertaking (q), and the said promoters shall retain the same, and shall forthwith, on demand, at their own expense, furnish a copy thereof to the other party to the arbitration, and shall at all times, on demand, produce the said award, and allow the same to be inspected or examined by such party or any person appointed by him for that purpose.

XXXVI. The submission to any such arbitration may be made a rule of any of the superior courts (r), on the application of either of the parties (s).

XXXVII. No award made with respect to any question referred to arbitration under the provisions of this or the special act shall be set aside for irregularity or error in matter of form (t).

XXXVIII. Before the promoters of the undertaking shall issue their warrant for summoning a jury for settling any case of disputed compensation they shall give not less than ten days' notice (u) to the other party of their intention to cause such jury to be sum-

APPENDIX.

Warrant for summoning jury to be addressed to the sheriff.

Provisions applicable to sheriff to apply to coroner.

Jury to be summoned.

Jury to be impanelled.

Sheriff to preside; witnesses to be summoned.

Penalty on sheriff and jury for default.

Penalty on witnesses making default.

moned, and in such notice the promoters of the undertaking shall state what sum of money they are willing to give for the interest in such lands sought to be purchased by them from such party, and for the damage to be sustained by him by the execution of the works.

XXXIX. In every case in which any such question of disputed compensation (x) shall be required to be determined by the verdict of a jury, the promoters of the undertaking shall issue their warrant to the sheriff, requiring him to summon a jury for that purpose, and such warrant shall be under the common seal of the promoters of the undertaking if they be a corporation, or if they be not a corporation under the hands and seals of such promoters or any two of them; and if such sheriff be interested in the matter in dispute (y) such application shall be made to some coroner of the county in which the lands in question, or some part thereof, shall be situate, and if all the coroners of such county be so interested, such application may be made to some person having filled the office of sheriff or coroner in such county, and who shall be then living there, and who shall not be interested in the matter in dispute; and with respect to the persons last mentioned preference shall be given to one who shall have most recently served either of the said offices; and every ex-sheriff, coroner, or ex-corer, shall have power, if he think fit, to appoint a deputy or assessor.

XL. Throughout the enactments contained in this act relating to the reference to a jury, where the term "sheriff" is used, the provisions applicable thereto shall be held to apply to every coroner or other person lawfully acting in his place; and in every case in which any such warrant shall have been directed to any other person than the sheriff, such sheriff shall, immediately on receiving notice of the delivery of the warrant, deliver over, on application for that purpose, to the person to whom the same shall have been directed, or to any person appointed by him to receive the same, the jurors' book and special jury list belonging to the county where the lands in question shall be situate.

XLI. Upon the receipt of such warrant the sheriff shall summon a jury of twenty-four indifferent persons, duly qualified to act as common jurymen in the superior courts, to meet at a convenient time and place to be appointed by him for that purpose, such time not being less than fourteen nor more than twenty-one days after the receipt of such warrant, and such place not being more than eight miles distant from the lands in question, unless by consent of the parties interested, and he shall forthwith give notice to the promoters of the works of the time and place so appointed by him.

XLII. Out of the jurors appearing upon such summons a jury of twelve persons shall be drawn by the sheriff, in such manner as juries for trials of issues joined in the superior courts are by law required to be drawn, and if a sufficient number of jurymen do not appear in obedience to such summons, the sheriff shall return other indifferent men, duly qualified as aforesaid, of the bystanders, or others that can speedily be procured, to make up the jury to the number aforesaid; and all parties concerned may have their lawful challenges against any of the jurymen, but no such party shall challenge the array (z).

XLIII. The sheriff shall preside on the said inquiry, and the party claiming compensation shall be deemed the plaintiff, and shall have all such rights and privileges as the plaintiff is entitled to in the trial of actions at law; and, if either party so request in writing, the sheriff shall summon before him any person considered necessary to be examined as a witness touching the matters in question, and on the like request the sheriff shall order the jury, or any six or more of them, to view the place or matter in controversy, in like manner as views may be had in the trial of actions in the superior courts.

XLIV. If the sheriff make default in any of the matters hereinbefore required to be done by him in relation to any such trial or inquiry, he shall forfeit fifty pounds for every such offence, and such penalty shall be recoverable by the promoters of the undertaking by action in any of the superior courts; and if any person summoned and returned upon any jury under this or the special act, whether common or special, do not appear, or if appearing, he refuse to make oath, or in any other manner unlawfully neglect his duty, he shall, unless he show reasonable excuse to the satisfaction of the sheriff, forfeit a sum not exceeding ten pounds, and every such penalty payable by a sheriff or jurymen shall be applied in satisfaction of the costs of the inquiry, so far as the same will extend; and, in addition to the penalty hereby imposed, every such jurymen shall be subject to the same regulations, pains and penalties as if such jury had been returned for the trial of an issue joined in any of the superior courts.

XLV. If any person duly summoned to give evidence upon any such inquiry, and to whom a tender of his reasonable expenses shall have been made, fail to appear at the time and place specified in the summons without sufficient cause, or if any person, whether summoned or not, who shall appear as a witness refuse to be examined on oath touching the subject-matter in question, every person so offending shall forfeit to the party aggrieved a sum not exceeding ten pounds.

XLVI. Not less than ten days' notice of the time and place of the inquiry shall be given in writing by the promoters of the undertaking to the other party.

XLVII. If the party claiming compensation shall not appear at the time appointed for the inquiry, such inquiry shall not be further proceeded in, but the compensation to be paid shall be such as shall be ascertained by a surveyor appointed by two justices in manner hereinafter provided.

XLVIII. Before the jury proceed to inquire of and assess the compensation or damage in respect of which their verdict is to be given, they shall make oath that they will truly and faithfully inquire of and assess such compensation or damage, and the sheriff shall administer such oaths, as well as the oaths of all persons called upon to give evidence (a).

XLIX. Where such inquiry shall relate to the value of lands to be purchased, and also to compensation claimed for injury done or to be done to the lands held therewith, the jury shall deliver their verdict separately (b) for the sum of money to be paid for the purchase of the lands required for the works, or of any interest therein belonging to the party with whom the question of disputed compensation shall have arisen, or which, under the provisions herein contained, he is enabled to sell or convey, and for the sum of money to be paid by way of compensation for the damage (if any) to be sustained by the owner of the lands by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the other lands of such owner, or otherwise injuriously affecting such lands by the exercise of the powers of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith.

L. The sheriff before whom such inquiry shall be held shall give judgment for the purchase-money or compensation assessed by such jury (c); and the verdict and judgment shall be signed by the sheriff (d), and being so signed shall be kept by the clerk of the peace (e) among the records of the general or quarter sessions of the county in which the lands or any part thereof shall be situate in respect of which such purchase-money or compensation shall have been awarded; and such verdicts and judgments shall be deemed records (f), and the same or true copies thereof shall be good evidence in all courts and elsewhere, and all persons may inspect the said verdicts and judgments, and may have copies thereof or extracts therefrom, on paying for each inspection thereof one shilling, and for every one hundred words copied or extracted therefrom sixpence, which copies or extracts the clerk of the peace is hereby required to make out, and to sign and certify the same to be true copies.

LI. On every such inquiry before a jury, where the verdict of the jury shall be given for a greater sum than the sum previously offered by the promoters of the undertaking (g), all the costs of such inquiry (h) shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking; but if the verdict of the jury be given for the same or a less sum than the sum previously offered by the promoters of the undertaking, or if the owner of the land shall have failed to appear at the time and place appointed for the inquiry, having received due notice thereof, one-half of the costs of summoning, impannelling and returning the jury, and of taking the inquiry and recording the verdict and judgment thereon, in case such verdict shall be taken, shall be defrayed by the owner of the lands, and the other half by the pro-

Notice of inquiry.

If the party make default the inquiry not to proceed.

Jury to be sworn.

Sums to be paid for purchase of lands and for damage, to be assessed separately.

Verdict and judgment to be recorded.

Costs of the inquiry how to be borne.

(a) As to the right to begin, ante, text, 304, note (k). The sheriff and jury have no jurisdiction to inquire if the claimant has sustained legal damage, within the meaning of s. 68, ibid. 202, note (n); or to investigate the claimant's title to the lands, ibid. 303; or whether the preliminary notices have been given, ibid. 304. Only such damages as are apparent and capable of being ascertained can be inquired into, ibid. 305.

(b) These words are directory only, ante, text, 303, note (y).

(c) Notwithstanding the certiorari is taken away by sect. 145, the writ will lie to remove the inquisition, that it may be quashed, if the jurisdiction be exceeded, or in case of wilful miscarriage, ante, text, 310; but no new trial can be had, ibid. 317.

(d) How the inquisition should be signed, ante, text, 303, note (a). It may be drawn up after the inquiry, ibid. 303. Semble, that the preliminary matters need not be stated, ibid. 308, although it seems desirable that they should, and that the lands should be described, &c., ibid. 309.

(e) Prohibition does not lie to prevent the verdict from being enrolled, ante, text, 303, note (b).

(f) An action of debt will lie to recover the money awarded, ante, text, 320. On such an action it is a good plea that the plaintiff has not sustained an injury, which is the subject of compensation, ibid. 202. As to the effect of the above enactment, that the proceedings shall be deemed records, ibid. 316.

(g) This means an offer made before the warrant was issued, ante, text, 320, note (h). Whether the provision is applicable, where no previous offer is made, ibid. The inquisition need not show on its face the liability to pay, or the amount of the costs, ibid. 310.

(h) As to the meaning of these words, ante, text, 321, notes (k), (l).

APPENDIX.

Particulars of the costs.

moters of the undertaking, and each party shall bear his own costs, other than as aforesaid, incident to such inquiry.

LII. The costs of any such inquiry shall, in case of difference, be settled by one of the Masters of the Court of Queen's Bench of England or Ireland (i), according as the lands are situate, on the application of either party, and such costs shall include all reasonable costs, charges and expenses incurred in summoning, impannelling and returning the jury, taking the inquiry, the attendance of witnesses, the employment of counsel and attornies, recording the verdict and judgment thereon, and otherwise incident to such inquiry.

Payment of costs.

LIII. If any such costs shall be payable by the promoters of the undertaking, and if within seven days after demand such costs be not paid to the party entitled to receive the same, they shall be recoverable by distress (k), and on application to any justice he shall issue his warrant accordingly; and if any such costs shall be payable by the owner of the lands or of any interest therein, the same may be deducted and retained by the promoters of the undertaking out of any money awarded by the jury to such owner, or determined by the valuation of a surveyor under the provision hereinafter contained; and the payment or deposit of the remainder, if any, of such money shall be deemed payment and satisfaction of the whole thereof, or if such costs shall exceed the amount of the money so awarded or determined, the excess shall be recoverable by distress, and on application to any justice he shall issue his warrant accordingly.

Special jury to be summoned at the request of either party.

LIV. If either party desire any such question of disputed compensation as aforesaid to be tried before a special jury, such question shall be so tried, provided that notice of such desire, if coming from the other party, be given to the promoters of the undertaking before they have issued their warrant to the sheriff; and for that purpose the promoters of the undertaking shall by their warrant to the sheriff require him to nominate a special jury for such trial; and thereupon the sheriff shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the receipt by him of such warrant, summon both the parties to appear before him, by themselves or their attornies, at some convenient time and place appointed by him for the purpose of nominating a special jury (not being less than five nor more than eight days from the service of such summons); and at the place and time so appointed the sheriff shall proceed to nominate and strike a special jury, in the manner in which such juries shall be required by the laws for the time being in force to be nominated or struck by the proper officers of the superior courts, and the sheriff shall appoint a day, not later than the eighth day after the striking of such jury, for the parties or their agents to appear before him to reduce the number of such jury, and thereof shall give four days' notice to the parties; and on the day so appointed the sheriff shall proceed to reduce the said special jury to the number of twenty, in the manner used and accustomed by the proper officers of the superior courts.

Deficiency of special jurymen.

LV. The special jury on such inquiry shall consist of twelve of the said twenty who shall first appear on the names being called over, the parties having their lawful challenges against any of the said jurymen (l); and if a full jury do not appear, or if after such challenges a full jury do not remain, then, upon the application of either party, the sheriff shall add to the list of such jury the names of any other disinterested persons qualified to act as special or common jurymen, who shall not have been previously struck off the aforesaid list, and who may then be attending the court, or can speedily be procured, so as to complete such jury, all parties having their lawful challenges against such persons; and the sheriff shall proceed to the trial and adjudication of the matters in question by such jury, and such trial shall be attended in all respects with the like incidents and consequences, and the like penalties shall be applicable, as hereinbefore provided in the case of a trial by common jury.

Other inquiries before same special jury by consent.

LVI. Any other inquiry than that for the trial of which such special jury may have been struck and reduced as aforesaid may be tried by such jury, provided the parties thereto respectively shall give their consent to such trial.

Jurymen not to attend more than once a year.

LVII. No jurymen shall, without his consent, be summoned or required to attend any such proceeding as aforesaid more than once in any year.

Compensation to absent parties to be determined by a surveyor appointed by two justices.

LVIII. The purchase-money or compensation to be paid for any lands to be purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking from any party who, by reason of absence from the kingdom, is prevented from treating, or who cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or who shall not appear at the time appointed for the inquiry before the jury as hereinbefore provided for, after due notice thereof, and the compensation to be paid for any permanent injury to such lands shall be such as shall be determined by the valuation of such able practical surveyor as two justices shall nominate for that purpose as hereinafter mentioned.

Two justices to nominate a surveyor.

LIX. Upon application by the promoters of the undertaking to two justices, and upon such proof as shall be satisfactory to them that any such party is, by reason of absence from the kingdom, prevented from treating, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or that any such party failed to appear on such inquiry before a jury as aforesaid, after due notice to him for that purpose, such justices shall, by writing under their hands, nominate an able practical surveyor for determining such compensation as aforesaid (m), and such surveyor shall determine the same accordingly, and shall annex to his valuation a declaration in writing subscribed by him of the correctness thereof.

LX. Before such surveyor shall enter upon the duty of making such valuation as aforesaid, he shall, in the presence of such justices or one of them, make and subscribe the declaration following at the foot of such nomination; (that is to say),

"I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely declare, That I will faithfully, impartially and honestly, according to the best of my skill and ability, execute the duty of making the valuation hereby referred to me.

A. B.

"Made and subscribed in the presence of ."

And if any surveyor shall corruptly make such declaration, or having made such declaration, shall wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

LXI. The said nomination and declaration shall be annexed to the valuation to be made by such surveyor, and shall be preserved together therewith by the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall at all times produce the said valuation and other documents, on demand, to the owner of the lands comprised in such valuation, and to all other parties interested therein.

LXII. All the expenses of and incident to every such valuation shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXIII. In estimating the purchase-money or compensation to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking, in any of the cases aforesaid, regard shall be had by the justices, arbitrators or surveyors, as the case may be, not only to the value of the land to be purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking, but also to the damage, if any, to be sustained by the owner of the lands by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the other lands of such owner, or otherwise injuriously affecting such other lands by the exercise of the powers of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith.

LXIV. When the compensation payable in respect of any lands, or any interest therein, shall have been ascertained by the valuation of a surveyor, and deposited in the Bank under the provisions herein contained, by reason that the owner of, or party entitled to convey, such lands or such interest therein as aforesaid, could not be found or was absent from the kingdom, if such owner or party shall be dissatisfied with such valuation, it shall be lawful for him, before he shall have applied to the Court of Chancery for payment or investment of the monies so deposited under the provisions herein contained, by notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking, to require the question of such compensation to be submitted to arbitration, and thereupon the same shall be so submitted accordingly, in the same manner as in other cases of disputed compensation hereinbefore authorized or required to be submitted to arbitration.

LXV. The question to be submitted to the arbitrators in the case last aforesaid shall be, whether the said sum so deposited as aforesaid by the promoters of the undertaking was a sufficient sum, or whether any and what further sum ought to be paid or deposited by them.

LXVI. If the arbitrators shall award that a further sum ought to be paid or deposited by the promoters of the undertaking, they shall pay or deposit, as the case may require, such further sum within fourteen days after the making of such award, or, in default thereof, the same may be enforced by attachment, or recovered with costs by action or suit in any of the superior courts.

LXVII. If the arbitrators shall determine that the sum so deposited was sufficient, the costs of and incident to such arbitration, to be determined by the arbitrators, shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators; but, if the arbitrators shall determine that a further sum ought to be paid or deposited by the promoters of the undertaking, all the costs of and incident to the arbitration shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXVIII. If any party shall be entitled (n) to any compensation in respect of any lands, or of any interest therein, which shall have been taken for or injuriously affected by the execution of the works (o), and for which the promoters of the undertaking shall not have made satisfaction under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, and if the compensation claimed in such case shall exceed the sum of fifty pounds, such party may have the same settled either by arbitration or by the verdict of a jury, as he shall think fit; and if such party desire to have the same settled by arbitration, it shall be lawful for him to give notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking of such his desire, stating in such notice the nature of the interest in such lands in respect of which he claims compensation, and the amount of the compensation so claimed therein; and unless the promoters of the undertaking be willing to pay the amount of compensation so claimed, and shall enter into a written agreement for that purpose within twenty-one days after the receipt of any such notice from any party so entitled, the same shall be settled by arbitration in the manner herein provided (p), or, if the party so entitled as aforesaid desire to have such question of compensation settled by a jury, it shall be lawful for him to give notice in writing of such his desire to the promoters of the undertaking, stating such particulars as aforesaid, and unless the promoters of the undertaking be willing to pay the amount of compensation so claimed, and enter into a written agreement for that purpose, they shall, within twenty-one days after the receipt of such notice, issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury for settling the same in the manner herein provided (q), and, in default thereof, they shall be liable to pay to the party so entitled as aforesaid the amount of compensation so claimed, and the same may be recovered by him, with costs, by action in any of the superior courts (r).

Application of Compensation.

Purchase-money payable to parties under disability amounting to 200*l.* to be deposited in the Bank.

And with respect to the purchase-money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, or prevented from treating, or not making title, be it enacted as follows:—

LXIX. If the purchase-money or compensation which shall be payable in respect of any lands, or any interest therein, purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking from any corporation, tenant for life or in tail, married woman seised in her own right or entitled to dower, guardian, committee of lunatic or idiot, trustee, executor or administrator, or person having a partial or qualified interest only in such lands, and not entitled to sell or convey the same, except under the provisions of this or the special act, or the compensation to be paid for any permanent damage to any such lands, amount to or exceed the sum of two hundred pounds, the same shall be paid into the Bank, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery in England if the same relate to lands in England or Wales, or the Accountant General of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland if the same relate to lands in Ireland, to be placed to the account there of such Accountant General ex parte the promoters of the undertaking, (describing them by their proper name), in the matter of the special act, (citing it), pursuant to the method prescribed by any act for the time being in force for regulating monies paid into the said courts; and such monies shall remain so deposited until the same be applied to some one or more of the following purposes; (that is to say),

Application of monies deposited.

In the purchase or redemption of the land-tax, or the discharge of any debt or incumbrance affecting the land in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or affecting other lands settled therewith to the same or the like uses, trusts or purposes (s); or,

In the purchase of other lands to be conveyed, limited and settled upon the like uses, trusts and purposes, and in the same manner, as the lands in respect of which such money shall have been paid stood settled (t); or,

If such money shall be paid in respect of any buildings taken under the authority of this or the special act, or injured by the proximity of the works, in removing or replacing such buildings, or substituting others in their stead, in such manner as the Court of Chancery shall direct (u); or,

In payment to any party becoming absolutely entitled to such money (x).

Order for application and investment meanwhile.

LXX. Such money may be so applied as aforesaid upon an order of the Court of Chancery in England, or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, made on the petition of the party who would have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands in respect of which such money shall have been deposited (y), and, until the money can be so applied, it may, upon the like order, be invested by the said Accountant General in the purchase of Three per Centum Consolidated or Three per Centum Reduced Bank Annuities, or in Government or real securities (x), and the interest, dividends and annual proceeds thereof paid to the party who would for the time being have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands (a).

LXXI. If such purchase-money or compensation shall not amount to the sum of two hundred pounds, and shall exceed the sum of twenty pounds, the same shall either be paid into the Bank, and applied in the manner hereinbefore directed with respect to sums amounting to or exceeding two hundred pounds, or the same may lawfully be paid to two trustees, to be nominated by the parties entitled to the rents or profits of the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, such nomination to be signified by writing under the hands of the party so entitled; and in case of the coverture, infancy, lunacy, or other incapacity of the parties entitled to such monies, such nomination may lawfully be made by their respective husbands, guardians, committees or trustees; but such last-mentioned application of the monies shall not be made unless the promoters of the undertaking approve thereof, and of the trustees named for the purpose; and the money so paid to such trustees, and the produce arising therefrom, shall be by such trustees applied in the manner hereinbefore directed with respect to money paid into the Bank, but it shall not be necessary to obtain any order of the Court for that purpose.

LXXII. If such money shall not exceed the sum of twenty pounds, the same shall be paid to the parties entitled to the rents and profits of the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, for their own use and benefit, or, in case of the coverture, infancy, idiocy, lunacy or other incapacity of any such parties, then such money shall be paid, for their use, to the respective husbands, guardians, committees or trustees of such persons (b).

LXXIII. All sums of money exceeding twenty pounds, which may be payable by the promoters of the undertaking in respect of the taking, using or interfering with any lands under a contract or agreement with any person who shall not be entitled to dispose of such lands, or of the interest therein contracted to be sold by him, absolutely for his own benefit, shall be paid into the Bank, or to trustees in manner aforesaid; and it shall not be lawful for any contracting party not entitled as aforesaid to retain to his own use any portion of the sums so agreed or contracted to be paid for or in respect of the taking, using or interfering with any such lands, or in lieu of bridges, tunnels or other accommodation works, or for assenting to or not opposing the passing of the bill authorizing the taking of such lands; but all such monies shall be deemed to have been contracted to be paid for and on account of the several parties interested in such lands, as well in possession as in remainder, reversion or expectancy: Provided always, that it shall be in the discretion of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, or the said trustees, as the case may be, to allot to any tenant for life, or for any other partial or qualified estate, for his own use, a portion of the sum so paid into the Bank, or to such trustees as aforesaid, as compensation for any injury, inconvenience or annoyance which he may be considered to sustain, independently of the actual value of the lands to be taken, and of the damage occasioned to the lands held therewith, by reason of the taking of such lands and the making of the works (b).

LXXIV. Where any purchase-money or compensation paid into the Bank under the provisions of this or the special act shall have been paid in respect of any lease for a life or lives or years, or for a life or lives and years, or any estate in lands less than the whole fee simple thereof, or of any reversion dependent on any such lease or estate, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, on the petition of any party interested in such money, to order that the same shall be laid out, invested, accumulated and paid in such manner as the said court may consider will give to the parties interested in such money the same benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had from the lease, estate or reversion in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or as near thereto as may be (c).

LXXV. Upon deposit in the Bank in manner hereinbefore provided of the purchase-money or compensation agreed or awarded to be paid in respect of any lands purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, the owner of such lands, including in such term all parties by this act enabled to sell or convey lands, shall, when required so to do by the promoters of the undertaking, duly convey such lands to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct; and in default thereof, or if he fail to adduce a good title to such lands to their satisfaction, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll under their common seal if they be a corporation, or, if they be not a corporation, under the hands and seals of the promoters, or any two of them, containing a description of the lands in respect of which such default shall be made, and reciting the purchase or taking thereof by the promoters of the undertaking, and the names of the parties from whom the same were purchased or taken and the deposit made in respect thereof, and declaring the fact of such default having been made, and such deed-poll shall be stamped with the stamp duty which would have been payable upon a conveyance to the promoters of the undertaking of the lands described therein; and thereupon all the estate and interest in such lands of or capable of being sold and conveyed by the party between whom and the promoters of the undertaking such agreement shall have been come to, or as between whom and the promoters of the undertaking such purchase-money or compensation shall have been determined by a jury, or by arbitrators, or by a surveyor appointed by two justices as herein provided, and shall have been deposited as aforesaid, shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking, and as against such parties, and all parties on behalf of whom they are hereinbefore enabled to sell and convey, the promoters of the undertaking shall be entitled to immediate possession of such lands (e).

Where parties refuse to convey, or do not show title or cannot be found, the purchase money to be deposited.

LXXVI. If the owner of any such lands purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking, or of any interest therein, on tender of the purchase-money or compensation either agreed or awarded to be paid in respect thereof, refuse to accept the same, or neglect or fail to make out a title to such lands, or to the interest therein claimed by him, to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking (f), or if he refuse to convey or release such lands as directed by the promoters of the undertaking, or if any such owner be absent from the kingdom, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or fail to appear on the inquiry before a jury, as herein provided for, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit the purchase-money or compensation payable in respect of such lands, or any interest therein, in the Bank, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, to be placed, except in the cases herein otherwise provided for, to his account there, to the credit of the parties interested in such lands (describing them so far as the promoters of the undertaking can do), subject to the control and disposition of the said court.

Upon deposit being made, a receipt to be given, and the lands to vest upon a deed-poll being executed.

LXXVII. Upon any such deposit of money as last aforesaid being made, the cashier of the Bank shall give to the promoters of the undertaking, or to the party paying in such money by their direction, a receipt for such money, specifying therein for what and for whose use (described as aforesaid) the same shall have been received, and in respect of what purchase the same shall have been paid in; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll under their common seal if they be a corporation, or, if they be not a corporation, under the hands and seals of the said promoters, or any two of them, containing a description of the lands in respect whereof such deposit shall have been made, and declaring the circumstances under which and the names of the parties to whose credit such deposit shall have been made, and such deed-poll shall be stamped with the stamp duty which would have been payable upon a conveyance to the promoters of the undertaking of the lands described therein; and thereupon all the estate and interest in such lands of the parties for whose use and in respect whereof such purchase-money or compensation shall have been deposited shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking, and as against such parties they shall be entitled to immediate possession of such lands.

Application of monies so deposited.

LXXVIII. Upon the application by petition of any party making claim to the money so deposited as last aforesaid, or any part thereof, or to the lands in respect whereof the same shall have been so deposited, or any part of such lands, or any interest in the same, the said Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland may, in a summary way, as to such court shall seem fit, order such money to be laid out or invested in the public funds, or may order distribution thereof, or payment of the dividends thereof, according to the respective estates, titles or interests of the parties making claim to such money or lands, or any part thereof, and may make such other order in the premises as to such court shall seem fit (g).

Party in possession to be deemed the owner.

LXXIX. If any question arise respecting the title to the lands in respect whereof such monies shall have been so paid or deposited as aforesaid, the parties respectively in possession of such lands, as being the owners thereof, or in receipt of the rents of such lands, as being entitled thereto at the time of such lands being purchased or taken, shall be deemed to have been lawfully entitled to such lands, until the contrary be shown to the satisfaction of the court; and, unless the contrary be shown as aforesaid, the parties so in possession, and all parties claiming under them, or consistently with their possession, shall be deemed entitled to the money so deposited, and to the dividends or interest of the annuities or securities purchased therewith, and the same shall be paid and applied accordingly (h).

And with respect to the Conveyances of Lands, be it enacted as follows:—

LXXXI. Conveyances of lands to be purchased under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, may be according to the forms in the Schedules (A.) and (B.) respectively to this act annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, or by deed in any other form which the promoters of the undertaking may think fit; and all conveyances made according to the forms in the said schedules, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, shall be effectual to vest the lands thereby conveyed in the promoters of the undertaking, and shall operate to merge all terms of years attendant by express declaration, or by construction of law, on the estate or interest so thereby conveyed, and to bar and to destroy all such estates tail, and all other estates, rights, titles, remainders, reversions, limitations, trusts, and interests whatsoever, of and in the lands comprised in such conveyances which shall have been purchased or compensated for by the consideration therein mentioned; but, although terms of years be thereby merged, they shall in equity afford the same protection as if they had been kept on foot, and assigned to a trustee for the promoters of the undertaking to attend the reversion and inheritance (y).

LXXXII. The costs of all such conveyances shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, and such costs shall include all charges and expenses incurred, on the part as well of the seller as of the purchaser, of all conveyances and assurances of any such lands, and of any outstanding terms or interests therein, and of deducing, evidencing, LXXXVI. The money so to be deposited as last aforesaid shall be paid into the Bank in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, to be placed to his account there to the credit of the parties interested in or entitled to sell and convey the lands so to be entered upon, and who shall not have consented to such entry, subject to the control and disposition of the said court; and upon such deposit being made, the cashier of the Bank shall give to the promoters of the undertaking, or to the party paying in such money by their direction, a receipt for such money, specifying therein for what purpose, and to whose credit the same shall have been paid in.

Upon deposit being made, cashier to give receipt.

LXXXVII. The money so deposited as last aforesaid shall remain in the Bank, by way of security to the party whose lands shall so have been entered upon, for the performance of the condition of the bond to be given by the promoters of the undertaking, as hereinbefore mentioned, and the same may, on the application by petition of the promoters of the undertaking, be ordered to be invested in bank annuities or government securities, and accumulated; and upon the condition of such bond being fully performed, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England, or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, upon a like application, to order the money so deposited, or the funds in which the same shall have been invested, together with the accumulation thereof, to be repaid or transferred to the promoters of the undertaking (l), or, if such condition shall not be fully performed, it shall be lawful for the said court to order the same to be applied in such manner as it shall think fit for the benefit of the parties for whose security the same shall so have been deposited.

Deposit to remain as a security, and to be applied under the direction of the court.

LXXXVIII. If at any time the company be unable, by reason of the closing of the office of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in England, or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, to obtain his authority in respect of the payment of any sum of money so authorized to be deposited in the Bank by way of security as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the company to pay into the Bank, to the credit of such party or matter as the case may require (subject nevertheless to being dealt with as hereinafter provided, and not otherwise), such sum of money as the promoters of the undertaking shall, by some writing signed by their secretary or solicitors for the time being, addressed to the governor and company of the Bank in that behalf, request, and upon any such payment being made, the cashier of the Bank shall give a certificate thereof; and in every such case, within ten days after the re-opening of the said Accountant-General's Office, the solicitor for the promoters of the undertaking shall there bespeak the direction for the payment of such sum into the name of the Accountant-General, and, upon production of such direction at the Bank of England, the money so previously paid in shall be placed to the credit of the said Accountant-General accordingly, and the receipt for the said payment be given to the party making the same in the usual way, for the purpose of being filed at the Report Office.

The company may pay the deposit-money into the Bank by way of security during the time that the office of the Accountant-General is closed.

LXXXIX. If the promoters of the undertaking, or any of their contractors (m), shall, except as aforesaid, wilfully enter upon and take possession of any lands which shall be required to be purchased or permanently used for the purposes of the special act, without such consent as aforesaid, or without having made such payment for the benefit of the parties interested in the lands, or such deposit by way of security as aforesaid, the promoters of the undertaking shall forfeit to the party in possession of such lands the sum of ten pounds, over and above the amount of any damage done to such lands by reason of such entry and taking possession as aforesaid, such penalty and damage respectively to be recovered before two justices; and if the promoters of the undertaking, or their contractors, shall, after conviction in such penalty as aforesaid, continue in unlawful possession of any such lands, the promoters of the undertaking shall be liable to forfeit the sum of twenty-five pounds for every day they or their contractors shall so remain in possession as aforesaid, such penalty to be recoverable by the party in possession of such lands, with costs, by action in any of the superior courts: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be held to subject the promoters of the undertaking to the payment of any such penalties as aforesaid, if they shall bonâ fide, and without collusion (n), have paid the compensation agreed or awarded to be paid in respect of the said lands to any person whom the promoters of the undertaking may have reasonably believed to be entitled thereto, or shall have deposited the same in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested in the lands, or made such deposit, by way of security, in respect thereof, as hereinbefore mentioned, although such person may not have been legally entitled thereto.

Proceedings in case of refusal to deliver possession of lands.

Parties not to be required to sell part of a house.

Intersected Lands.

Owners of intersected lands may insist on sale.

Promoters of the undertaking may insist on purchase where expense of bridges, &c. exceeds the value.

Copyholds.

Conveyance of copyhold lands to be inrolled.

justices under the provision hereinbefore contained shall not be held conclusive as to the right of entry on any such lands by the promoters of the undertaking.

XCI. If in any case in which, according to the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, the promoters of the undertaking are authorized to enter upon and take possession of any lands required for the purposes of the undertaking, the owner or occupier of any such lands, or any other person, refuse to give up the possession thereof, or hinder the promoters of the undertaking from entering upon or taking possession of the same, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to issue their warrant to the sheriff to deliver possession of the same to the person appointed in such warrant to receive the same; and, upon the receipt of such warrant, the sheriff shall deliver possession of any such lands accordingly, and the costs accruing by reason of the issuing and execution of such warrant, to be settled by the sheriff, shall be paid by the person refusing to give possession, and the amount of such costs shall be deducted and retained by the promoters of the undertaking from the compensation, if any, then payable by them to such party; or, if no such compensation be payable to such party, or if the same be less than the amount of such costs, then such costs, or the excess thereof beyond such compensation, if not paid on demand, shall be levied by distress, and, upon application to any justice for that purpose, he shall issue his warrant accordingly.

XCII. And be it enacted, that no party shall at any time be required to sell or convey to the promoters of the undertaking a part only (o) of any house, or other building or manufactory, if such party be (p) willing and able to sell and convey the whole thereof (q).

And with respect to small Portions of intersected Land, be it enacted as follows:—

XCIII. If any lands, not being situate in a town or built upon (r) shall be so cut through and divided by the works as to leave, either on both sides or on one side thereof, a less quantity of land than half a statute acre, and if the owner of such small parcel of land require the promoters of the undertaking to purchase the same along with the other land required for the purposes of the special act, the promoters of the undertaking shall purchase the same accordingly (s), unless the owner thereof have other land adjoining to that so left into which the same can be thrown, so as to be conveniently occupied therewith; and if such owner have any other land so adjoining, the promoters of the undertaking shall, if so required by the owner, at their own expense, throw the piece of land so left into such adjoining land, by removing the fences and levelling the sites thereof, and by soiling the same in a sufficient and workmanlike manner.

XCIV. If any such (t) land shall be so cut through and divided as to leave on either side of the works a piece of land of less extent than half a statute acre, or of less value than the expense of making a bridge, culvert, or such other communication between the land so divided as the promoters of the undertaking are, under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, compellable to make, and if the owner of such lands have not other lands adjoining such piece of land, and require the promoters of the undertaking to make such communication, then the promoters of the undertaking may require such owner to sell to them such piece of land, and any dispute as to the value of such piece of land, or as to what would be the expense of making such communication, shall be ascertained as herein provided for cases of disputed compensation; and on the occasion of ascertaining the value of the land required to be taken for the purposes of the works, the jury or the arbitrators, as the case may be, shall, if required by either party, ascertain, by their verdict or award, the value of any such severed piece of land, and also what would be the expense of making such communication.

And with respect to Copyhold Lands (u), be it enacted as follows:—

XCV. Every conveyance, to the promoters of the undertaking, of any lands which shall be of copyhold or customary tenure, or of the nature thereof, shall be entered on the rolls of the manor of which the same shall be held or parcel; and on payment to the steward of such manor of such fees as would be due to him on the surrender of the same lands to the use of a purchaser thereof (x), he shall make such inrolment; and every such conveyance, when so inrolled, shall have the like effect, in respect of such copyhold or customary lands, as if the same had been of freehold tenure; nevertheless, until such lands shall have been enfranchised by virtue of the powers hereinafter contained, they shall continue subject to the same fines, rents, heriots and services as were theretofore payable and of right accustomed.

APPENDIX.

XCVI. Within three months after the enrolment of the conveyance of any such copyhold or customary lands, or within one month after the promoters of the undertaking shall enter upon and make use of the same for the purposes of the works, whichever shall first happen, or if more than one parcel of such lands holden of the same manor shall have been taken by them, then, within one month after the last of such parcels shall have been so taken or entered on by them, the promoters of the undertaking shall procure the whole of the lands holden of such manor so taken by them to be enfranchised, and for that purpose shall apply to the lord of the manor whereof such lands are holden to enfranchise the same, and shall pay to him such compensation in respect thereof as shall be agreed upon between them and him; and if the parties fail to agree respecting the amount of the compensation to be paid for such enfranchisement, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation; and in estimating such compensation, the loss in respect of the fines, heriots, and other services payable on death, descent or alienation, or any other matters which would be lost by the vesting of such copyhold or customary lands in the promoters of the undertaking, or by the enfranchisement of the same, shall be allowed for (y).

Copyhold lands to be enfranchised.

XCVII. Upon payment or tender of the compensation so agreed upon or determined, or on deposit thereof in the Bank, in any of the cases hereinbefore in that behalf provided, the lord of the manor whereof such copyhold or customary lands shall be holden shall enfranchise such lands, and the lands so enfranchised shall for ever thereafter be held in free and common socage; and in default of such enfranchisement by the lord of the manor, or if he fail to adduce a good title thereto to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for them, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the lands in respect of the enfranchisement whereof such compensation shall have been deposited as aforesaid shall be deemed to be enfranchised, and shall be for ever thereafter held in free and common socage.

Lord of the manor to enfranchise on payment of compensation.

XCVIII. If any such copyhold or customary lands be subject to any customary or other rent, and part only of the land, subject to any such rent, be required to be taken for the purposes of the special act, the apportionment of such rent may be settled by agreement between the owner of the lands and the lord of the manor, on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement, then the same shall be settled by two justices; and the enfranchisement of any copyhold or customary lands, taken by virtue of this or the special act, or the apportionment of such rents, shall not affect in other respects any custom by or under which any such copyhold or customary lands not taken for such purposes shall be held; and if any of the lands so required be released from any portion of the rents to which they were subject jointly with any other lands, such last-mentioned lands shall be charged with the remainder only of such rents; and with reference to any such apportioned rents, the lord of the manor shall have all the same rights and remedies over the lands to which such apportioned rent shall have been assigned or attributed as he had previously over the whole of the lands subject to such rents for the whole of such rents.

Apportionment of copyhold rents.

And with respect to any such Lands being Common or Waste lands, be it enacted as follows:—

Common Lands.

XCIX. The compensation in respect of the right in the soil of any lands subject to any right of common shall be paid to the lord of the manor, in case he shall be entitled to the same, or to such party, other than the commoners, as shall be entitled to such right in the soil; and the compensation in respect of all other commonable and other rights in or over such lands, including therein any commonable or other rights, to which the lord of the manor may be entitled, other than his right in the soil of such lands, shall be determined and paid and applied in manner hereinafter provided with respect to common lands, the right in the soil of which shall belong to the commoners; and upon payment or deposit in the Bank of the compensation so determined, all such commonable and other rights shall cease and be extinguished.

Compensation for common lands, where held of a manor, &c., how to be paid.

C. Upon payment or tender to the lord of the manor, or such other party as aforesaid, of the compensation which shall have been agreed upon or determined in respect of the right in the soil of any such lands, or on deposit thereof in the Bank in any of the cases hereinbefore in that behalf provided, such lord of the manor, or such other party as aforesaid, shall convey such lands to the promoters of the undertaking, and such conveyance shall have the effect of vesting such lands in the promoters of the undertaking, in like manner as if such lord of the manor, or such other party as aforesaid, had been seised in fee-simple of such lands at the time of executing such conveyance; and, in default of such conveyance, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of Lord of the manor, &c., to convey to the promoters of the undertaking, on receiving compensation for his interest.

APPENDIX.

Compensation for common lands where not held of a manor, how to be ascertained.

A meeting of the parties interested to be convened.

Meeting to appoint a committee.

Committee to agree with the promoters of the undertaking.

Disputes to be settled as in other cases.

If no committee be appointed, the amount to be determined by a surveyor.

Upon payment of compensation payable to commoners, the lands to vest.

Lands in Mortgage.

Power to redeem mortgages.

the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the lands in respect whereof such last-mentioned compensation shall have been deposited as aforesaid shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof, subject, nevertheless, to the commonable and other rights theretofore affecting the same, until such rights shall have been extinguished by payment or deposit of the compensation for the same in manner hereinafter provided.

CI. The compensation to be paid with respect to any such lands, being common lands, or in the nature thereof, the right to the soil of which shall belong to the commoners, as well as the compensation to be paid for the commonable and other rights in or over common lands the right in the soil whereof shall not belong to the commoners, other than the compensation to the lord of the manor, or other party entitled to the soil thereof, in respect of his right in the soil thereof, shall be determined by agreement between the promoters of the undertaking and a committee of the parties entitled to commonable or other rights in such lands, to be appointed as next hereinafter mentioned.

CII. It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to convene a meeting of the parties entitled to commonable or other rights over or in such lands to be held at some convenient place in the neighbourhood of the lands, for the purpose of their appointing a committee to treat with the promoters of the undertaking for the compensation to be paid for the extinction of such commonable or other rights; and every such meeting shall be called by public advertisement, to be inserted once at least in two consecutive weeks in some newspaper circulating in the county or in the respective counties and in the neighbourhood in which such lands shall be situate, the last of such insertions being not more than fourteen nor less than seven days prior to any such meeting; and notice of such meeting shall also, not less than seven days previous to the holding thereof, be affixed upon the door of the parish church where such meeting is intended to be held, or, if there be no such church, some other place in the neighbourhood to which notices are usually affixed; and if such lands be parcel or holden of a manor, a like notice shall be given to the lord of such manor.

CIII. It shall be lawful for the meeting so called to appoint a committee, not exceeding five in number, of the parties entitled to any such rights; and at such meeting the decision of the majority of the persons entitled to commonable rights present shall bind the minority and all absent parties.

CIV. It shall be lawful for the committee so chosen to enter into an agreement with the promoters of the undertaking for the compensation to be paid for the extinction of such commonable and other rights, and all matters relating thereto, for and on behalf of themselves and all other parties interested therein; and all such parties shall be bound by such agreement; and it shall be lawful for such committee to receive the compensation so agreed to be paid, and the receipt of such committee, or of any three of them, for such compensation, shall be an effectual discharge for the same; and such compensation, when received, shall be apportioned by the committee among the several persons interested therein, according to their respective interests (z); but the promoters of the undertaking shall not be bound to see to the apportionment or to the application of such compensation, nor shall they be liable for the misapplication or non-application thereof.

CV. If, upon such committee being appointed, they shall fail to agree with the promoters of the undertaking as to the amount of the compensation to be paid as aforesaid, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation.

CVI. If, upon being duly convened by the promoters of the undertaking, no effectual meeting of the parties entitled to such commonable or other rights shall take place, or, if taking place, such meeting fail to appoint such committee, the amount of such compensation shall be determined by a surveyor, to be appointed by two justices, as hereinbefore provided in the case of parties who cannot be found.

CVII. Upon payment or tender to such committee, or any three of them, or, if there shall be no such committee, then upon deposit in the Bank, in the manner provided in the like case, of the compensation which shall have been agreed upon or determined in respect of such commonable or other rights, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the lands in respect of which such compensation shall have been so paid or deposited shall vest in the promoters of the undertaking, freed and discharged from all such commonable or other rights, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof; and it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, by an order to be made upon petition, to order payment of the money so deposited to a committee to be appointed as aforesaid, or to make such other order in respect thereto, for the benefit of the parties interested, as it shall think fit.

And with respect to Lands subject to Mortgage (a), be it enacted as follows:—

CVIII. It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to purchase or redeem the interest of the mortgagee of any such lands which may be required for the purposes of the special act, and that whether they shall have previously purchased the equity of redemption of such lands or not, and whether the mortgagee thereof be entitled thereto in his own right or in trust for any other party, and whether he be in possession of such lands by virtue of such mortgage or not, and whether such mortgage affect such lands solely, or jointly with any other lands not required for the purposes of the special act; and, in order thereto, the promoters of the undertaking may pay or tender to such mortgagee the principal and interest due on such mortgage, together with his costs and charges, if any, and also six months' additional interest; and thereupon such mortgagee shall immediately convey his interest in the lands comprised in such mortgage to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct, or the promoters of the undertaking may give notice in writing to such mortgagee that they will pay off the principal and interest due on such mortgage at the end of six months, computed from the day of giving such notice; and if they shall have given any such notice, or if the party entitled to the equity of redemption of any such lands shall have given six months' notice of his intention to redeem the same, then, at the expiration of either of such notices, or at any intermediate period, upon payment or tender by the promoters of the undertaking to the mortgagee of the principal money due on such mortgage, and the interest which would become due at the end of six months from the time of giving either of such notices, together with his costs and expenses, if any, such mortgagee shall convey or release his interest in the lands comprised in such mortgage to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct.

APPENDIX.

CIX. If, in either of the cases aforesaid, upon such payment or tender, any mortgagee shall fail to convey or release his interest in such mortgage as directed by the promoters of the undertaking, or if he fail to adduce a good title thereto to their satisfaction, then it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit in the Bank, in the manner provided by this act in like cases, the principal and interest, together with the costs, if any, due on such mortgage, and also, if such payment be made before the expiration of six months' notice as aforesaid, such further interest as would at that time become due; and it shall be lawful for them, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon, as well as upon such conveyance by the mortgagee, if any such be made, all the estate and interest of such mortgagee, and of all persons in trust for him, or for whom he may be a trustee, in such lands, shall vest in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof in case such mortgagee were himself entitled to such possession.

Deposit of mortgage money on refusal to accept.

CX. If any such mortgaged lands shall be of less value than the principal, interest and costs secured thereon, the value of such lands, or the compensation to be made by the promoters of the undertaking in respect thereof, shall be settled by agreement between the mortgagee of such lands and the party entitled to the equity of redemption thereof on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if the parties aforesaid fail to agree respecting the amount of such value or compensation, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation; and the amount of such value or compensation, being so agreed upon or determined, shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking to the mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage-debt, so far as the same will extend; and, upon payment or tender thereof, the mortgagee shall convey or release all his interest in such mortgaged lands to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct.

Sums to be paid when mortgage exceeds the value of the lands.

CXI. If, upon such payment or tender as aforesaid being made, any such mortgagee fail so to convey his interest in such mortgage, or to adduce a good title thereto, to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for them to deposit the amount of such value or compensation in the Bank, in the manner provided by this act in like cases, and every such payment or deposit shall be accepted by the mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage-debt, so far as the same will extend, and shall be a full discharge of such mortgaged lands from all money due thereon; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon such lands, as to all such estate and interest as were then vested in the mortgagee, or any person in trust for him, shall become absolutely vested in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof in case such mortgagee were himself entitled to such possession; nevertheless, all rights and remedies possessed by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, by virtue of any bond or covenant or other obligation, other than the right to such lands, shall remain in force in respect of so much of the mortgage debt as shall not have been satisfied by such payment or deposit.

Deposit of money when refused on tender.

CXII. If a part only of any such mortgaged lands be required for the purposes of the special act, and if the part so required be of less value than the principal money, interest and costs secured on such lands, and the mortgagee shall not consider the remaining part of such lands a sufficient security for the money charged thereon, or be not willing to release the part so required, then the value of such part, and also the compensation (if any)

Sum to be paid where part only of mortgaged lands taken.

APPENDIX.

to be paid in respect of the severance thereof or otherwise, shall be settled by agreement between the mortgagee and the party entitled to the equity of redemption of such land on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other, and if the parties aforesaid fail to agree respecting the amount of such value or compensation, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation; and the amount of such value or compensation, being so agreed upon or determined, shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking to such mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage debt, so far as the same will extend; and thereupon such mortgagee shall convey or release to them, or as they shall direct, all his interest in such mortgaged lands the value whereof shall have been so paid; and a memorandum of what shall have been so paid shall be indorsed on the deed creating such mortgage, and shall be signed by the mortgagee; and a copy of such memorandum shall at the same time (if required) be furnished by the promoters of the undertaking at their expense, to the party entitled to the equity of redemption of the lands comprised in such mortgage deed.

Deposit of
fused on tender.

CXIII. If, upon payment or tender to any such mortgagee of the amount of the value or compensation so agreed upon or determined, such mortgagee shall fail to convey or release to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct, his interest in the lands in respect of which such compensation shall so have been paid or tendered, or, if he shall fail to adduce a good title thereto to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to pay the amount of such value or compensation into the Bank, in the manner provided by this act in the case of monies required to be deposited in such Bank, and such payment or deposit shall be accepted by such mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage debt, so far as the same will extend, and shall be a full discharge of the portion of the mortgaged lands so required from all money due thereon; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon such lands shall become absolutely vested in the promoters of the undertaking, as to all such estate and interest as were then vested in the mortgagee, or any person in trust for him, and, in case such mortgagee were himself entitled to such possession, they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof; nevertheless, every such mortgagee shall have the same powers and remedies for recovering or compelling payment of the mortgage money, or the residue thereof, (as the case may be,) and the interest thereof respectively, upon and out of the residue of such mortgaged lands, or the portion thereof not required for the purposes of the special act, as he would otherwise have had or been entitled to for recovering or compelling payment thereof upon or out of the whole of the lands originally comprised in such mortgage.

Compensation
to be made in certain cases, if mortgage paid off before the stipulated time.

CXIV. Provided always, That, in any of the cases hereinbefore provided with respect to lands subject to mortgage, if in the mortgage deed a time shall have been limited for payment of the principal money thereby secured, and, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, the mortgagee shall have been required to accept payment of his mortgage money, or of part thereof, at a time earlier than the time so limited, the promoters of the undertaking shall pay to such mortgagee, in addition to the sum which shall have been so paid off, all such costs and expenses as shall be incurred by such mortgagee in respect of, or which shall be incidental to, the reinvestment of the sum so paid off, such costs, in case of difference, to be taxed and payment thereof enforced in the manner herein provided with respect to the costs of conveyances; and if the rate of interest secured by such mortgage be higher than at the time of the same being so paid off can reasonably be expected to be obtained on reinvesting the same, regard being had to the then current rate of interest, such mortgagee shall be entitled to receive from the promoters of the undertaking in addition to the principal and interest hereinbefore provided for, compensation in respect of the loss to be sustained by him by reason of his mortgage money being so prematurely paid off, the amount of such compensation to be ascertained, in case of difference, as in other cases of disputed compensation; and until payment or tender of such compensation as aforesaid, the promoters of the undertaking shall not be entitled, as against such mortgagee, to possession of the mortgaged lands under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

Rent-charges.

And with respect to Lands charged with any Rent-service, Rent-charge, or chief or other rent, or other payment or incumbrance not hereinbefore provided for, be it enacted as follows:—

Release of lands
charges.

CXV. If any difference shall arise between the promoters of the undertaking and the party entitled to any such charge upon any lands required to be taken for the purposes of the special act, respecting the consideration to be paid for the release of such lands therefrom, or from the portion thereof affecting the lands required for the purposes of the special act, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation.

Release of part of lands from charge.

CXVI. If part only of the lands charged with such rent-service, rent-charge, chief or other rent, payment or incumbrance, be required to be taken for the purposes of the special act, the apportionment of any such charge may be settled by agreement between the party entitled to such charge and the owner of the lands on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and, if such apportionment be not settled by agreement, the same shall be settled by two justices; but if the remaining part of the lands so jointly subject be a sufficient security for such charge, then, with consent of the owner of the lands so jointly subject, it shall be lawful for the party entitled to such charge to release therefrom the lands required, on condition or in consideration of such other lands remaining exclusively subject to the whole thereof.

CXVII. Upon payment or tender of the compensation so agreed upon or determined to the party entitled to any such charge as aforesaid, such party shall execute to the promoters of the undertaking a release of such charge; and if he fail to do so, or if he fail to adduce a good title to such charge, to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for them to deposit the amount of such compensation in the Bank in the manner hereinbefore provided in like cases, and also, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon the rent-service, rent-charge, chief or other rent, payment or incumbrance, or the portion thereof in respect whereof such compensation shall so have been paid, shall cease and be extinguished.

Deposit in case of refusal to release.

CXVIII. If any such lands be so released from any such charge or incumbrance, or portion thereof, to which they were subject jointly with other lands, such last-mentioned lands shall alone be charged with the whole of such charge, or with the remainder thereof, as the case may be, and the party entitled to the charge shall have all the same rights and remedies over such last-mentioned lands, for the whole or for the remainder of the charge, as the case may be, as he had previously over the whole of the lands subject to such charge; and if, upon any such charge or portion of charge being so released, the deed or instrument creating or transferring such charge be tendered to the promoters of the undertaking for the purpose, they or two of them shall subscribe, or, if they be a corporation, shall affix their common seal to a memorandum of such release indorsed on such deed or instrument, declaring what part of the lands originally subject to such charge shall have been purchased by virtue of the special act, and, if the lands be released from part of such charge, what proportion of such charge shall have been released, and how much thereof continues payable, or, if the lands so required shall have been released from the whole of such charge, then that the remaining lands are thenceforward to remain exclusively charged therewith; and such memorandum shall be made and executed at the expense of the promoters of the undertaking, and shall be evidence in all courts and elsewhere of the facts therein stated, but not so as to exclude any other evidence of the same facts.

Charge to continue on lands not taken.

And with respect to Lands subject to Leases, be it enacted as follows:—

Leases.

CXIX. If any lands shall be comprised in a lease for a term of years unexpired, part only of which lands shall be required for the purposes of the special act, the rent payable in respect of the lands comprised in such lease shall be apportioned between the lands so required and the residue of such lands; and such apportionment may be settled by agreement between the lessor and lessee of such lands on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement between the parties, such apportionment shall be settled by two justices; and after such apportionment the lessee of such lands shall, as to all future accruing rent, be liable only to so much of the rent as shall be so apportioned in respect of the lands not required for the purposes of the special act; and as to the lands not so required, and as against the lessee, the lessor shall have all the same rights and remedies for the recovery of such portion of rent as previously to such apportionment he had for the recovery of the whole rent reserved by such lease; and all the covenants, conditions and agreements of such lease, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall remain in force with regard to that part of the land which shall not be required for the purposes of the special act, in the same manner as they would have done in case such part only of the land had been included in the lease.

Where part only of lands under lease taken, the rent to be apportioned.

CXX. Every such lessee as last aforesaid shall be entitled to receive from the promoters of the undertaking compensation for the damage done to him in his tenancy by reason of the severance of the lands required from those not required, or otherwise by reason of the execution of the works.

Tenants to be compensated.

CXXI. If any such lands shall be in the possession of any person having no greater interest therein than as a tenant for a year or from year to year, and if such person be required to give up possession of any lands so occupied by him before the expiration of his term or interest therein, he shall be entitled to compensation for the value of his unexpired term or interest in such lands, and for any just allowance which ought to be made to him by an incoming tenant, and for any loss or injury he may sustain, or, if a part only of such lands be required, compensation for the damage done to him in his tenancy by severing the lands held by him, or otherwise injuriously affecting the same; and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by two justices, in case the parties differ about the same; and upon payment or tender of the amount of such compensation, all such persons shall respectively deliver up to the promoters of the undertaking, or to Compensation to be made to tenants at will, &c.

APPENDIX.

Where greater interest claimed than from year to year, lease to be produced.

Limit of time for compulsory purchase.

Interests omitted to be purchased.

Promoters of the undertaking empowered to purchase interests in lands the purchase whereof may have been omitted by mistake.

How value of such lands to be estimated.

Proprietors of the undertaking to pay the costs of litigation as to such lands.

Sale of superfluous Land.

Lands not wanted to be sold, or, in default, to vest the person appointed by them to take possession thereof, any such lands in their possession required for the purposes of the special act (c).

CXXII. If any party, having a greater interest than as tenant at will, claim compensation in respect of any unexpired term or interest under any lease or grant of any such lands, the promoters of the undertaking may require such party to produce the lease or grant in respect of which such claim shall be made, or the best evidence thereof in his power; and if, after demand made in writing by the promoters of the undertaking, such lease or grant, or such best evidence thereof, be not produced within twenty-one days, the party so claiming compensation shall be considered as a tenant holding only from year to year and be entitled to compensation accordingly.

CXXIII. And be it enacted, That the powers of the promoters of the undertaking for the compulsory purchase or taking of lands for the purposes of the special act shall not be exercised after the expiration of the prescribed period, and, if no period be prescribed, not after the expiration of three years from the passing of the special act (d).

And with respect to interests in lands which have by mistake been omitted to be purchased, be it enacted as follows (e):—

CXXIV. If, at any time after the promoters of the undertaking shall have entered upon any lands which, under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, they were authorized to purchase, and which shall be permanently required for the purposes of the special act, any party shall appear to be entitled to any estate, right or interest in or charge affecting such lands which the promoters of the undertaking shall, through mistake or inadvertence, have failed or omitted duly to purchase or to pay compensation for, then, whether the period allowed for the purchase of lands shall have expired or not, the promoters of the undertaking shall remain in the undisturbed possession of such lands, provided, within six months after notice of such estate, right, interest or charge, in case the same shall not be disputed by the promoters of the undertaking, or, in case the same shall be disputed, then, within six months after the right thereto shall have been finally established by law in favour of the party claiming the same, the promoters of the undertaking shall purchase or pay compensation for the same, and shall also pay to such party, or to any other party who may establish a right thereto, full compensation for the mesne profits or interest which would have accrued to such parties respectively in respect thereof during the interval between the entry of the promoters of the undertaking thereon and the time of the payment of such purchase-money or compensation by the promoters of the undertaking, so far as such mesne profits or interest may be recoverable in law or equity; and such purchase-money or compensation shall be agreed on or awarded and paid in like manner as, according to the provisions of this act, the same respectively would have been agreed on or awarded and paid in case the promoters of the undertaking had purchased such estate, right, interest or charge before their entering upon such land, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit.

CXXV. In estimating the compensation to be given for any such last-mentioned lands, or any estate or interest in the same, or for any mesne profits thereof, the jury, or arbitrators, or justices, (as the case may be,) shall assess the same according to what they shall find to have been the value of such lands, estate or interest, and profits, at the time such lands were entered upon by the promoters of the undertaking, and without regard to any improvements or works made in the said lands by the promoters of the undertaking, and as though the works had not been constructed.

CXXVI. In addition to the said purchase-money, compensation or satisfaction, and before the promoters of the undertaking shall become absolutely entitled to any such estate, interest or charge, or to have the same merged or extinguished for their benefit, they shall, when the right to any such estate, interest or charge shall have been disputed by the company, and determined in favour of the party claiming the same, pay the full costs and expenses of any proceedings at law or in equity for the determination or recovery of the same to the parties with whom any such litigation in respect thereof shall have taken place; and such costs and expenses shall, in case the same shall be disputed, be settled by the proper officer of the court in which such litigation took place.

And with respect to lands acquired by the promoters of the undertaking under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, but which shall not be required for the purposes thereof, be it enacted as follows:

CXXVII. Within the prescribed period, or if no period be prescribed, within ten years after the expiration of the time limited by the special act for the completion of the works,

(c) On this section, see ante, text, 250.

(d) If notices to treat are given before the expiration of the prescribed period, all the subsequent steps to assess the compensation and purchase-money may be taken afterwards, ante, text, 179. And if the company give a bond and enter under sect. 85, their possession is not unlawful, although the compensation be not ascertained when the prescribed period expires, ibid. 180.

(e) On this subject generally, ante, text, 350.

the promoters of the undertaking shall absolutely sell and dispose of all such superfluous lands, and apply the purchase-money arising from such sales to the purposes of the special act; and, in default thereof, all such superfluous lands remaining unsold at the expiration of such period shall thereupon vest in and become the property of the owners of the lands adjoining thereto, in proportion to the extent of their lands respectively adjoining the same.

CXXVIII. Before the promoters of the undertaking dispose of any such superfluous lands, they shall, unless such lands be situate within a town, or be lands built upon or used for building purposes, first offer to sell the same to the person then entitled to the lands (if any) from which the same were originally severed; or, if such person refuse to purchase the same, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, then the like offer shall be made to the person or to the several persons whose lands shall immediately adjoin the lands so proposed to be sold, such persons being capable of entering into a contract for the purchase of such lands; and where more than one such person shall be entitled to such right of pre-emption, such offer shall be made to such persons in succession, one after another, in such order as the promoters of the undertaking shall think fit (f).

CXXIX. If any such person be desirous of purchasing such lands, then, within six weeks after such offer of sale, they shall signify their desire in that behalf to the promoters of the undertaking, or if they decline such offer, or if for six weeks they neglect to signify their desire to purchase such lands, the right of pre-emption of every such person so declining or neglecting in respect of the lands included in such offer shall cease; and a declaration in writing made before a justice by some person not interested in the matter in question, stating that such offer was made and was refused, or not accepted within six weeks from the time of making the same, or that the person or all the persons entitled to the right of pre-emption were out of the country, or could not after diligent inquiry be found, or were not capable of entering into a contract for the purchase of such lands, shall in all courts be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated.

CXXX. If any person entitled to such pre-emption be desirous of purchasing any such lands, and such person and the promoters of the undertaking do not agree as to the price thereof, then such price shall be ascertained by arbitration, and the costs of such arbitration shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators.

CXXXI. Upon payment or tender to the promoters of the undertaking of the purchase-money so agreed upon or determined as aforesaid, they shall convey such lands to the purchasers thereof by deed under the common seal of the promoters of the undertaking, if they be a corporation, or, if not a corporation, under the hands and seals of the promoters of the undertaking, or any two of the directors or managers thereof acting by the authority of the body; and a deed so executed shall be effectual to vest the lands comprised therein in the purchaser of such lands for the estate which shall so have been purchased by him; and a receipt under such common seal, or under the hands of two of the directors or managers of the undertaking as aforesaid, shall be a sufficient discharge to the purchaser of any such lands for the purchase-money in such receipt expressed to be received.

CXXXII. In every conveyance of lands to be made by the promoters of the undertaking under this or the special act, the word "grant" shall operate as express covenants by the promoters of the undertaking, for themselves and their successors, or for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, as the case may be, with the respective grantees therein named, and the successors, heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of such grantees, according to the quality or nature of such grants, and of the estate or interest therein expressed to be thereby conveyed as follows, except so far as the same shall be restrained or limited by express words contained in any such conveyance; (that is to say,)—

A covenant that, notwithstanding any act or default done by the promoters of the undertaking, they were at the time of the execution of such conveyance seised or possessed of the lands or premises thereby granted for an indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee-simple, free from all incumbrances done or occasioned by them, or otherwise for such estate or interest as therein expressed to be thereby granted, free from incumbrances done or occasioned by them;

A covenant that the grantee of such lands, his heirs, successors, executors, administrators and assigns (as the case may be), shall quietly enjoy the same against the promoters of the undertaking, and their successors, and all other persons claiming under them, and be indemnified and saved harmless by the promoters of the undertaking and their successors from all incumbrances created by the promoters of the undertaking;

A covenant for further assurance of such lands, at the expense of such grantee, his heirs, successors, executors, administrators or assigns (as the case may be), by the promoters of the undertaking, or their successors, and all other persons claiming under them;

And all such grantees, and their several successors, heirs, executors, administrators and assigns respectively, according to their respective quality or nature, and the estate or interest in such conveyance expressed to be conveyed, may in all actions brought by them assign breaches of covenant, as they might do if such covenants were expressly inserted in such conveyances.

CXXXIII. And be it enacted, That, if the promoters of the undertaking become possessed by virtue of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, of any lands charged with the land tax, or liable to be assessed to the poor's rate, they shall, from time to time, until the works shall be completed and assessed to such land tax or poor's rate, be liable to make good the deficiency in the several assessments for land tax and poor's rate by reason of such lands having been taken or used for the purposes of the works, and such deficiency shall be computed according to the rental at which such lands, with any building thereon, were valued or rated at the time of the passing of the special act; and on demand of such deficiency, the promoters of the undertaking, or their treasurer, shall pay all such deficiencies to the collector of the said assessments respectively; nevertheless, if at any time the promoters of the undertaking think fit to redeem such land tax, they may do so in accordance with the powers in that behalf given by the acts for the redemption of the land tax.

upon company.

CXXXIV. And be it enacted, That any summons or notice, or any writ or other proceeding at law or equity, requiring to be served upon the promoters of the undertaking, may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the promoters of the undertaking, or one of the principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given or transmitted through the post directed to the secretary, or, in case there be no secretary, the solicitor of the said promoters (g).

amends.

CXXXV. And be it enacted, That, if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if, before action brought in respect thereof, such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made, it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the court where such action shall be pending, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defendants are allowed to pay money into court.

Recovery of Penalties.

Penalties to be summarily recovered before two justices.

And with respect to the recovery of forfeitures, penalties and costs, be it enacted as follows (h):—

CXXXVI. Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special act, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two justices; and, on complaint being made to any justice, he shall issue a summons requiring the party complained against to appear before two justices, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and every such summons shall be served on the party offending, either in person, or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or, in his absence, after proof of the due service of such summons, it shall be lawful for any two justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and that although no information in writing or in print shall have been exhibited before them; and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such costs attending the conviction as such justices shall think fit.

Penalties to be levied by distress.

CXXXVII. If, forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid, the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such costs as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and costs shall be levied by distress; and such justices, or either of them, shall issue their or his warrant of distress accordingly.

Distress how to be levied.

CXXXVIII. Where, in this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalties, costs or otherwise, is directed to be levied by distress, such sum of money shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party liable to pay the same; and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and chattels, after satisfying such sum of money and the expenses of the distress and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been distrained.

Application of penalties.

CXXXIX. The justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed may, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, award not more than one-half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such parish; or if the place wherein the offence shall have been committed shall be extra-parochial, then such justices shall direct such remainder to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such extra-parochial place, or, if there shall not be any poor's rate therein, in aid of the poor's rate of any adjoining parish or district.

CXL. If any such sum shall be payable by the promoters of the undertaking, and if sufficient goods of the said promoters cannot be found whereon to levy the same, it may, if the amount thereof do not exceed twenty pounds, be recovered by distress of the goods of the treasurer of the said promoters, and the justices aforesaid, or either of them, on application shall issue their or his warrant accordingly; but no such distress shall issue against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days' previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress as aforesaid, he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all costs and expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the promoters of the undertaking coming into his custody or control, or he may sue them for the same.

CXLI. No distress levied by virtue of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall such party be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage, in an action upon the case.

CXLII. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before a justice, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CXLIII. It shall be lawful for any justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such justice shall have jurisdiction, under the provisions of this or the special act, at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath, or to give evidence before such justice, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds for every such offence.

CXLIV. The justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule (C.) to this act annexed.

CXLV. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of the superior courts (i).

CXLVI. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any justice with respect to any penalty or forfeiture, under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the general quarter sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days' notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the court thereon.

CXLVII. At the quarter sessions for which such notice shall be given, the court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal, the court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the costs, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CXLVIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, That, notwithstanding anything herein or in the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, contained, every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law in pursuance thereof, in respect of any offence which shall take place within the metropolitan police district, shall be recovered, enforced, accounted for, and, except where the application thereof is otherwise specially provided for, shall be paid to the receiver of the metropolitan police district, and shall be applied in the same manner as penalties or forfeitures, other than fines upon drunken persons, or upon constables for misconduct, or for assaults upon police constables, are directed to be recovered, enforced, accounted CXLIX. And be it enacted, That any person who, upon any examination upon oath under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special act by all parties interested, be it enacted as follows:—

CL. The company shall, at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special act, keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special act, printed by the printers to her majesty, or some of them; and where the undertaking shall be a railway, canal, or other like undertaking, the works of which shall not be confined to one town or place, shall also, within the space of such six months, deposit in the office of each of the clerks of the peace of the several counties into which the works shall extend a copy of such special act so printed as aforesaid; and the said clerks of the peace shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections, by an act passed in the first year of the reign of her present majesty, intituled "An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties, and other Persons, to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament."

CLI. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit, as hereinbefore mentioned, any of the said copies of the special act, they shall forfeit twenty pounds for every such offence, and also five pounds for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CLII. And be it enacted, That this act shall not extend to Scotland (k).

CLIII. And be it enacted, That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

8 & 9 VICT. CAP. 20.

An Act for Consolidating in One Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the making of Railways (m). [8th May, 1845.]

Whereas it is expedient to comprise in one general act sundry provisions usually introduced into Acts of Parliament authorizing the construction of railways, and that, as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several acts relating to such undertakings, as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves; and whereas a bill is now pending in Parliament, intituled "An Act for consolidating in one Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the taking of Lands for Undertakings of a Public Nature," and which is intended to be called "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845:" May it therefore please your Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That this act shall apply to every railway which shall, by any act which shall hereafter be passed, be authorized to be constructed, and this act shall be incorporated with such act; and all the clauses and provisions of this act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such act, shall apply to the undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same shall be applicable to such undertaking, and shall, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other act which shall be incorporated with such act, form part of such act (n), and be construed together therewith as forming one act.

Operations of this act confined to future railways.

And with respect to the construction of this act and of other acts to be incorporated therewith, be it enacted as follows:—

Interpretations in this Act.

II. The expression "the special act," used in this act, shall be construed to mean any act which shall be hereafter passed authorizing the construction of a railway, and with which this act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word "prescribed," used in this act in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special act, and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if, instead of the word "prescribed," the expression "prescribed for that purpose in the special act" had been used; and the expression "the lands" shall mean the lands which shall by the special act be authorized to be taken or used for the purposes thereof; and the expression "the undertaking" shall mean the railway and works, of whatever description, by the special act authorized to be executed.

"special act;"

"prescribed;"

"the lands;"

"the undertaking."

III. The following words and expressions, both in this and the special act, shall have

IV. And be it enacted, That, in citing this act in other Acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845."

V. And whereas it may be convenient in some cases to incorporate with acts hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this act; be it therefore enacted, That, for the purpose of making any such incorporation, it shall be sufficient in any such act to enact, that the clauses of this act with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this act, in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter) shall be incorporated with such act, and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by this act, form part of such act, and such act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such act shall relate.

And with respect to the construction of the railway and the works connected therewith (s), be it enacted as follows:—

VI. In exercising the power given to the company by the special act to construct the

These words do not seem to include railway companies.

(s) The following statute may be enforced during the construction of the railway. By stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 80, intituled "An Act for the Payment of Constables for keeping the Peace near Public Works," after reciting that, whereas great mischiefs have arisen by the outrageous and unlawful behaviour of labourers and others employed on railroads, canals, and other public works, by reason whereof, the appointment of special constables is often necessary for keeping the peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants and security of the property in the neighbourhood of such public works, whereby great expenses have been cast upon the public rates of counties and other districts chargeable with such expenses, be it enacted, that after the passing of this act, wherever any special constables shall be appointed under the statutes 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 36, and it shall be made to appear to any two or more justices of the peace of any county, &c., city, or borough, in England or Wales, on the oath or three or more credible witnesses, that the appointment of such special constables has been occasioned by the behaviour, or by reasonable apprehension of the behaviour, of the persons employed upon any railway, canal, or other public work made or carried on under the authority of Parliament within the district or division for which such justices usually act, it shall be lawful for such justices as aforesaid, at any time not exceeding one calendar month next after such appointment, to make orders from time to time, upon the treasurer or other officer who shall have the control or custody of the funds of any company, making or carrying on such railroad, &c., for the payment of such reasonable allowances for their trouble, loss of time and expenses to such special constables who shall have so served, or be then serving, as to the said justices shall seem proper; and a copy of every such order shall be sent by the justices to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and such order, if allowed by the secretary of state, shall be binding on such company, and on every such treasurer and officer thereof; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall empower any such justices to order any allowance for any such special constables at the rate of more than five shillings daily, to be paid to each special constable employed for the purposes aforesaid. By sect. 2, if it shall appear to the secretary of state that there was no need for the appointment of such special constables, or that a greater number of special constables was appointed than was needed by reason of the behaviour, or reasonable apprehension of the behaviour, of the persons employed on such railroad, &c., the secretary of state shall have power to disallow any such order, or to reduce the amount ordered to be paid by any such order, in such manner as to him shall seem just according to the circumstances of each case; and in such case, the order shall be of no force, or shall be of force for such reduced amount only, as the case may be; and the whole of such expenses, in case the whole shall be disallowed, or so much thereof as shall exceed such reduced amount, if a part shall be allowed, shall be defrayed out of the public rates of such county, &c., as if this act had not been made. By sect. 3, in all cases where such treasurer, or other officer as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect, during three weeks next after demand thereof, to pay such sum of money as shall have been ordered by such justices, and allowed by the secretary of state as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such justices to cause the same to be levied by distress upon the goods and chattels belonging to such company. railway, and to take lands for that purpose, the company shall be subject to the provisions and restrictions contained in this act and in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act; and the company shall make to the owners and occupiers of and all other parties interested in any lands taken or used for the purposes of the railway, or injuriously affected by the construction thereof, full compensation for the value of the lands so taken or used, and for all damage sustained by such owners, occupiers, and other parties, by reason of the exercise, as regards such lands, of the powers by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, vested in the company; and except where otherwise provided by this or the special act, the amount of such compensation shall be ascertained and determined in the manner provided by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, for determining questions of compensation with regard to lands purchased or taken under the provisions thereof; and all the provisions of the said last-mentioned act shall be applicable to determining the amount of any such compensation, and to enforcing the payment or other satisfaction thereof.

VII. If any omission, mis-statement, or erroneous description shall have been made of any lands, or of the owners, lessees or occupiers of any lands described on the plans or books of reference mentioned in the special act, or in the schedule to the special act, it shall be lawful for the company, after giving ten days' notice to the owners of the lands affected by such proposed correction, to apply to two justices for the correction thereof^(t); and if it shall appear to such justices that such omission, misstatement or erroneous description arose from mistake, they shall certify the same accordingly, and they shall in such certificate state the particulars of any such omission, and in what respect any such matter shall have been misstated or erroneously described; and such certificate shall be deposited with the clerks of the peace of the several counties in which the lands affected thereby shall be situated, and shall also be deposited with the parish clerks of the several parishes in England, and with the postmasters of the post-towns in or nearest to such parishes in Ireland, in which the lands affected thereby shall be situate; and such certificate shall be kept by such clerks of the peace, parish clerks and postmasters respectively along with the other documents to which they relate; and thereupon such plan, book of reference, or schedule, shall be deemed to be corrected according to such certificate; and it shall be lawful for the company to make the works in accordance with such certificate.

VIII. It shall not be lawful for the company to proceed in the execution of the railway unless they shall have, previously to the commencement of such work, deposited with the clerks of the peace of the several counties in or through which the railway is intended to pass, a plan and section of all such alterations from the original plan and section as shall have been approved of by Parliament, on the same scale and containing the same particulars as the original plan and section of the railway, and shall also have deposited with the clerks of the several parishes in England, and the postmasters of the post-towns in or nearest to such parishes in Ireland, in or through which such alterations shall have been authorized to be made, copies or extracts of or from such plans or sections as shall relate to such parishes respectively.

IX. The said clerks of the peace, parish-clerks and postmasters shall receive the said plans and sections of alterations, and copies and extracts thereof respectively, and shall retain the same, as well as the said original plans and sections, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect any of the documents aforesaid, and to make copies and extracts of and from the same, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of the original plans and sections by an act passed in the first year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament."

X. True copies of the said plans and books of reference, or of any alteration or correction thereof, or extract therefrom, certified by any such clerk of the peace, which certificate such clerk of the peace shall give to all parties interested, when required, shall be received in all courts of justice or elsewhere as evidence of the contents thereof^(u).

XI. In making the railway, it shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from the levels of the railway as referred to the common datum line described in the section approved of by Parliament, and as marked on the same^(y), to any extent exceeding in any Proviso.

Proviso.

XII. Before it shall be lawful for the company to make any greater deviation from the level than five feet, or, in any town, village, street, or land continuously built upon, two feet, after having obtained such consent as aforesaid, it shall be incumbent on the company to give notice of such intended deviation by public advertisement, inserted once at least in two newspapers, or twice at least in one newspaper circulating in the district or neighbourhood where such deviation is intended to be made, three weeks at least before commencing to make such deviation; and it shall be lawful for the owner of any lands prejudicially affected thereby, at any time before the commencement of the making of such deviation, to apply to the Board of Trade, after giving ten days' notice to the company, to decide whether, having regard to the interests of such applicants, such proposed deviation is proper to be made; and it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they think fit, to decide such question accordingly, and by their certificate in writing either to disallow the making of such deviation, or to authorize the making thereof, either simply or with any such modification as shall seem proper to the Board of Trade; and after any such certificate shall have been given by the Board of Trade, it shall not be lawful for the company to make such deviation, except in conformity with such certificate.

Public notice to be given previous to making greater deviations.

Power to the owners of adjoining lands to appeal to the Board of Trade against such deviations.

XIII. Where in any place it is intended to carry the railway on an arch or arches or other viaduct, as marked on the said plan or section, the same shall be made accordingly; and where a tunnel is marked on the said plan or section as intended to be made at any place, the same shall be made accordingly (a), unless the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the land in which such tunnel is intended to be made shall consent that the same shall not be so made.

Arches, tunnels, &c. to be made as marked on deposited plans.

XIV. It shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from or alter the gradients, curves, tunnels, or other engineering works (b) described in the said plan or section, except within the following limits, and under the following conditions: (that is to say), Limiting deviations from gradients, curves, &c. (c).

Subject to the above provisions in regard to altering levels, it shall be lawful for the company to diminish the inclination or gradients of the railway to any extent, and to increase the said inclination or gradients as follows: (that is to say), in gradients of an inclination not exceeding one in a hundred, to any extent not exceeding ten feet per mile, or to any further extent which shall be certified by the Board of Trade to be consistent with the public safety, and not prejudicial to the public interest; and in gradients of or exceeding the inclination of one in a hundred, to any extent not exceeding three feet per mile, or to any further extent which shall be so certified by the Board of Trade as aforesaid.

It shall be lawful for the company to diminish the radius of any curve described in the said plan to any extent which shall leave a radius of not less than half a mile, or to any further extent authorized by such certificate as aforesaid from the Board of Trade.

It shall be lawful for the company to make a tunnel, not marked on the said plan or section, instead of a cutting, or a viaduct instead of a solid embankment, if authorized by such certificate as aforesaid from the Board of Trade.

XV. It shall be lawful for the company to deviate from the line delineated on the plans so deposited, provided that no such deviation shall extend to a greater distance than the limits of deviation delineated upon the said plans (d), nor to a greater extent in passing through a town, village, or lands continuously built upon than ten yards, or

Works to be executed.	XVI. Subject to the provisions and restrictions in this and the special act, and any act incorporated therewith, it shall be lawful for the company, for the purpose of constructing the railway, or the accommodation works connected therewith (e), hereinafter mentioned, to execute any of the following works; (that is to say),
Inclined planes, &c.	They may make or construct in, upon, across, under or over any lands (f), or any streets, hills, valleys, roads, railroads or tramroads, rivers, canals, brooks, streams, or other waters, within the lands described in the said plans, or mentioned in the said books of reference or any correction thereof, such temporary or permanent inclined planes, tunnels (g), embankments, aqueducts, bridges, roads, ways, passages, conduits, drains, piers, arches, cuttings, and fences as they think proper.
Alteration of course of rivers, &c.	They may alter the course of any rivers not navigable, brooks, streams, or watercourses, and of any branches of navigable rivers, such branches not being themselves navigable (h), within such lands, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining tunnels, bridges, passages, or other works over or under the same, and divert or alter, as well temporarily as permanently, the course of any such rivers or streams of water (i), roads, streets, or ways, or raise or sink the level of any such rivers or streams, roads, streets, or ways, in order the more conveniently to carry the same over or under or by the side of the railway, as they may think proper.
Drains, &c.	They may make drains or conduits into, through, or under any lands adjoining the railway, for the purpose of conveying water from or to the railway.
Warehouses, &c.	They may erect and construct such houses, warehouses, offices, and other buildings, yards, stations, wharfs, engines, machinery, apparatus, and other works and conveniences as they think proper.
Alterations and repairs.	They may from time to time alter, repair (k), or discontinue the before-mentioned works, or any of them, and substitute others in their stead; and
General power.	They may do all other acts necessary for making, maintaining, altering or repairing, and using the railway:
Proviso as to damages.	Provided always (l), that, in the exercise of the powers by this or the special act granted, the company shall do as little damage as can be (m), and shall make full satisfaction in manner herein, and in the special act, and any act incorporated therewith, provided, to all parties interested, for all damage by them sustained by reason of the exercise of such powers.
Works below high-water mark not to be executed without the consent of the Lords of the Admiralty.	XVII. It shall not be lawful for the company to construct on the shore of the sea, or of any creek, bay, arm of the sea, or navigable river communicating therewith, where and so far up the same as the tide flows and re-flows, any work, or to construct any railway or bridge across any creek, bay, arm of the sea, or navigable river, where and so far up the same as the tide flows and re-flows, without the previous consent of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, to be signified in writing under the hands of two of the commissioners of her Majesty's woods, forests, land revenues, works, and buildings, and of the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or the commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral aforesaid for the time being, to be signified in writing under the hand of the secretary of the admiralty, and then only according to such plan, and under such restrictions and regulations, as the said commissioners of her Majesty's woods, forests, land revenues, works, and buildings, and the said Lord High

Admiral, or the said commissioners, may approve of, such approval being signified as last aforesaid; and where any such work, railway, or bridge shall have been constructed, it shall not be lawful for the company at any time to alter or extend the same without obtaining, previously to making any such alteration or extension, the like consents or approvals: and if any such work, railway, or bridge shall be commenced or completed contrary to the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners of her Majesty's woods, forests, land revenues, works, and buildings, or the said Lord High Admiral, or the said commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral, to abate and remove the same, and to restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the cost and charge of the company; and the amount thereof may be recovered in the same manner as a penalty is recoverable against the company.

XVIII. It shall be lawful for the company, for the purpose of constructing the railway, to raise, sink, or otherwise alter the position of any of the watercourses, water pipes, or gas pipes belonging to any of the houses adjoining or near to the railway, and also the mains and other pipes laid down by any company or society who may furnish the inhabitants of such houses or places with water or gas, and also to remove all other obstructions to such construction, so as the same respectively be done with as little detriment and inconvenience to such company, society, or inhabitants as the circumstances will admit, and be done under the superintendence of the company to which such water pipes or gas pipes belong, and of the several commissioners or trustees, or persons having control of the pavements, sewers, roads, streets, highways, lanes, and other public passages and places within the parish or district where such mains, pipes, or obstructions shall be situate, or of their surveyor if they or he think fit to attend, after receiving not less than forty-eight hours' notice for that purpose.

XIX. Provided always, That it shall not be lawful for the company to remove or displace any of the mains, or pipes (other than private service pipes), syphons, plugs or other works belonging to any such company or society, or to do anything to impede the passage of water or gas into or through such mains or pipes, until good and sufficient mains or pipes, syphons, plugs, and all other works necessary or proper for continuing the supply of water or gas as sufficiently as the same was supplied by the mains or pipes proposed to be removed or displaced, shall, at the expense of the company, have been first made and laid down in lieu thereof, and be ready for use, in a position as little varying from that of the pipes or mains proposed to be removed or displaced as may be consistent with the construction of the railway, and to the satisfaction of the surveyor or engineer of such water or gas company or society, or, in case of disagreement between such surveyor or engineer and the company, as a justice shall direct.

XX. It shall not be lawful for the company to lay down any such pipes contrary to the regulations of any Act of Parliament relating to such water or gas company or society, or to cause any road to be lowered for the purposes of the railway, without leaving a covering of not less than eighteen inches from the surface of the road over such mains or pipes.

XXI. The company shall make good all damage done to the property of the water or gas company or society, by the disturbance thereof, and shall make full compensation to all parties for any loss or damage which they may sustain by reason of any interference with the mains, pipes, or works of such water or gas company or society, or with the private service pipes of any person supplied by them with water.

XXII. If it shall be necessary to construct the railway or any of the works over any mains or pipes of any such water or gas company or society, the company shall, at their own expense, construct and maintain a good and sufficient culvert over such main or pipe, so as to leave the same accessible for the purpose of repairs.

XXIII. If by any such operations as aforesaid the company shall interrupt the supply of any water or gas, they shall forfeit twenty pounds for every day that such supply shall be so interrupted, and such penalty shall be appropriated to the benefit of the poor of the parish in which such obstruction shall occur, in such manner as the overseers of the poor of the parish shall direct.

XXIV. If any person wilfully obstruct any person acting under the authority of the company in the lawful exercise of their power, in setting out the line of the railway, or pull up or remove any poles or stakes driven into the ground for the purpose of so setting out the line of the railway, or deface or destroy any marks made for the same purpose, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds for every such offence.

And whereas there are large tracts of land in Ireland subject to flood and injury by water, and the rivers, streams and watercourses are in many places obstructed by shoals, insufficient bridges, culverts, weirs and other works, whereby the waters thereof are elevated above their natural level: and whereas an Act of Parliament was passed in the second year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act to empower Landed Proprietors in Ireland to sink, embank and remove Obstructions in Rivers:" and whereas another act was passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to promote the Drainage of Lands, and Improvement of Navigation and Water Power in connection with such Drainage, in Ireland;" and by the said last-mentioned act public commissioners were appointed to carry the said last-recited act into execution: and whereas it is essential, for carrying into effect the purposes of the said acts, and for the improvement of agriculture, that ample provision be made in all railway works in Ireland, for the free and uninterrupted passage of the waters at such level as will be sufficient not only for the present but all future discharge of the waters from lands crossed by or being on either side of such works, and that the bridges of railways crossing all watercourses, rivers, lakes, or estuaries which are or hereafter may be made navigable, shall be so constructed as to admit of the commodious navigation of the same: therefore, with respect to the provision to be made for the drainage of land in Ireland which may be crossed by the railway, and for the protection of the navigation connected therewith, be it enacted as follows:

XXV. If the special act shall authorize the construction of a railway in Ireland (n), the company shall and they are hereby required, from time to time, before proceeding to construct any portion of the railway, to submit to the commissioners acting in execution of the said act of the sixth year of her present Majesty, or any act amending the same, such plans, sections and surveys as shall be necessary to enable the said commissioners to decide upon the number and adequacy of the waterways of all bridges, culverts, tunnels, watercourses and other works across the line of such portion as aforesaid of the railway, for the free and uninterrupted discharge of the waters from all lands crossed by or lying on either side of or near the railway, at such a level as shall, in the opinion of the said commissioners, be sufficient for the present and prospective drainage and improvement of such lands, and (in cases of rivers, lakes, estuaries or watercourses which are now or may be capable of being made navigable) upon the height and adequacy of all bridges and works crossing the same for the commodious navigation thereof.

XXVI. The said commissioners shall, and they are hereby required, without any unnecessary delay, to investigate, by such means as to them shall seem fit, the adequacy of all such works for such purposes as aforesaid, and to decide and certify, by a writing under their hands, or the hands of any two of them, the number, situation and least possible dimensions as to breadth, depth and height of the several openings of such bridges, culverts, tunnels or other works connected with such portion of the railway as aforesaid, which shall be necessary for the passage of water or for navigation under or across such railway; and it shall not be lawful for the company to proceed with the execution of any of the works connected with any portion of the railway without having first obtained such certificate as aforesaid respecting such portion of the railway, under the hands of the said commissioners, or any two of them as aforesaid; nor shall the company be at liberty to deviate from such certificate in respect to such works, nor to execute the same otherwise than in conformity therewith, without the previous approbation in writing of the said commissioners.

XXVII. It shall be lawful for the said commissioners to apply by petition in a summary way to the Court of Chancery, complaining of any omission on the part of the company to submit such plans, sections and surveys to the said commissioners as aforesaid, or of the omission to construct any such bridge, culvert, tunnel or other works for the passage of water, in such manner as shall be so certified by the said commissioners, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said court to direct such works to be made or constructed by the company in such manner as shall be conformable to the certificate of the said commissioners, and to the said court shall seem necessary or proper, and to make from time to time such further or other order for restraining the company or any other persons from proceeding with any of the works connected with such portion of railway, except in conformity with the certificate of the said commissioners, and to issue any writ of injunction for the purpose aforesaid; and such court shall have power to award costs to be paid by such company or persons.

XXVIII. Nothing in this or the special act shall extend or be construed to prejudice or affect the powers or authorities of the commissioners acting in execution of the said act of the sixth year of her present Majesty, but all such powers shall be in full force as to the formation of any cut, river or watercourse across the railway; but such powers shall not be exercised so as to prevent or obstruct the working or using of the railway.

XXIX. And whereas it is expedient to encourage the establishment of manufactories to be worked by water power in Ireland: be it therefore enacted, That whenever it may be requisite for the formation of a watercourse for manufacturing purposes to construct an arch, culvert, tunnel or watercourse beneath, or an aqueduct above, any railway in Ireland, and that differences shall have arisen between the directors of such railway and the person interested in obtaining the water power, either as to the manner in which such works shall be executed, or the amount of compensation which should be paid, it shall be lawful to refer the questions in issue to the commissioners acting under the said recited act of the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, and their decision thereon shall be final and conclusive; and if the said commissioners shall be of opinion that the proposed works can be executed without injury to the railway, and if they shall think proper to do so, they may undertake the execution of so much of the said works as shall be in connection with such railway, at the expense of the parties for whose benefit the watercourse shall be made, with the same powers and authorities as are given by the said act for the execution of any works for drainage.

And with respect to the Temporary Occupation of lands near the railway during the Construction thereof, be it enacted as follows:—

XXX. Subject to the provisions herein and in the special act contained, it shall be lawful for the company, at any time before the expiration of the period by the special act limited for the completion of the railway, to enter upon and use any existing private road, being a road gravelled or formed with stones or other hard materials, and not being an avenue or a planted or ornamental road, or an approach to any mansion-house, within the prescribed limits, if any, or, if no limits be prescribed, not being more than five hundred yards distant from the centre of the railway as delineated on the plans; but, before the company shall enter upon or use any such existing road, they shall give three weeks' notice of their intention to the owners and occupiers of such road, and of the lands over which the same shall pass, and shall in such notice state the time during which, and the purposes for which, they intend to occupy such road, and shall pay to the owners and occupiers of such road, and of the lands through which the same shall pass, such compensation for the use and occupation of such road, either in a gross sum of money or by half-yearly instalments, as shall be agreed upon between such owners and occupiers respectively and the company, or, in case they differ about the compensation, the same shall be settled by two justices, in the same manner as any compensation not exceeding fifty pounds is directed to be settled by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

XXXI. It shall be lawful for the owners and occupiers of any such road, and of the lands over which the same passes, within ten days after the service of the aforesaid notice, by notice in writing to the company to object to the company making use of such road, on the ground that other roads, such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to use for the purposes aforesaid, or that some public road would be more fitting to be used for the same; and upon the objection being so made such proceedings may be had as are hereinafter mentioned with respect to lands temporarily occupied by the company, in respect of which three weeks' notice is hereinafter required to be given, and in the same manner as if, in the provisions relative to such proceedings, the word "road" or "roads," or the words "road and the land over which the same passes," as the case may require, had been substituted in such provisions for the word "lands."

XXXII. Subject to the provisions herein and in the special act contained, it shall be lawful for the company at any time before the expiration of the period by the special act limited for the completion of the railway, without making any previous payment, tender or deposit, to enter upon any lands within the prescribed limits, or if no limits be prescribed, not being more than two hundred yards distant from the centre of the railway as delineated on the plans, and not being a garden, orchard or plantation attached or belonging to a house, nor a park, planted walk, avenue or ground ornamentally planted, and not being nearer to the mansion-house of the owner of any such lands than the prescribed distance, or if no distance be prescribed, then not nearer than five hundred yards therefrom, and to occupy the said lands so long as may be necessary for the construction or repair of that portion of the railway, or of the accommodation works connected therewith, hereinafter mentioned, and to use the same for any of the following purposes: (that is to say) (o),—

For the purpose of taking earth or soil by side cuttings therefrom;

For the purpose of depositing spoil thereon;

For the purpose of obtaining materials therefrom for the construction or repair of the railway or such accommodation works as aforesaid; or

For the purpose of forming roads thereon to or from or by the side of the railway;

And in exercise of the powers aforesaid it shall be lawful for the company to deposit, and also to manufacture and work upon such lands materials of every kind used in constructing the railway, and also to dig and take from out of any such lands any clay, stone, gravel, sand or other things that may be found therein useful or proper for constructing the railway or any such roads as aforesaid, and for the purposes aforesaid to erect thereon workshops, sheds and other buildings of a temporary nature: Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall exempt the company from an action for nuisance or other injury, if any, done in the exercise of the powers hereinbefore given, to the lands or habitations of any party other than the party whose lands shall be so taken or used for any of the purposes aforesaid: Provided also, that no stone or slate quarry, brick field or other like place, which, at the time of the passing of the special act, shall be commonly worked or used for getting materials therefrom for the purpose of selling or disposing of the same, shall be taken or used by the company, either wholly or in part, for any of the purposes lastly hereinbefore mentioned.

XXXIII. In case any such lands shall be required for spoil banks or for side cuttings, or for obtaining materials for the construction or repair of the railway, the company shall,

APPENDIX.

Temporary Use of Lands.

Company may occupy temporarily private roads within five hundred yards of the railway.

Power to owners and occupiers of road and land to object that other roads should be taken.

Power to take temporary possession of land, without previous payment of price.

Company to give notice previous to such temporary possession.

(o) See as to the notice in such a case, ante, text, 204, note (p).

APPENDIX.

before entering thereon (except in the case of accident to the railway requiring immediate reparation) give three weeks' notice in writing to the owners and occupiers of such lands of their intention to enter upon the same for such purposes (p); and in case the said lands are required for any of the other purposes hereinbefore mentioned, the company shall (except in the cases aforesaid) give ten days' like notice thereof, and the company shall, in such notices respectively, state the substance of the provisions hereinafter contained respecting the right of such owner or occupier to require the company to purchase any such lands, or to receive compensation for the temporary occupation thereof, as the case may be.

Service of notices on owners and occupiers of lands.

XXXIV. The said notice shall either be served personally on such owners and occupiers, or left at their last usual place of abode, if any such can after diligent inquiry be found, and in case any such owner shall be absent from the United Kingdom, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands.

Power to owner to object that other lands ought to be taken.

XXXV. In any case in which a notice of three weeks is hereinbefore required to be given (q) it shall be lawful for the owner or occupier of the lands therein referred to, within ten days after the service of such notice, by notice in writing to the company, to object to the company making use of such lands, either on the ground that the lands proposed to be taken for the purposes aforesaid, or some part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, are essential to be retained by such owner, in order to the beneficial enjoyment of other neighbouring lands belonging to him, or on the ground that other lands lying contiguous or near to those proposed to be taken would be more fitting to be used for such purposes by the company; and upon objection being so made such proceedings may be had as hereinafter mentioned.

Power to two justices to order that the lands and materials shall not be taken.

XXXVI. If the objection so made be on the ground that such lands proposed to be taken, or some part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, are essential to be retained by the owner in order to the beneficial enjoyment of other neighbouring lands belonging to him, it shall be lawful for any justice, on the application of such owner, to summon the company to appear before two justices at a time and place to be named in the summons, such time not being later than the expiration of the said twenty-one days' notice; and on the appearance of the company, or, in their absence upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such justices to inquire into the truth of such ground of objection; and if it appear to such justices that for some special reason, to be stated in the order after mentioned, the lands so proposed to be taken, or any part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, are essential to be retained by the owner of such lands in order to the beneficial enjoyment of other neighbouring lands belonging to him, and ought not therefore to be taken or used by the company, it shall be lawful for such justices, by writing under their hands, to order that the lands so proposed to be taken, or some part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, to be specified in such order, shall not be taken or used by the company, and, after service of such order on the company, it shall not be lawful for them to take or use, without the previous consent in writing of the owner thereof, any of the lands or materials which by such order they are ordered not to take or use.

Power to justices to order other lands to be taken.

XXXVII. If the objection so made as aforesaid be on the ground that other lands lying contiguous to those proposed to be taken, and being sufficient in quantity, and such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to use for the purposes aforesaid, would be more fitting to be used by the company, and if in such case the company shall refuse to occupy such other lands in lieu of those mentioned in the notice, it shall be lawful for any justice, on the application of such owner or occupier, to summon the company and the owners and occupiers of such other lands to appear before two justices at a time and place to be named in such summons, such time not being more than fourteen days after such application, nor less than seven days from the service of such summons; and on the appearance of the parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such justices to determine summarily which of the said lands shall be used by the company for the purposes aforesaid, and to authorize the company to occupy and use the same accordingly.

Power to the justices to summon other owners before them.

XXXVIII. If in the case last mentioned it shall appear to such justices, upon the inquiry before them, that the lands of any other party not summoned before them, being sufficient in quantity, and such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to take or use for the purposes aforesaid, would be more fitting to be used by the company than the lands of the person who shall have been so summoned as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said justices to adjourn such inquiry, and to summon such other person to appear before them at any time, not being more than fourteen days from such inquiry nor less than seven from the service of such summons; and on the appearance of the parties, or, in the absence of any of them, on proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such justices to determine finally which lands shall be used for the purposes aforesaid, and to authorize the company to occupy and use the same accordingly.

APPENDIX.

XXXIX. Before entering, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, upon any such lands as shall be required for spoil banks or for side cuttings, or for obtaining materials or forming roads as aforesaid, the company shall, if required by the owner or occupier thereof, seven days at least before the expiration of the notice to take such lands as hereinbefore mentioned, find two sufficient persons, to be approved of by a justice, in case the parties differ, who shall enter into a bond to such owner or occupier, in a penalty of such amount as shall be approved of by such justice, in case the parties differ, conditioned for the payment of such compensation as may become payable in respect of the same in manner herein mentioned.

The company to give sureties, if required.

XL. Before the company shall use any such lands for any of the purposes aforesaid, they shall, if required to do so by the owner or occupier thereof, separate the same by a sufficient fence from the lands adjoining thereto, with such gates as may be required by the said owner or occupier for the convenient occupation of such lands, and shall also, to all private roads used by them as aforesaid, put up fences and gates in like manner, in all cases where the same may be necessary to prevent the straying of cattle from or upon the lands traversed by such roads, and in case of any difference between the owners or occupiers of such roads and lands and the company as to the necessity for such fences and gates, such fences and gates as any two magistrates shall deem necessary for the purposes aforesaid, on application being made to them in like manner as hereinbefore is provided in respect to the use of such roads.

Company to separate the lands before using them.

XLI. That, if any land shall be taken or used by the company, under the provisions of this or the special act, for the purpose of getting materials therefrom for the construction or repair of the railway, or the accommodation works connected therewith, they shall work the same in such manner as the surveyor or agent of the owner of such land shall direct, or, in case of disagreement between such surveyor or agent and the company, in such manner as any justice shall direct, on the application of either party, after notice of the hearing the application shall have been given to the other party.

Lands taken for getting materials, &c. to be worked as the surveyor of owner may direct.

XLII. In all cases in which the company shall, in exercise of the powers aforesaid, enter upon any lands for the purpose of making spoil banks or side cuttings thereon, or for obtaining therefrom materials for the construction or repair of the railway, it shall be lawful for the owners or occupiers of such lands, or parties having such estates or interests therein as, under the provisions in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act mentioned, would enable them to sell or convey lands to the company, at any time during the possession of any such lands by the company, and before such owners or occupiers shall have accepted compensation from the company in respect of such temporary occupation, to serve a notice in writing on the company requiring them to purchase the said lands, or the estates and interests therein capable of being sold and conveyed by them respectively; and in such notice such owners or occupiers shall set forth the particulars of such their estate or interest in such lands, and the amount of their claim in respect thereof; and the company shall thereupon be bound to purchase the said lands, or the estate and interest therein capable of being sold and conveyed by the parties serving such notice.

Owners of lands may compel company to purchase lands so temporarily occupied.

XLIII. In any of the cases aforesaid, where the company shall not be required to purchase such lands, and in all other cases where they shall take temporary possession of lands by virtue of the powers herein or in the special act granted, it shall be incumbent on the company, within one month after their entry upon such lands, upon being required so to do, to pay to the occupier of the said lands the value of any crop or dressing that may be thereon, as well as full compensation for any other damage of a temporary nature which he may sustain by reason of their so taking possession of his lands, and shall also, from time to time during their occupation of the said lands, pay half-yearly to such occupier or to the owner of the lands, as the case may require, a rent to be fixed by two justices, in case the parties differ, and shall also within six months after they shall have ceased to occupy the said lands, and not later than six months after the expiration of the time by the special act limited for the completion of the railway, pay to such owner and occupier, or deposit in the Bank for the benefit of all parties interested, as the case may require, compensation for all permanent or other loss, damage, or injury that may have been sustained by them by reason of the exercise, as regards the said lands, of the powers herein, or in the special act granted, including the full value of all clay, stone, gravel, sand, and other things taken from such lands.

Compensation to be made for temporary occupation.

XLIV. The amount and application of the purchase-money and other compensation payable by the company in any of the cases aforesaid shall be determined in the manner provided by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act for determining the amount and application of the compensation to be paid for lands taken under the provisions thereof.

Compensation to be ascertained under the Lands Clauses Act.

XLV. And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the company, in addition to the lands authorized to be compulsorily taken by them under the powers of this or the special act, to contract with any party willing to sell the same, for the purchase of any land adjoining or near to the railway, not exceeding in the whole the prescribed number of acres, for extraordinary purposes; (that is to say,)

Lands for additional Stations.

Land to be taken for additional stations, &c.

For the purpose of making and providing additional stations, yards, wharfs, and places for the accommodation of passengers, and for receiving, depositing, and loading or unloading goods or cattle to be conveyed upon the railway, and for the erection of weighing-machines, toll-houses, offices, warehouses and other buildings and conveniences ;

APPENDIX.

For the purpose of making convenient roads or ways to the railway, or any other purpose which may be requisite or convenient for the formation or use of the railway.

Crossing of Roads and Construction of Bridges.

roads.*

And with respect to the crossing of roads, or other interference therewith (r), be it enacted as follows:—

XLVI. If the line of the railway cross any turnpike road or public highway, then (except where otherwise provided by the special act) either such road shall be carried over the railway, or (s) the railway shall be carried over such road, by means of a bridge of the height and width, and with the ascent or descent, by this or the special act in that behalf provided ; and such bridge, with the immediate approaches, and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed, and at all times thereafter maintained (t), at the expense of the company : provided always, that, with the consent of two or more justices in petty sessions, as after mentioned (u), it shall be lawful for the company to carry the railway across any highway, other than a public carriage road, on the level.

Provision in cases where roads are crossed on a level.

XLVII. If the railway cross any turnpike road or public carriage road on a level, the company shall erect and at all times maintain good and sufficient gates across such road, on each side of the railway, where the same shall communicate therewith, and shall employ proper persons to open and shut such gates, and such gates shall be kept constantly closed across such road on both sides of the railway, except during the time when horses, cattle, carts or carriages passing along the same shall have to cross such railway ; and such gates shall be of such dimensions and so constructed as when closed to fence in the railway, and prevent cattle or horses passing along the road from entering upon the railway ; and the person intrusted with the care of such gates shall cause the same to be closed as soon as such horses, cattle, carts or carriages shall have passed through the same, under a penalty of forty shillings for every default therein : provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, in any case in which they are satisfied that it will be more conducive to the public safety that the gates on any level crossing over any such road should be kept closed across the railway, to order that such gates shall be kept so closed, instead of across the road, and in such case such gates shall be kept constantly closed across the railway, except when engines or carriages passing along the railway shall have occasion to cross such road, in the same manner and under the like penalty as above directed with respect to the gates being kept closed across the roads.

*As to crossing of
stations.*

XLVIII. Where the railway crosses any turnpike road on a level adjoining to a station, all trains on the railway shall be made to slacken their speed before arriving at such turnpike road, and shall not cross the same at any greater rate of speed than four miles an hour ; and the company shall be subject to all such rules and regulations, with regard to such crossings, as may from time to time be made by the Board of Trade (y).

*Construction of
roads.*

XLIX. Every bridge to be erected for the purpose of carrying the railway over any road shall (except where otherwise provided by the special act) be built in conformity with the following regulations (that is to say),

The width of the arch shall be such as to leave thereunder a clear space of not less than thirty-five feet if the arch be over a turnpike road (z), and of twenty-five feet if over a public carriage road (a), and of twelve feet if over a private road ;

The clear height of the arch from the surface of the road shall not be less than sixteen feet for a space of twelve feet if the arch be over a turnpike road, and fifteen feet for a space of ten feet if over a public carriage road ; and in each of such cases the clear height at the springing of the arch shall not be less than twelve feet ;

The clear height of the arch for a space of nine feet shall not be less than fourteen feet over a private carriage road ;

The descent made in the road in order to carry the same under the bridge shall not be more than one foot in thirty feet if the bridge be over a turnpike road, one foot in twenty feet if over a public carriage road, and one foot in sixteen feet if over a private carriage road, not being a tramroad or railroad, or, if the same be a tramroad or railroad, the descent shall not be greater than the prescribed rate of inclination, and, if no rate be prescribed, the same shall not be greater than as it existed at the passing of the special act.

APPENDIX.

L. Every bridge (b) erected for carrying any road (c) over the railway shall (except as otherwise provided by the special act) be built in conformity with the following regulations (that is to say),

Construction of bridges over railway.

There shall be a good and sufficient fence on each side of the bridge of not less height than four feet, and on each side of the immediate approaches of such bridge of not less than three feet;

The road over the bridge shall have a clear space between the fences thereof of thirty-five feet if the road be a turnpike road, and twenty-five feet if a public carriage road, and twelve feet if a private road;

The ascent shall not be more than one foot in thirty feet if the road be a turnpike road, one foot in twenty feet if a public carriage road (d), and one foot in sixteen feet if a private carriage road, not being a tramroad or railroad, or, if the same be a tramroad or railroad, the ascent shall not be greater than the prescribed rate of inclination, and, if no rate be prescribed, the same shall not be greater than as it existed at the passing of the special act.

LI. Provided always, That, in all cases where the average available width for the passage of carriages of any existing roads within fifty yards of the points of crossing the same is less than the width hereinbefore prescribed for bridges under or over the railway, the width of such bridges need not be greater than such average available width of such roads, but so, nevertheless, that such bridges be not of less width, in the case of a turnpike road or public carriage road, than twenty feet: Provided also, that, if at any time after the construction of the railway the average available width of any such road shall be increased beyond the width of such bridge on either side thereof, the company shall be bound, at their own expense, to increase the width of the said bridge to such extent as they may be required by the trustees or surveyors of such road, not exceeding the width of such road as so widened, or the maximum width herein or in the special act prescribed for a bridge in the like case over or under the railway (e).

The width of the bridges need not exceed the width of the road in certain cases.

LII. Provided also, That, if the mesne inclination of any road within two hundred and fifty yards of the point of crossing the same, or the inclination of such portion of any road as may require to be altered, or for which another road shall be substituted, shall be steeper than the inclination hereinbefore required to be preserved by the company, then the company may carry any such road over or under the railway, or may construct such altered or substituted road at an inclination not steeper than the said mesne inclination of the road so to be crossed, or of the road so requiring to be altered, or for which another road shall be substituted.

Existing inclinations of roads crossed or diverted need not be improved.

LIII. If, in the exercise of the powers by this or the special act granted, it be found necessary to cross, cut through, raise, sink or use any part of any road, whether carriage road, horse road, tramroad or railway, either public or private, so as to render it impassable for or dangerous or extraordinarily inconvenient to passengers or carriages, or to the persons entitled to the use thereof, the company shall, before the commencement of any such operations, cause a sufficient road to be made instead of the road to be interfered with, and shall at their own expense maintain such substituted road in a state as convenient for passengers and carriages as the road so interfered with, or as nearly so as may be (f).

Before roads interfered with, others to be substituted.

LIV. If the company do not cause another sufficient road to be so made before they interfere with any such existing road as aforesaid, they shall forfeit twenty pounds for every day during which such substituted road shall not be made after the existing road shall have been interrupted; and such penalty shall be paid to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor or other person having the management of such road, if a public road, and shall be applied for the purposes thereof, or, in case of a private road, the same shall be paid to the owner thereof, and every such penalty shall be recoverable, with costs, by action in any of the superior courts (g).

Penalty for not substituting a road.

LV. If any party, entitled to a right of way over any road so interfered with by the company, shall suffer any special damage (h) by reason that the company shall fail to cause another sufficient road to be made before they interfere with the existing road, it shall be lawful for such party to recover the amount of such special damage from the company, with costs, by action on the case in any of the superior courts, and that, whether any party shall have sued for such penalty as aforesaid or not, and without prejudice to the right of any party to sue for the same.

Party suffering damage from interruption of road to recover in an action on the case.

LVI. If the road so interfered with can be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the same shall be restored to as good a condition as the same was in at the time when the same was first interfered with by the company, or as near thereto as Period for restoration of roads interfered with.

(b) When the special act required a company to strengthen an existing bridge, it was held no departure from the meaning of the act, to pull it down and rebuild another, ante, text, 402.

APPENDIX.

may be; and if such road cannot be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the company shall cause the new or substituted road, or some other sufficient substituted road (i), to be put into a permanently substantial condition, equally convenient as the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow; and the former road shall be restored, or the substituted road put into such condition as aforesaid, as the case may be, within the following periods after the first operation on the former road shall have been commenced, unless the trustees or parties having the management of the road to be restored, by writing under their hands, consent to an extension of the period, and, in such case, within such extended period; (that is to say,) if the road be a turnpike road, within such six months, and, if the road be not a turnpike road, within twelve months.

Penalty for failing to restore road.

LVII. If any such road be not so restored, or the substituted road so completed, as aforesaid, within the periods herein or in the special act fixed for that purpose, the company shall forfeit to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company, if a public road, or, if a private road, to the owner thereof, five pounds for every day after the expiration of such periods respectively during which such road shall not be so restored, or the substituted road completed; and it shall be lawful for the justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole, or any part thereof, to be laid out in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

Company to repair roads used by them.

LVIII. If, in the course of making the railway, the company shall use or interfere with any road (j), they shall from time to time make good all damage done by them to such road; and if any question shall arise as to the damage done to any such road by the company, or as to the repair thereof by them, such question shall be referred to the determination of two justices; and such justices may direct such repairs to be made in the state of such road, in respect of the damage done by the company (k), and within such period as they think reasonable, and may impose on the company, for not carrying into effect such repairs, any penalty not exceeding five pounds per day, as to such justices shall seem just; and such penalty shall be paid to the surveyor or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company, if a public road, and be applied for the purposes of such road, or, if a private road, the same shall be paid to the owner thereof: Provided always, that, in determining any such question with regard to a turnpike road, the said justices shall have regard to and shall make full allowance for any tolls that may have been paid by the company on such road in the course of the using thereof.

Proceedings on application to justices to consent to level crossings of bridleways and footways.

LIX. When the company shall intend to apply for the consent of two justices, as hereinbefore provided (l), so as to authorize them to carry the railway across any highway other than a public carriage road on the level, they shall, fourteen days at least previous to the holding of the petty sessions at which such application is intended to be made, cause notice of such intended application to be given in some newspaper circulating in the county, and also to be affixed upon the door of the parish church of the parish in which such crossing is intended to be made, or, if there be no such church, some other place to which notices are usually affixed; and if it appear to any two or more justices acting for the district in which such highway, at the proposed crossing thereof, is situate, and assembled in petty sessions, after such notice as aforesaid, that the railway can, consistently with a due regard to the public safety and convenience, be carried across such highway on the level, it shall be lawful for such justices to consent that the same may be so carried accordingly.

Appeal against the determination of the justices.

LX. If either party shall feel aggrieved by the determination of such justices upon any such application as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such party, in like manner, and subject to the like conditions as are hereinafter provided in the case of appeals, in respect of penalties and forfeitures (m), to appeal to the quarter sessions of the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; and it shall be lawful for the justices in such quarter sessions, upon the hearing of such appeal, either to confirm or quash the determination, or to make such other order in regard to the method of carrying the railway across such highway as aforesaid as to them shall seem fit, and to make such order concerning the costs both of the original application and of the appeal as to them shall seem reasonable.

Company to make sufficient approaches and fences to bridleways and footways crossing on the level.

LXI. If the railway shall cross any highway other than a public carriage-way on the level, the company shall at their own expense make and at all times maintain convenient ascents and descents and other convenient approaches, with handrails or other fences, and shall, if such highway be a bridleway, erect and at all times maintain good and sufficient gates, and, if the same shall be a footway, good and sufficient gates or stiles, on each side of the railway where the highway shall communicate therewith.

(m) Post, s. 157.

LXII. If, where the railway shall cross any highway on the level, the company fail to make convenient ascents and descents or other convenient approaches, and such handrails, fence, gates and stiles as they are hereinbefore required to make, it shall be lawful for two justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads, or of any two householders within the parish or district where such crossing shall be situate, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to make such ascent and descent or other approach, or such handrails, fences, gates or stiles as aforesaid, within a period to be limited for that purpose by such justices; and, if the company fail to comply with such order, they shall forfeit five pounds for every day that they fail so to do; and it shall be lawful for the justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied, in such manner and by such person as they think fit, in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

APPENDIX.

Justices to have power to order approaches and fences to be made to highways crossing on the level.

LXIII. If the commissioners or trustees of any turnpike road, or the surveyor of any highway, apprehend danger to the passengers on such road in consequence of horses being frightened by the sight of the engines or carriages travelling upon the railway, it shall be lawful for such commissioners, or trustees, or surveyor, after giving fourteen days' notice to the company, to apply to the Board of Trade with respect thereto; and if it shall appear to the said Board that such danger might be obviated or lessened by the construction of any works in the nature of a screen near to or adjoining the side of such road, it shall be lawful for them, if they shall think fit, to certify the works necessary or proper to be executed by the company for the purpose of obviating or lessening such danger, and by such certificate to require the company to execute such works within a certain time after the service of such certificate, to be appointed by the said board.

Screens for Turnpike Roads.

Screens for roads to be made, if required by the Board of Trade.

LXIV. Where, by any such certificate as aforesaid, the company shall have been required to execute any such work in the nature of a screen, they shall execute and complete the same within the period appointed for that purpose in such certificate; and, if they fail so to do, they shall forfeit to the said commissioners, or trustees, or surveyor, five pounds for every day during which such works shall remain uncompleted beyond the period so appointed for their completion; and it shall be lawful for the justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be laid out in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

Penalty for failing to construct.

LXV. Where, under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, the company are required to maintain or keep in repair any bridge, fence, approach, gate or other work executed by them, it shall be lawful for two justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads, or of any two householders of the parish or district where such work may be situate, complaining that any such work is out of repair, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to put such work into complete repair within a period to be limited for that purpose by such justices; and, if the company fail to comply with such order, they shall forfeit five pounds for every day that they fail so to do (n): and it shall be lawful for the justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied, in such manner and by such person as they think fit, in putting such work into repair.

Construction of Bridges.

Justices to have power to order repair of bridges, &c.

LXVI. And whereas expense might frequently be avoided, and public convenience promoted, by a reference to the Board of Trade upon the construction of public works of an engineering nature connected with the railway, where a strict compliance with the provisions of this or the special act might be impossible, or attended with inconvenience to the company, and without adequate advantage to the public; be it enacted, That, in case any difference in regard to the construction, alteration or restoration of any road or bridge, or other public work of an engineering nature, required by the provisions of this or the special act, shall arise between the company and any trustees, commissioners, surveyors or other persons having the control of or being authorized by law to enforce the construction of such road, bridge or work, it shall be lawful for either party, after giving fourteen days' notice in writing of their intention so to do to the other party, to apply to the Board of Trade to decide upon the proper manner of constructing, altering or restoring such road, bridge or other work; and it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they shall think fit, to decide the same accordingly, and to authorize, by certificate in writing, any arrangement or mode of construction in regard to any such road, bridge or other work which shall appear to them either to be in substantial compliance with the provisions of this and the special act, or to be calculated to afford equal or greater accommodation to the public using such road, bridge or other work; and after any such certificate shall have been given by the Board of Trade, the road, bridge, or other work therein mentioned shall be constructed by the company in conformity with the terms of such certificate, and, being so constructed, shall be deemed to be constructed in conformity with the provisions of this and the special act: Provided always, that no such certificate shall be granted by the Board of Trade empowered to modify the construction of certain roads, bridges, &c., where a strict compliance with the act is impossible or inconvenient.

APPENDIX.

Authentication of certificates of the Board of Trade,
service of notices,
&c.

Board of Trade unless they shall be satisfied that existing private rights or interests will not be injuriously affected thereby.

LXVII. And be it enacted, That all regulations, certificates, notices, and other documents in writing purporting to be made or issued by or by the authority of the Board of Trade, and signed by some officers appointed for that purpose by the Board of Trade, shall, for the purposes of this and the special act, and any act incorporated therewith, be deemed to have been so made and issued, and that without proof of the authority of the person signing the same, or of the signature thereto, which matters shall be presumed until the contrary be proved; and service of any such document by leaving the same at one of the principal offices of the railway company, or by sending the same by post addressed to the secretary at such office, shall be deemed good service upon the company; and all notices and other documents required by this or the special act to be given to or laid before the Board of Trade shall be delivered at, or sent by post addressed to, the office of the Board of Trade in London.

Works for Protection and Accommodation of Lands.

And with respect to Works for the Accommodation of lands adjoining the railway, be it enacted as follows:—

LXVIII. The company shall make and at all times thereafter maintain the following works for the accommodation of the owners and occupiers of lands adjoining the railway (o); (that is to say),

Gates, bridges,
&c.;

Such and so many convenient gates, bridges, arches, culverts and passages over, under or by the sides of or leading to or from the railway as shall be necessary for the purpose of making good any interruptions caused by the railway to the use of the lands through which the railway shall be made; and such works shall be made forthwith after the part of the railway passing over such lands shall have been laid out or formed, or during the formation thereof;

fences;

Also sufficient posts, rails, hedges, ditches, mounds, or other fences for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining lands not taken, and protecting such lands from trespass, or the cattle of the owners or the occupiers thereof from straying thereout (p), by reason of the railway, together with all necessary gates made to open towards such adjoining lands (q), and not towards the railway, and all necessary stiles; and such posts, rails and other fences shall be made forthwith after the taking of any such lands, if the owners thereof shall so require, and the said other works as soon as conveniently may be;

drains;

Also all necessary arches, tunnels, culverts, drains or other passages, either over or under or by the sides of the railway, of such dimensions as will be sufficient at all times to convey the water as clearly from the lands lying near or affected by the railway as before the making of the railway, or as nearly so as may be; and such works shall be made from time to time as the railway works proceed;

watering-places.

Also proper watering-places for cattle, where, by reason of the railway, the cattle of any person occupying any lands lying near thereto shall be deprived of access to their former watering-places; and such watering-places shall be so made as to be at all times as sufficiently supplied with water as theretofore, and as if the railway had not been made, or as nearly so as may be; and the company shall make all necessary watercourses and drains for the purpose of conveying water to the said watering-places (r):

Provided always, that the company shall not be required to make such accommodation works in such a manner as would prevent or obstruct the working or using of the railway, nor to make any accommodation works with respect to which the owners and occupiers of the lands shall have agreed to receive and shall have been paid compensation instead of the making them.

Differences as to accommodation works to be settled by justices.

LXIX. If any difference arise respecting the kind or number of any such accommodation works, or the dimensions or sufficiency thereof, or respecting the maintaining thereof, the same shall be determined by two justices; and such justices shall also appoint the time within which such works shall be commenced and executed by the company.

Execution of works by owners on default by the company.

LXX. If for fourteen days next after the time appointed by such justices for the commencement of any such works the company shall fail to commence such works, or having commenced, shall fail to proceed diligently to execute the same in a sufficient manner, it shall be lawful for the party aggrieved by such failure himself to execute such works or repairs; and the reasonable expenses thereof shall be repaid by the company to the party by whom the same shall so have been executed; and, if there be any dispute about such expenses, the same shall be settled by two justices: Provided always, that no such owner or occupier or other person shall obstruct or injure the railway, or any of the works connected therewith, for a longer time, nor use them in any other manner, than is unavoidably necessary for the execution or repair of such accommodation works.

(p) See the extent of this obligation considered, and the cases thereon, ante, text, 378, note (t).

(q) See other provisions as to gates in certain cases, ante, text, 441.

LXXI. If any of the owners or occupiers of lands affected by such railway shall consider the accommodation works made by the company, or directed by such justices to be made by the company, insufficient for the commodious use of their respective lands, it shall be lawful for any such owner or occupier, at any time, at his own expense, to make such further works for that purpose as he shall think necessary, and as shall be agreed to by the company, or, in case of difference, as shall be authorized by two justices.

LXXII. If the company so desire, all such last-mentioned accommodation works shall be constructed under the superintendence of their engineer, and according to plans and specifications to be submitted to and approved by such engineer; nevertheless the company shall not be entitled to require, either that plans should be adopted which would involve a greater expense than that incurred in the execution of similar works by the company, or that the plans selected should be executed in a more expensive manner than that adopted in similar cases by the company.

LXXIII. The company shall not be compelled to make any further or additional accommodation works for the use of owners and occupiers of land adjoining the railway after the expiration of the prescribed period, or, if no period be prescribed, after five years from the completion of the works, and the opening of the railway for public use.

LXXIV. Until the company shall have made the bridges or other proper communications which they shall, under the provisions herein, or in the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, contained, have been required to make between lands intersected by the railway, and no longer, the owners and occupiers of such lands, and any other persons whose right of way shall be affected by the want of such communication, and their respective servants, may at all times freely pass and repass, with carriages, horses and other animals, directly (but not otherwise) across the part of the railway made in or through their respective lands, solely for the purpose of occupying the same lands, or for the exercise of such right of way, and so as not to obstruct the passage along the railway, or to damage the same; nevertheless if the owner or occupier of any such lands have in his arrangements with the company received or agreed to receive compensation for or on account of any such communications, instead of the same being formed, such owner or occupier, or those claiming under him, shall not be entitled so to cross the railway.

LXXV. If any person omit to shut and fasten any gate set up at either side of the railway, for the accommodation of the owners or occupiers of the adjoining lands, as soon as he, and the carriage, cattle or other animals, under his care, have passed through the same, he shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding forty shillings.

LXXVI. And be it enacted, That this or the special act shall not prevent the owners or occupiers of lands adjoining to the railway, or any other persons, from laying down, either upon their own lands or upon the lands of other persons, with the consent of such persons, any collateral branches of railway to communicate with the railway, for the purpose of bringing carriages to or from or upon the railway, but under and subject to the provisions and restrictions of an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops;" and the company shall, if required, at the expense of such owners and occupiers and other persons, and subject also to the provisions of the said last-mentioned act, make openings in the rails, and such additional lines of rail as may be necessary for effecting such communication in places where the communication can be made with safety to the public, and without injury to the railway, and without inconvenience to the traffic thereon; and the company shall not take any rate or toll or other monies for the passing of any passengers, goods or other things, along any branch so to be made by any such owner or occupier or other person; but this enactment shall be subject to the following restrictions and conditions: (that is to say,)

No such branch railway shall run parallel to the railway;

The company shall not be bound to make any such openings in any place which they shall have set apart for any specific purpose with which such communication would interfere, nor upon any inclined plane or bridge, nor in any tunnel;

The persons making or using such branch railways shall be subject to all bye-laws and regulations of the company from time to time made with respect to passing upon or crossing the railway, and otherwise; and the persons making or using such branch railways shall be bound to construct, and from time to time, as need may require, to renew, the offset plates and switches according to the most approved plan adopted by the company, and under the direction of their engineer.

And with respect to Mines lying under or near the railway, be it enacted as follows (s):—

LXXVII. The company shall not be entitled to any mines of coal, ironstone, slate or other minerals under any land purchased by them, except only such parts thereof as shall

APPENDIX.

Power to owners of land to make additional accommodation works.

Such works to be constructed under the superintendence of the company's engineer.

Accommodation works not to be required after five years.

Owners to be allowed to cross until accommodation works are made.

Penalty on persons omitting to fasten gates.

Branch Railways.

Power to parties to make private branch railways communicating with the railway.

Restrictions and conditions.

Working of Mines.

Company not to be entitled to minerals.

(s) For the cases relating to damage done to mines, see ante, text, 171, 232.

APPENDIX.

Mines lying near the railway not to be worked if the company willing to purchase them.

If company unwilling to purchase, owner may work the mines.

Mining communications.

Company to make compensation for injury done to mines ;

and also for any airway or other work made necessary by the railway.

Power to company to enter and inspect the working of mines.

Penalty for refusal to inspect.

be necessary to be dug or carried away or used in the construction of the works, unless the same shall have been expressly purchased ; and all such mines, excepting as aforesaid, shall be deemed to be excepted out of the conveyance of such lands, unless they shall have been expressly named therein and conveyed thereby.

LXXVIII. If the owner, lessee, or occupier of any mines or minerals lying under the railway, or any of the works connected therewith, or within the prescribed distance, or, where no distance shall be prescribed, forty yards therefrom, be desirous of working the same, such owner, lessee, or occupier shall give to the company notice in writing of his intention so to do thirty days before the commencement of working ; and upon the receipt of such notice it shall be lawful for the company to cause such mines to be inspected by any person appointed by them for the purpose ; and if it appear to the company that the working of such mines or minerals is likely to damage the works of the railway, and if the company be willing to make compensation for such mines or any part thereof to such owner, lessee or occupier thereof, then he shall not work or get the same ; and if the company, and such owner, lessee or occupier, do not agree as to the amount of such compensation, the same shall be settled as in other cases of disputed compensation.

LXXIX. If before the expiration of such thirty days the company do not state their willingness to treat with such owner, lessee or occupier for the payment of such compensation, it shall be lawful for him to work the said mines or any part thereof for which the company shall not have agreed to pay compensation, so that the same be done in a manner proper and necessary for the beneficial working thereof, and according to the usual manner of working such mines in the district where the same shall be situate ; and if any damage or obstruction be occasioned to the railway or works by improper working of such mines, the same shall be forthwith repaired or removed, as the case may require, and such damage made good, by the owner, lessee or occupier of such mines or minerals, and at his own expense ; and if such repair or removal be not forthwith done, or, if the company shall so think fit, without waiting for the same to be done by such owner, lessee or occupier, it shall be lawful for the company to execute the same, and recover from such owner, lessee, or occupier the expense occasioned thereby, by action in any of the superior courts.

LXXX. If the working of any such mines under the railway or works, or within the above-mentioned distance therefrom, be prevented as aforesaid by reason of apprehended injury to the railway, it shall be lawful for the respective owners, lessees and occupiers of such mines, and whose mines shall extend so as to lie on both sides of the railway, to cut and make such and so many airways, headways, gateways or water levels through the mines, measures or strata, the working whereof shall be so prevented, as may be requisite to enable them to ventilate, drain and work their said mines ; but no such airway, headway, gateway, or water level shall be of greater dimensions or section than the prescribed dimensions and sections, and, where no dimensions shall be described, not greater than eight feet wide and eight feet high, nor shall the same be cut or made upon any part of the railway or works, or so as to injure the same, or to impede the passage thereon.

LXXXI. The company shall from time to time pay to the owner, lessee, or occupier of any such mines extending so as to lie on both sides of the railway all such additional expenses and losses as shall be incurred by such owner, lessee, or occupier by reason of the severance of the lands lying over such mines by the railway, or of the continuous working of such mines being interrupted as aforesaid, or by reason of the same being worked in such manner and under such restrictions as not to prejudice or injure the railway, and for any minerals not purchased by the company which cannot be obtained by reason of making and maintaining the railway ; and if any dispute or question shall arise between the company and such owner, lessee, or occupier as aforesaid, touching the amount of such losses or expenses, the same shall be settled by arbitration.

LXXXII. If any loss or damage be sustained by the owner or occupier of the lands lying over any such mines the working whereof shall have been so prevented as aforesaid (and not being the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines), by reason of the making of any such airway or other work as aforesaid, which or any like work would not have been necessary to be made but for the working of such mines having been so prevented as aforesaid, the company shall make full compensation to such owner or occupier of the surface lands for the loss or damage so sustained by him.

LXXXIII. For better ascertaining whether any such mines are being worked or have been worked so as to damage the railway or works, it shall be lawful for the company, after giving twenty-four hours' notice in writing, to enter upon any lands through or near which the railway passes wherein any such mines are being worked or are supposed so to be, and to enter into and return from any such mines or the works connected therewith ; and for that purpose it shall be lawful for them to make use of any apparatus or machinery belonging to the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines, and to use all necessary means for discovering the distance from the railway to the parts of such mines which are being worked or about so to be.

LXXXIV. If any such owner, lessee, or occupier of any such mine shall refuse to allow any person appointed by the company for that purpose to enter into and inspect any such mines or works in manner aforesaid, every person so offending shall for every such refusal forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding twenty pounds.

LXXXV. If it appear that any such mines have been worked contrary to the provisions of this or the special act, the company may, if they think fit, give notice to the owner, lessee, or occupier thereof to construct such works and to adopt such means as may be necessary or proper for making safe the railway, and preventing injury thereto; and if after such notice any such owner, lessee or occupier do not forthwith proceed to construct the works necessary for making safe the railway, the company may themselves construct such works, and recover the expense thereof from such owner, lessee, or occupier, by action in any of the superior courts.

And with respect to the carrying of Passengers and Goods (t) upon the railway, and the Tolls to be taken thereon, be it enacted as follows:—

LXXXVI. It shall be lawful for the company to use and employ locomotive engines or other moving power (x), and carriages and waggons to be drawn or propelled thereby, and to carry and convey upon the railway all such passengers (y) and goods (z) as shall be offered to them for that purpose, and to make such reasonable charges in respect thereof as they may from time to time determine upon, not exceeding the tolls by the special act authorized to be taken by them (a).

LXXXVII. It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to enter into any contract with any other company, being the owners or lessees or in possession of any other railway, for the passage over or along the railway by the special act authorized to be made of any engines, coaches, waggons or other carriages of any other company, or which shall pass over any other line of railway, or for the passage over any other line of railway of any engines, coaches, waggons or other carriages of the company, or which shall pass over their line of railway, upon the payment of such tolls and under such conditions and restrictions as may be mutually agreed upon (b); and for the purpose aforesaid it shall be lawful for the parties to enter into any contract for the division or apportionment of the tolls to be taken upon their respective railways.

LXXXVIII. Provided always, That no such contract as aforesaid shall in any manner alter, affect, increase or diminish any of the tolls which the respective companies, parties to such contracts, shall for the time being be respectively authorized and entitled to demand or receive from any person or any other company, but that all other persons and companies shall, notwithstanding any such contract, be entitled to the use and benefit of any of the said railways, upon the same terms and conditions, and on payment of the same tolls as they would have been in case no such contract had been entered into.

LXXXIX. Nothing in this or the special act contained shall extend to charge or make liable the company further or in any other case than where, according to the laws of the realm, stage-coach proprietors and common carriers would be liable (c), nor shall extend in any degree to deprive the company of any protection or privilege which common carriers or stage-coach proprietors may be entitled to; but, on the contrary, the company shall at all times be entitled to the benefit of every such protection and privilege.

XC. And whereas it is expedient that the company should be enabled to vary the tolls upon the railway so as to accommodate them to the circumstances of the traffic, but that such power of varying should not be used for the purpose of prejudicing or favouring particular parties, or for the purpose of collusively and unfairly creating a monopoly, either in the hands of the company or of particular parties: it shall be lawful, therefore, for the company, subject to the provisions and limitations herein and in the special act contained, from time to time to alter or vary the tolls by the special act authorized to be taken, either upon the whole or upon any particular portions of the railway, as they shall think fit: Provided that all such tolls be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, whether per ton per mile or otherwise, in respect of all passengers and of all goods or carriages of the same description, and conveyed or propelled by a like carriage or engine, passing only over the same portion of the line of railway under the same circumstances; and no reduction or advance in any such tolls shall be made either directly or indirectly in favour of or against any particular company or person travelling upon or using the railway (d).

APPENDIX.

If mines improperly worked, the company may require means to be adopted for the safety of the railway.

Passengers and Goods on Railway.

Company to employ locomotive power, carriages, &c.

APPENDIX.

How tolls to be calculated where railways amalgamated.

Railway to be free on payment of tolls.

5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, ante, p. 10.

List of tolls to be exhibited on a board.

Milestones.

Tolls to be taken only whilst board exhibited and milestones set up.

Tolls to be paid as directed by the company.

In default of payment of tolls, goods, &c., may be detained and sold.

Account of lading, &c. to be given.

Penalty for not giving account of lading.

Disputes as to amount of tolls chargeable.

XCI. And whereas authority has been given by various acts of Parliament to railway companies to demand tolls for the conveyance of passengers and goods, and for other services, over the fraction of a mile equal to the toll which they are authorized to demand for one mile; therefore, in cases in which any railway shall be amalgamated with any other adjoining railway or railways (e), such tolls shall be calculated and imposed at such rates as if such amalgamated railways had originally formed one line of railway.

XCII. It shall not be lawful for the company at any time to demand or take a greater amount of toll, or make any greater charge for the carriage of passengers or goods, than they are by this and the special act authorized to demand; and upon payment of the tolls from time to time demandable, all companies and persons shall be entitled to use the railway, with engines and carriages properly constructed as by this and the special act directed, subject nevertheless to the provisions and restrictions of the said act of the sixth year of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops," and to the regulations to be from time to time made by the company by virtue of the powers in that behalf hereby and by the special act conferred upon them.

XCIII. A list of all the tolls authorized by the special act to be taken, and which shall be exacted by the company, shall be published by the same being painted upon one toll-board or more in distinct black letters on a white ground, or white letters on a black ground, or by the same being printed in legible characters on paper affixed to such board, and by such board being exhibited in some conspicuous place on the stations or places where such tolls shall be made payable.

XCIV. The company shall cause the length of the railway to be measured, and milestones, posts or other conspicuous objects to be set up and maintained along the whole line thereof, at the distance of one quarter of a mile from each other, with numbers or marks inscribed thereon denoting such distances.

XCV. No tolls shall be demanded or taken by the company for the use of the railway during any time at which the boards hereinbefore directed to be exhibited shall not be so exhibited, or at which the milestones hereinbefore directed to be set up and maintained shall not be so set up and maintained; and if any person wilfully pull down, deface or destroy any such board or milestone he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds for every such offence.

XCVI. The tolls shall be paid to such persons and at such places upon or near to the railway, and in such manner and under such regulations, as the company shall, by notice to be annexed to the list of tolls, appoint.

XCVII. If, on demand, any person fail to pay the tolls due in respect of any carriage or goods, it shall be lawful for the company to detain and sell such carriage, or all or any part of such goods, or if the same shall have been removed from the premises of the company, to detain and sell any other carriages or goods within such premises belonging to the party liable to pay such tolls, and out of the monies arising from such sale to retain the tolls payable as aforesaid, and all charges and expenses of such detention and sale, rendering the overplus, if any, of the monies arising by such sale, and such of the carriages or goods as shall remain unsold, to the person entitled thereto; or it shall be lawful for the company to recover any such tolls by action at law.

XCVIII. Every person being the owner or having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon the railway shall, on demand, give to the collector of tolls, at the places where he attends for the purpose of receiving goods or of collecting tolls for the part of the railway on which such carriage or goods may have travelled, or be about to travel, an exact account in writing, signed by him, of the number or quantity of goods conveyed by any such carriage, and of the point on the railway from which such carriage or goods have set out, or are about to set out, and at what point the same are intended to be unloaded or taken off the railway; and if the goods conveyed by any such carriage, or brought for conveyance as aforesaid, be liable to the payment of different tolls, then such owner or other person shall specify the respective numbers or qualities thereof liable to each or any of such tolls.

XCIX. If any such owner or other such person fail to give such account, or to produce his way-bill or bill of lading, to such collector or other officer or servant of the company demanding the same, or if he give a false account, or if he unload or take off any part of his lading or goods at any other place than shall be mentioned in such account, with intent to avoid the payment of any tolls payable in respect thereof, he shall for every such offence forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding ten pounds for every ton of goods, or for any parcel not exceeding one hundred weight, and so in proportion for any less quantity of goods than one ton, or for any parcel exceeding one hundred weight (as the case may be) which shall be upon any such carriage; and such penalty shall be in addition to the toll to which such goods may be liable.

C. If any dispute arise concerning the amount of the tolls due to the company, or concerning the charges occasioned by any detention or sale thereof under the provisions herein or in the special act contained, the same shall be settled by a justice; and it shall be lawful for the company in the meanwhile to detain the goods, or (if the case so require) the proceeds of the sale thereof.

APPENDIX.

CI. If any difference arise between any toll-collector or other officer or servant of the company and any owner of or person having the charge of any carriage passing or being upon the railway, or of any goods conveyed or to be conveyed by such carriage, respecting the weight, quantity, quality or nature of such goods, such collector or other officer may lawfully detain such carriage or goods, and examine, weigh, gauge or otherwise measure the same; and if upon such measuring or examination such goods appear to be of greater weight or quantity, or of other nature than shall have been stated in the account given thereof, then the person who shall have given such account shall pay, and the owner of such carriage, or the respective owners of such goods, shall also, at the option of the company, be liable to pay the costs of such measuring and examining; but if such goods appear to be of the same or less weight or quantity than, and of the same nature as shall have been stated in such account, then the company shall pay such costs, and they shall also pay to such owner of or person having charge of such carriage, and to the respective owners of such goods, such damage (if any) as shall appear to any justice, on a summary application to him for that purpose, to have arisen from such detention.

Differences as to weights, &c.

CII. If at any time it be made to appear to any justice, upon the complaint of the company, that any such detention, measuring or examining of any carriage or goods, as hereinbefore mentioned, was without reasonable ground, or that it was vexatious on the part of such collector or other officer, then the collector or other officer shall himself pay the costs of such detention and measuring, and the damage occasioned thereby; and in default of immediate payment of any such costs or damage, the same may be recovered by distress of the goods of such collector, and such justice shall issue his warrant accordingly.

Toll-collector to be liable for wrongful detention of goods.

CIII. If any person travel or attempt to travel in any carriage of the company, or of any other company or party using the railway, without having previously paid his fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof, or if any person, having paid his fare for a certain distance, knowingly and wilfully proceed in any such carriage beyond such distance, without previously paying the additional fare for the additional distance, and with intent to avoid payment thereof, or if any person knowingly and wilfully refuse or neglect, on arriving at the point to which he has paid his fare, to quit such carriage, every such person shall for every such offence forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding forty shillings.

Penalty on passengers practising frauds on the company.

CIV. If any person be discovered either in or after committing or attempting to commit any such offence as in the preceding enactment mentioned, all officers and servants and other persons on behalf of the company, or such other company or party as aforesaid, and all constables, gaolers and peace officers, may lawfully apprehend and detain such person until he can conveniently be taken before some justice, or until he be otherwise discharged by due course of law.

Detention of offenders.

CV. No person shall be entitled to carry or to require the company to carry upon the railway any aquafortis, oil of vitriol, gunpowder, lucifer matches or any other goods which in the judgment of the company may be of a dangerous nature; and if any person send by the railway any such goods without distinctly marking their nature on the outside of the package containing the same, or otherwise giving notice in writing to the book-keeper or other servant of the company with whom the same are left, at the time of so sending, he shall forfeit to the company twenty pounds for every such offence; and it shall be lawful for the company to refuse to take any parcel that they may suspect to contain goods of a dangerous nature, or require the same to be opened to ascertain the fact.

Penalty for bringing dangerous goods on the railway.

CVI. If any collector of tolls, or other officer employed by the company, be discharged or suspended from his office, or die, abscond or absent himself, and if such collector or other officer, or the wife, widow or any of the family or representatives of any such collector or other officer, refuse or neglect, after seven days' notice in writing for that purpose, to deliver up to the company, or to any person appointed by them for that purpose, any station, dwelling-house, office or other building, with its appurtenances, or any books, papers or other matters belonging to the company in the possession or custody of any such collector or officer at the occurrence of any such event as aforesaid, then, upon application being made by the company to any justice, it shall be lawful for such justice to order any constable, with proper assistance, to enter upon such station or other building, and to remove any person found therein, and to take possession thereof, and of any such books, papers or other matters, and to deliver the same to the company, or any person appointed by them for that purpose.

Delivery of matters in possession or custody of toll collector at removal.

CVII. And be it enacted, That the company shall every year cause an annual account in abstract to be prepared, showing the total receipts and expenditure of all funds levied by virtue of this or the special act for the year ending on the thirty-first day of December, or some other convenient day in each year, under the several distinct heads of receipt and expenditure, with a statement of the balance of such account, duly audited and certified by the directors, or some of them, and by the auditors, and shall, if required, transmit Annual account to be made up, and a copy transmitted to the clerk of the peace, &c.

APPENDIX.

a copy of the said account, free of charge, to the overseers of the poor of the several parishes through which the railway shall pass, and also to the clerks of the peace of the counties through which the railway shall pass, on or before the thirty-first day of January then next; which last-mentioned account shall be open to the inspection of the public at all seasonable hours, on payment of the sum of one shilling for every such inspection: Provided always, that if the said company shall omit to prepare or transmit such account as aforesaid, if required so to do by any such clerk of the peace or overseers of the poor, they shall forfeit for every such omission the sum of twenty pounds.

Bye-Laws.

Company to regulate the use of the railway.

And with respect to the Regulating of the Use of the Railway, be it enacted as follows:—

CVIII. It shall be lawful for the company, from time to time, subject to the provisions and restrictions in this and the special act contained, to make regulations for the following purposes; (that is to say,)

For regulating the mode by which, and the speed at which, carriages using the railway are to be moved or propelled;

For regulating the times of the arrival and departure of any such carriages;

For regulating the loading or unloading of such carriages, and the weights which they are respectively to carry;

For regulating the receipt and delivery of goods and other things which are to be conveyed upon such carriages;

For preventing the smoking of tobacco, and the commission of any other nuisance in or upon such carriages, or in any of the stations or premises occupied by the company;

And, generally, for regulating the travelling upon, or using and working of the railway: But no such regulation shall authorize the closing of the railway, or prevent the passage of engines or carriages on the railway at reasonable times, except at any time when, in consequence of any of the works being out of repair, or from any other sufficient cause, it shall be necessary to close the railway, or any part thereof.

Power to make regulations by bye-laws.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, ante, p. 7.

CIX. For better enforcing the observance of all or any of such regulations, it shall be lawful for the company, subject to the provisions of an act passed in the fourth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for regulating Railways," to make bye-laws, and from time to time to repeal or alter such bye-laws, and make others, provided that such bye-laws be not repugnant to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom where the same are to have effect, or to the provisions of this or the special act; and such bye-laws shall be reduced into writing, and shall have affixed thereto the common seal of the company; and any person offending against any such bye-law shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding five pounds, to be imposed by the company in such bye-laws as a penalty for any such offence; and if the infraction or non-observance of any such bye-law, or other such regulation as aforesaid, be attended with danger or annoyance to the public, or hindrance to the company in the lawful use of the railway, it shall be lawful for the company summarily to interfere to obviate or remove such danger, annoyance or hindrance, and that without prejudice to any penalty incurred by the infraction of any such bye-law (g).

Publication of such bye-laws.

CX. The substance of such last-mentioned bye-laws, when confirmed or allowed according to the provisions of any act in force regulating the allowance or confirmation of the same, shall be painted on boards, or printed on paper and pasted on boards, and hung up and affixed and continued on the front or other conspicuous part of every wharf or station belonging to the company, according to the nature or subject-matter of such bye-laws respectively, and so as to give public notice thereof to the parties interested therein or affected thereby; and such boards shall from time to time be renewed, as often as the bye-laws thereon, or any part thereof, shall be obliterated or destroyed; and no penalty imposed by any such bye-law shall be recoverable, unless the same shall have been published and kept published in manner aforesaid.

Such bye-laws to be binding on all parties.

CXI. Such bye-laws, when so confirmed, published and affixed, shall be binding upon, and be observed by, all parties, and shall be sufficient to justify all persons acting under the same; and, for proof of the publication of any such bye-laws, it shall be sufficient to prove that a printed paper or painted board, containing a copy of such bye-laws, was affixed and continued in manner by this act directed; and in case of its being afterwards displaced or damaged, then that such paper or board was replaced as soon as conveniently might be.

Leasing of Railway.

Exercise of power to lease the railway.

And with respect to Leasing the Railway, be it enacted as follows (h):—

CXII. Where the company shall be authorized by the special act to lease the railway, or any part thereof, to any company or person, the lease to be executed in pursuance of such authority shall contain all usual and proper covenants on the part of the lessee for maintaining the railway, or the portion thereof comprised in such lease, in good and efficient repair and working condition during the continuance thereof, and for so leaving the same at the expiration of the term thereby granted, and such other provisions, conditions, covenants and agreements as are usually inserted in leases of a like nature.

CXIII. Such lease shall entitle the company or person to whom the same shall be granted to the free use of the railway or portion of railway comprised therein, and, during the continuance of any such lease, all the powers and privileges granted to, and which might otherwise be exercised and enjoyed by the company, or the directors thereof, or their officers, agents or servants, by virtue of this or the special act, with regard to the possession, enjoyment and management of the railway, or of the part thereof comprised in such lease, and the tolls to be taken thereon, shall be exercised and enjoyed by the lessee, and the officers and servants of such lessee, under the same regulations and restrictions as are by this or the special act imposed on the company, and their directors, officers and servants; and such lessee shall, with respect to the railway comprised in such lease, be subject to all the obligations by this or the special act imposed on the company.

And with respect to the Engines and Carriages to be brought on the railway, be it enacted as follows (i):—

CXIV. Every locomotive steam-engine to be used on the railway shall, if it use coal or other similar fuel emitting smoke, be constructed on the principle of consuming, and so as to consume, its own smoke; and if any engine be not so constructed, the company or party using such engine shall forfeit five pounds for every day during which such engine shall be used on the railway.

CXV. No locomotive or other engine, or other description of moving power, shall at any time be brought upon or used on the railway, unless the same have first been approved of by the company; and within fourteen days after notice given to the company by any party desirous of bringing any such engine on the railway, the company shall cause their engineer or other agent to examine such engine at any place within three miles' distance from the railway, to be appointed by the owner thereof, and to report thereon to the company; and within seven days after such report, if such engine be proper to be used on the railway, the company shall give a certificate to the party requiring the same of their approval of such engine; and if at any time the engineer or other agent of the company report that any engine used upon the railway is out of repair, or unfit to be used upon the railway, the company may require the same to be taken off, or may forbid its use upon the railway until the same shall have been repaired to the satisfaction of the company, and, upon the engine being so repaired, the company shall give a certificate to the party requiring the same of their approval of such engine; and if any difference of opinion arise between the company and the owner of any such engine as to the fitness or unfitness thereof for the purpose of being used on the railway, such difference shall be settled by arbitration.

CXVI. If any person, whether the owner or other person having the care thereof, bring or use upon the railway any locomotive or other engine, or any moving power, without having first obtained such certificate of approval as aforesaid, or if, after notice given by the company to remove any such engine from the railway, such person do not forthwith remove the same, or if, after notice given by the company not to use any such engine on the railway, such person do so use such engine, without having first repaired the same to the satisfaction of the company, and obtained such certificate of approval, every such person shall, in any of the cases aforesaid, forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding twenty pounds; and in any such case it shall be lawful for the company to remove such engine from the railway.

CXVII. No carriage shall pass along, or be upon the railway (except in directly crossing the same, as herein or by the special act authorized), unless such carriage be at all times, so long as it shall be used or shall remain on the railway, of the construction and in the condition which the regulations of the company for the time being shall require; and if any dispute arise between the company and the owner of any such carriage as to the construction or condition thereof, in reference to the then existing regulations of the company, such dispute shall be settled by arbitration.

CXVIII. The regulations from time to time to be made by the company respecting the carriages to be used on the railway shall be drawn up in writing, and be authenticated by the common seal of the company, and shall be applicable alike to the carriages of the company and to the carriages of other companies or persons using the railway; and a copy of such regulations shall, on demand, be furnished by the secretary of the company to any person applying for the same.

CXIX. If any carriage, not being of such construction or in such condition as the regulations of the company for the time being require, be made to pass or be upon any part of the railway (except as aforesaid), the owner thereof, or any person having for the time being the charge of such carriage, shall forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding

On non-compliance, carriage may be removed.

Carriages improperly loaded, or suffered to obstruct the road, may be unloaded or removed.

Company not to be liable for damage by such unloading, &c.

Owners liable for damage by their servants.

Owners may recover from servants.

Arbitration.

Where questions are to be determined by arbitration, the arbitrators to be appointed within fourteen days after notice.

In case of failure to appoint by one party, the other may appoint.

ten pounds for every such offence, and it shall be lawful for the company to remove any such carriage from the railway.

CXX. The respective owners of carriages using the railway shall cause to be entered with the secretary or other officer of the company appointed for that purpose the names and places of abode of the owners of such carriages respectively, and the numbers, weights and gauges of their respective carriages; and such owners shall also, if so required by the company, cause the same particulars to be painted in legible characters on some conspicuous part of the outside of every such carriage, so as to be always open to view; and every such owner shall, whenever required by the company, permit his carriage to be weighed, measured or gauged, at the expense of the company.

CXXI. If the owner of any carriage fail to comply with the requisitions contained in the preceding enactment, it shall be lawful for the company to refuse to allow such carriage to be brought upon the railway, or to remove the same therefrom until such compliance.

CXXII. If the loading of any carriage using the railway be such as to be liable to collision with other carriages properly loaded, or to be otherwise dangerous, or if the person having the care of any carriage or goods upon the railway suffer the same or any part thereof to remain on the railway so as to obstruct the passage or working thereof, it shall be lawful for the company to cause such carriage or goods to be unloaded and removed in any manner proper for preventing such collision or obstruction, and to detain such carriage or goods, or any part thereof, until the expenses occasioned by such unloading, removal or detention be paid.

CXXIII. The company shall not be liable for any damage or loss occasioned by any such unloading, removal or detention as aforesaid, except for damage wilfully or negligently done to any carriage or goods so unloaded, removed or detained; nor shall they be liable for the safe custody of any such carriage or goods so detained, unless the same be wrongfully detained by them, and then only for so long a time as the same shall have been so wrongfully detained.

CXXIV. The respective owners of engines and carriages passing or being upon the railway shall be answerable for any trespass or damage done by their engines or carriages, or by any of the servants or persons employed by them, to or upon the railway, or the machinery or works belonging thereto, or to or upon the property of any other person; and every such servant or other person may lawfully be convicted of such trespass or damage before any two justices of the peace, either by the confession of the party offending, or upon the oath of some credible witness; and upon such conviction every such owner shall pay to the company, or to the person injured, as the case may be, the damage to be ascertained by such justices, so that the same do not exceed fifty pounds.

CXXV. It shall be lawful for any owner of any engine or carriage who shall pay the amount of any damage caused by the misfeasance or negligence of any servant or other person employed by him to recover the amount so paid by him from such servant or other person by the same means as the company are enabled to recover the amount of such damage from the owner of any engine or carriage.

And with respect to the settlement of disputes by Arbitration, be it enacted as follows (1):—

CXXVI. When any dispute authorized or directed by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, to be settled by arbitration shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator, each party, on the request of the other party, shall nominate and appoint an arbitrator to whom such dispute shall be referred; and every appointment of an arbitrator shall be made on the part of the company under the hand of the secretary or any two of the directors of the company, and on the part of any other party under the hand of such party, or if such party be a corporation aggregate, under the common seal of such corporation, and such appointment shall be delivered to the arbitrators, and shall be deemed a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same shall be made; and after any such appointment shall have been made, neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as a revocation; and if for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing, in which shall be stated the matters so required to be referred to arbitration, shall have been served by the one party on the other party to appoint an arbitrator, such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbitrator, then upon such failure the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbitrator, may appoint such arbitrator to act on behalf of both parties; and such arbitrator may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute; and in such case the award or determination of such single arbitrator shall be final.

(1) See the cases relating to arbitrations, ante, text, 283; also the notes (c) to (g), ante, App. 49—51.

APPENDIX.

CXXVII. If, before the matters so referred shall be determined, any arbitrator appointed by either party die, or become incapable to act, the party by whom such arbitrator was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place, and if, for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose, he fail to do so, the remaining or other arbitrator may proceed ex parte; and every arbitrator so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbitrator at the time of such his death or incapacity as aforesaid.

Vacancy of arbitrator to be supplied.

CXXVIII. Where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrators shall, before they enter upon the matters referred to them, nominate and appoint, by writing under their hands, an umpire to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under this or the special act; and, if such umpire shall die or become incapable to act, they shall forthwith, after such death or incapacity, appoint another umpire in his place; and the decision of every such umpire on the matters so referred to him shall be final.

Appointment of umpire.

CXXIX. If, in either of the cases aforesaid, the said arbitrators shall refuse, or shall, for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration, neglect to appoint an umpire, the Board of Trade shall, on the application of either party to such arbitration, appoint an umpire; and the decision of such umpire on the matters on which the arbitrators shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under this or the special act, shall be final.

Board of Trade empowered to appoint an umpire, on neglect of the arbitrators.

CXXX. If, where a single arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrator shall die, or become incapable to act, before he shall have made his award, the matters referred to him shall be determined by arbitration, under the provisions of this or the special act, in the same manner as if such arbitrator had not been appointed.

In case of death of single arbitrator, the matter to begin de novo.

CXXXI. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, either of the arbitrators refuse or for seven days neglect to act, the other arbitrator may proceed ex parte, and the decision of such other arbitrator shall be as effectual as if he had been the single arbitrator appointed by both parties.

If either arbitrator refuse to act, the other to proceed ex parte.

CXXXII. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, and where neither of them shall refuse or neglect to act as aforesaid, such arbitrators shall fail to make their award within twenty-one days after the day on which the last of such arbitrators shall have been appointed, or within such extended time (if any) as shall have been appointed for that purpose by both such arbitrators, under their hands, the matter referred to them shall be determined by the umpire to be appointed as aforesaid.

If arbitrators fail to make their award within twenty-one days, the matter to go to the umpire.

CXXXIII. The said arbitrators, or their umpire, may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party, which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties, or their witnesses, on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose.

Power for arbitrators to call for books, &c.

CXXXIV. Before any arbitrator or umpire shall enter into the consideration of any matters referred to him, he shall, in the presence of a justice, make and subscribe the following declaration; (that is to say,)

Arbitrator and umpire to make declaration.

"I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely declare, that I will faithfully and honestly, and to the best of my skill and ability, hear and determine the matters referred to me under the provisions of the act" [naming the special act].

A. B.

"Made and subscribed in the presence of ."

And such declaration shall be annexed to the award when made; and if any arbitrator or umpire, having made such declaration, shall wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

CXXXV. Except where, by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, it shall be otherwise provided, the costs of and attending every such arbitration to be determined by the arbitrators, shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators.

Costs to be in the discretion of the arbitrators.

CXXXVI. The submission to any such arbitration may be made a rule of any of the superior courts, on the application of either of the parties.

Submission to arbitration may be made a rule of court.

CXXXVII. No award made with respect to any question referred to arbitration under the provisions of this or the special act shall be set aside for irregularity or error in matter of form.

The award not to be set aside for matter of form.

CXXXVIII. And be it enacted, That any summons or notice, or any writ or other proceeding at law, or in equity, requiring to be served upon the company, may be served by the same being left at, or transmitted through the post directed to, the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices, where there shall be more than one, or being given personally to the secretary (m), or, in case there be no secretary, then by being given to any one director of the company.

Service of notices upon company.

APPENDIX.

Tender of amends.

CXXXIX. And be it enacted, That if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given; and if, before action brought in respect thereof, such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and, if no such tender shall have been made, it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the court where such action shall be pending, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defendants are allowed to pay money into court.

Recovery of Damages and Penalties.

Provision for damages not otherwise provided for.

CXL. In all cases where any damages, costs or expenses are by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, directed to be paid, and the method of ascertaining the amount, or enforcing the payment thereof, is not provided for, such amount, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by two justices; and if the amount so ascertained be not paid, by the company or other party liable to pay the same, within seven days after demand, the amount may be recovered by distress of the goods of the company or other party liable as aforesaid; and the justices by whom the same shall have been ordered to be paid, or either of them, or any other justice, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

Distress against the treasurer.

CXLI. If sufficient goods of the company cannot be found whereon to levy any such damages, costs and expenses payable by the company, the same may, if the amount thereof do not exceed twenty pounds, be recovered by distress of the goods of the treasurer of the company; and the justices aforesaid, or either of them, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly; but no such distress shall issue against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days' previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress as aforesaid, he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all cost and expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the company coming into his custody, or he may sue the company for the same.

Method of proceeding before justices in questions of damages,
&c.

CXLII. Where, in this or the special act, any question of compensation, expenses, charges or damages, or other matter, is referred to the determination of any one justice or more, it shall be lawful for any justice, upon the application of either party, to summon the other party to appear before one justice, or before two justices, as the case may require, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such one justice, or such two justices, as the case may be, to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties, or any of them, and their witnesses, on oath; and the cost of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such justices, and they shall determine the amount thereof.

Publication of
penalties.

CXLIII. The company shall publish the short particulars of the several offences for which any penalty is imposed by this or the special act, or by any bye-law of the company affecting other persons than the shareholders, officers or servants of the company, and of the amount of every such penalty, and shall cause such particulars to be painted on a board, or printed upon paper, and pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal place of business of the company, and, where any such penalties are of local application, shall cause such boards to be affixed in some conspicuous place in the immediate neighbourhood to which such penalties are applicable or have reference; and such particulars shall be renewed as often as the same, or any part thereof, is obliterated or destroyed; and no such penalty shall be recoverable unless it shall have been published and kept published in the manner hereinbefore required.

Penalty for defacing boards used for such publication.

CXLIV. If any person pull down or injure any board put up or affixed as required by this or the special act for the purpose of publishing any bye-law or penalty, or shall obliterate any of the letters or figures thereon, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding five pounds, and shall defray the expenses attending the restoration of such board.

Penalties to be summarily recovered before two justices.

CXLV. Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special act, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two justices; and, on complaint being made to any justice, he shall issue a summons requiring the party complained against to appear before two justices at a time and place to be named in such summons, and every such summons shall be served on the party offending, either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party 281.

complained against, or, in his absence, after proof of the due service of such summons, it shall be lawful for any two justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and that although no information in writing or in print shall have been exhibited before them; and, upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such justices to convict the offender, and, upon such conviction, to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such cost attending the conviction as such justices shall think fit.

CXLVI. If forthwith, upon any such adjudication as aforesaid, the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such costs as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and costs shall be levied by distress, and such justices, or either of them, shall issue their or his warrant of distress accordingly.

Penalties to be levied by distress.

CXLVII. It shall be lawful for any such justice to order any offender so convicted as aforesaid to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to the warrant of distress to be issued for levying such penalty or forfeiture and costs, unless the offender give sufficient security, by way of recognizance or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the justice, for his appearance before him on the day appointed for such return, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking such security; but if, before issuing such warrant of distress, it shall appear to the justice, by the admission of the offender or otherwise, that no sufficient distress can be had within the jurisdiction of such justice whereon to levy such penalty or forfeiture and costs, he may, if he thinks fit, refrain from issuing such warrant of distress; and in such case, or if such warrant shall have been issued, and upon the return thereof such insufficiency as aforesaid shall be made to appear to the justice, then such justice shall, by warrant, cause such offender to be committed to gaol, there to remain without bail for any term not exceeding three months, unless such penalty or forfeiture and costs be sooner paid and satisfied.

Imprisonment in default of distress.

CXLVIII. Where, in this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty or otherwise, is directed to be levied by distress, such sum of money shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party liable to pay the same; and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and chattels, after satisfying such sum of money, and the expenses of the distress and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been distrained.

Distress, how to be levied.

CXLIX. No distress levied by virtue of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall such party be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

Distress not unlawful for want of form.

CL. The justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed may, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, award not more than one-half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such parish; or, if the place wherein the offence shall have been committed shall be extra-parochial, then such justices shall direct such remainder to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such extra-parochial place, or, if there shall not be any poor's rate therein, in aid of the poor's rate of any adjoining parish or district.

Application of penalties.

CLI. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before a justice, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

Penalties to be sued for within six months.

CLII. If, through any act, neglect or default on account whereof any person shall have incurred any penalty imposed by this or the special act, any damage to the property of the company shall have been committed by such person, he shall be liable to make good such damage as well as to pay such penalty; and the amount of such damages shall, in case of dispute, be determined by the justices by whom the party incurring such penalty shall have been convicted; and on non-payment of such damages, on demand, the same shall be levied by distress, and such justices, or one of them, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

Damage to be made good in addition to penalty.

CLIII. It shall be lawful for any justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such justice shall have jurisdiction under the provisions of this or the special act, at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath or to give evidence before such justice, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds for every such offence.

Penalty on witnesses making default.

Access to special Act.

CLIV. It shall be lawful for any officer or agent of the company, and all persons called by him to his assistance, to seize and detain any person who shall have committed any offence against the provisions of this or the special act, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such officer or agent, and convey him, with all convenient despatch, before some justice, without any warrant or other authority than this or the special act; and such justice shall proceed with all convenient despatch to the hearing and determining of the complaint against such offender.

CLV. The justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule to this act annexed.

CLVI. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of the superior courts.

CLVII. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any justice with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the general quarter sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days' notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith, after such notice, enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the court thereon.

CLVIII. At the quarter sessions for which such notice shall be given, the court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the costs, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CLIX. Provided always, and be it enacted, That, notwithstanding anything herein or in the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, contained, every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law in pursuance thereof, in respect of any offence which shall take place within the metropolitan police district, shall be recovered, enforced, accounted for, and, except where the application thereof is otherwise specially provided for, shall be paid to the receiver of the Metropolitan Police District, and shall be applied in the same manner as penalties or forfeitures, other than fines upon drunken persons, or upon constables for misconduct, or for assaults upon police constables, are directed to be recovered, enforced, accounted for, paid and applied by an act passed in the third year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for regulating the Police Courts in the Metropolis;" and every order or conviction of any of the police magistrates in respect of any such forfeiture or penalty shall be subject to the like appeal, and upon the same terms, as is provided in respect of any order or conviction of any of the said police magistrates by the said last-mentioned act; and every magistrate by whom any order or conviction shall have been made shall have the same power of binding over the witnesses who shall have been examined, and such witnesses shall be entitled to the same allowance of expenses as he or they would have had or been entitled to in case the order, conviction and appeal had been made in pursuance of the provisions of the said last-mentioned act.

CLX. And be it enacted, That every person who, upon any examination upon oath, under the provisions of this or the special act, or any act incorporated therewith, shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

CLXI. And be it declared and enacted, That all sums of money which have been or shall be paid into the Bank of Ireland in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery of Ireland, under the provisions of an act passed in the second year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to provide for the Custody of certain Monies paid in pursuance of the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament by Subscribers to Works or Undertakings to be effected under the Authority of Parliament" (p), shall and may be paid out and applied under any order of the said Court of Chancery exempt from ushers' poundage.

And with respect to the provisions to be made for affording access to the special act by all parties interested, be it enacted as follows:—

CLXII. The company shall, at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special act, keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special act printed by the printers to her Majesty, or some of them; and shall also, within the space of such six months, deposit in the office of each of the clerks of the peace of the several counties into which the works shall extend a copy of such special act so printed as aforesaid; and the said clerks of the peace shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same, and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections by an act passed in the first year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament."

CLXIII. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit, as hereinbefore mentioned, any of the said copies of the special act, they shall forfeit twenty pounds for every such offence, and also five pounds for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CLXIV. That this act shall not extend to Scotland (q).

lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, if he or they shall so think fit, from time to time to order and direct that, in addition to the number of head and other constables whom the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland is or are authorized to appoint by virtue of an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty, intituled "An Act to consolidate the Laws relating to the Constabulary Force in Ireland," and the other acts amending the same, such number of head and other constables as he or they shall think fit, not exceeding in any case the number specified in any such application as aforesaid, shall be appointed and employed during the construction of such public works, in aid of and in conjunction with the said constabulary force in such county, county of a city, county of a town, or place, near to the said public works so in progress of construction, as shall be mentioned in the said order, and shall remain there for such length of time, or remove to or remain at such other place or places near to such public works for such time or times, as shall be mentioned or directed by such order, or any other order or orders which may from time to time be made by such lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors or by the inspector general of the said constabulary force, under the control and directions of the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors; and such constables may in like manner, by any such order, be reduced in number, or wholly removed from the neighbourhood of such works; and the head and other constables so appointed shall, during the period of such employment, have the same amount of pay and allowances, and the same rights, powers and authorities, privileges and advantages, and be subject to the same provisions and enactments, rules, regulations and orders, and be in all respects in the same situation in the county, county of a city, or county of a town in which they shall be stationed, as far as the circumstances of the case will admit, as if they had been appointed to and formed part of the constabulary force established in and for such county, county of a city, or county of a town.

II. And be it enacted, That the inspector general of the said constabulary force, with the assistance of the receiver of the said force, shall from time to time, or as often as he shall think convenient, prepare and certify under his hand a detailed account of the expense incurred for the pay, salary, clothing and equipment, lodging and other allowances of such men so appointed and employed as aforesaid, which expense, when approved and certified by the chief or under secretary of such lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors, the said company or parties, or their agent, shall, upon demand, pay to the said receiver, to be placed to the credit of the county, county of a city, or county of a town in which such constables as aforesaid shall have been so employed.

III. And be it enacted, That in all cases where the company or other parties carrying on such public work shall refuse or neglect, during fourteen days next after demand thereof, to pay any such expense, or any part thereof, as shall have been so certified and approved as aforesaid, the same shall and may be sued for in any of the superior courts, at the suit of her Majesty's attorney-general for Ireland, as a debt due to her Majesty, or, upon production of such account, so certified and approved, before any two justices of the county, county of a city, or county of a town in which such constables shall have been so employed as aforesaid; and upon proof on oath of such demand made as aforesaid of such company or parties, or any officer superintending such public works, and upon the application of the said receiver of the constabulary force, or any person by him authorized in writing, it shall be lawful for such justices, by their warrant under their hands and seals (which they are hereby authorized and required to grant), to cause the amount of such account to be levied, together with the expenses of levying the same, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the company or other parties carrying on such public works as aforesaid; and the surplus, if any, arising from such distress and sale, after deducting the amount of such account, together with the reasonable expenses attendant on such distress and sale, shall be rendered to the said company or parties.

IV. And be it enacted, that this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

An Act to facilitate the Admission in Evidence of certain Official and other Documents.
[8th August, 1845.]

Whereas it is provided by many statutes, that various certificates, official and public documents, documents and proceedings of corporations and of joint-stock and other companies, and certified copies of documents, bye-laws, entries in registers and other books, shall be receivable in evidence of certain particulars in courts of justice, provided they be respectively authenticated in the manner prescribed by such statutes; And whereas the beneficial effect of these provisions has been found by experience to be greatly diminished by the difficulty of proving that the said documents are genuine; and it is expedient to facilitate the admission in evidence of such and the like documents: be it therefore enacted, That whenever, by any act now in force, or hereafter to be in force, any certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation or joint-stock or other company, or any certified copy of any document, bye-law, entry in any register or other book, or of any other proceeding, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any court of justice, or before any legal tribunal, or either House of Parliament, or any committee of either House, or in any judicial proceeding, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence, provided they respectively purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, as required, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the respective acts made, or to be hereafter made, without any proof of the seal or stamp, where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, and without any further proof thereof, in every case in which the original record could have been received in evidence.

Certain documents to be received in evidence without proof of seal or signature, &c. of person signing the same.

II. That all courts, judges, justices, masters in Chancery, masters of courts, commissioners judicially acting, and other judicial officers, shall henceforth take judicial notice of the signature of any of the equity or common law judges of the superior courts at Westminster, provided such signature be attached or appended to any decree, order, certificate or other judicial or official document.

Courts, &c. to take judicial notice of signature of equity or common-law judges, &c.

III. That all copies of private and local and personal acts of Parliament not public acts, if purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers, and all copies of the journals of either House of Parliament, and of royal proclamations, purporting to be printed by the printers to the Crown, or by the printers to either House of Parliament, or by any or either of them, shall be admitted as evidence thereof by all courts, judges, justices and others, without any proof being given that such copies were so printed.

Copies of private acts printed by Queen's printer, journals of Parliament, and proclamations, admissible as evidence.

IV. That if any person shall forge the seal, stamp or signature of any such certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation or joint-stock or other company, or of any certified copy of any document, bye-law, entry in any register or other book, or other proceeding as aforesaid (t), or shall tender in evidence any such certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation or joint-stock or other company, or any certified copy of any document, bye-law, entry in any register or other book, or of any other proceeding, with a false or counterfeit seal, stamp or signature thereto, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, whether such seal, stamp or signature be those of or relating to any corporation or company already established, or to any corporation or company to be hereafter established, or if any person shall forge the signature of any such judge as aforesaid to any order, decree, certificate or other judicial or official document, or shall tender in evidence any order, decree, certificate or other judicial or official document with a false or counterfeit signature of any such judge as aforesaid thereto, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, or if any person shall print any copy of any private act or of the journals of either House of Parliament, which copy shall falsely purport to have been printed by the printers to the Crown, or by the printers to either House of Parliament, or by any or either of them, or if any person shall tender in evidence any such copy, knowing that the same was not printed by the person or persons by whom it so purports to have been printed, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and shall upon conviction be liable to transportation for seven years, or to imprisonment for any term not more than three nor less than one year, with hard labour: provided also, that whenever any such document as before mentioned shall have been received in evidence by virtue of this act, the court, judge, commissioner or other person officiating judicially who shall have admitted the same, shall, on the request of any party against whom the same is so received, be authorized, at its or at his own discretion, Persons forging seal, stamp, or signature of certain documents, or printing any private act with false purport, guilty of felony.

9 & 10 VICT. CAP. 20.

An Act to amend an Act of the second Year of her present Majesty, for providing for the Custody of certain Monies paid in pursuance of the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament, by Subscribers to Works or Undertakings to be effected under the authority of Parliament. [18th June, 1846.]

1 & 2 Vict. c. 117. Whereas an act was passed in the second year of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act to provide for the Custody of certain Monies paid in pursuance of the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament, by Subscribers to Works or Undertakings to be effected under the authority of Parliament:" And whereas it is expedient that the said act should be repealed, and should be re-enacted with such modifications, extensions and alterations as after mentioned: be it therefore enacted, That the said act shall be and is hereby repealed: provided always, that all acts done under the provisions of the said act shall be good, valid and effectual to all intents and purposes, and that all sums of money paid under the provisions of the said act shall be dealt with in all respects as if this act had not been passed.

Recited act repealed.

Acts done and monies paid under former act.

Authority to deposit.

II. That in all cases in which any sum of money is required by any standing order of either House of Parliament, either now in force or hereafter to be in force, to be deposited by the subscribers to any work or undertaking which is to be executed under the authority of an act of Parliament, if the director or person or directors or persons having the management of the affairs of such work or undertaking, not exceeding five in number, shall apply to one of the clerks in the office of the clerk of the Parliaments with respect to any such money required by any standing order of the lords spiritual and temporal in Parliament assembled, or to one of the clerks of the private bill office of the House of Commons with respect to any such money required by any standing order of the Commons in Parliament assembled to be deposited, it shall be lawful for the clerk so applied to, by warrant or order under his hand, to direct that such sum of money shall be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say,) into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in England, if the work or undertaking in respect of which the sum of money is required to be deposited is intended to be executed in that part of the United Kingdom called England, or into any of the banks of Scotland established by act of Parliament or royal charter, in the name and with the privity of the Queen's Remembrancer of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, at the option of the person or persons making such application as aforesaid, in case such work or undertaking is intended to be executed in that part of the United Kingdom called Scotland, or into the Bank of Ireland, in the name and with the privity of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, in case such work or undertaking is intended to be made or executed in that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland; and such warrant or order shall be a sufficient authority for the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in England, the Queen's Remembrancer of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, and the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, respectively, to permit the sum of money directed to be paid by such warrant or order to be placed to an account opened or to be opened in his name in the bank mentioned in such warrant or order.

Payment of deposit.

III. That it shall be lawful for the person or persons named in such warrant or order, or the survivors or survivor of them, to pay the sum mentioned in such warrant or order into the bank mentioned in such warrant or order in the name and with the privity of the officer or person in whose name such sum shall be directed to be paid by such warrant or order, to be placed to his account there ex parte the work or undertaking mentioned in such warrant or order, pursuant to the method prescribed by any act or acts for the time being in force for regulating monies paid into the said courts, and pursuant to the general orders of the said courts respectively, and without fee or reward; and every such sum so paid in, or the securities in or upon which the same may be invested as hereinafter mentioned, or the stocks, funds, or securities authorized to be transferred or deposited, in lieu thereof as hereinafter mentioned, shall there remain until the same, with all interest and dividends, if any, accrued thereon, shall be paid out of such bank, in pursuance of the provisions of this act: Provided always, that in case any such director or person, directors or persons, having the management of any such proposed work or undertaking as aforesaid, shall have previously invested in the Three per Centum Consolidated or the Three per Centum Reduced Bank Annuities, Exchequer Bills or other Government securities, the sum or sums of money required by any such standing order of either House of Parliament as aforesaid to be deposited by the subscribers to any work or undertaking which is to be executed under the authority of an act of Parliament, it shall be lawful for the person or persons named in such warrant or order, or the survivors or survivor of them, to deposit such Exchequer bills or other Government securities in the bank mentioned in such warrant or order in the name and with the privity of the officer or person in whose name such sum shall by such warrant or order be directed to be paid, or to transfer such Government stocks or funds into the name of the officer or person; and such transfer or deposit shall be directed by such clerk of the office of the clerk of the Parliaments, or such clerk of the private bill office of the House of Commons, as the case may be, in lieu of payment of so much of the sum of money required to be deposited as aforesaid as the same Exchequer bills or other the Government stocks or funds will extend to satisfy at the price at which the same were originally purchased by the said person or persons, director or directors as aforesaid, such price to be proved by production of the broker's certificate of such original purchase.

IV. That if the person or persons named in such warrant or order, or the survivors or survivor of them, desire to have invested any sum so paid into the Bank of England or the Bank of Ireland, or any interest or dividend which may have accrued on any stocks or securities so transferred or deposited as aforesaid, the court in the name of whose accountant-general the same may have been paid may, on a petition presented to such court in a summary way by him or them, order that such sum or such interest or dividends shall, until the same be paid out to the parties entitled to the same in pursuance of this act, be laid out in the Three per Centum Consolidated or Three per Centum Reduced Bank Annuities, or any Government security or securities, at the option of the aforesaid person or persons, or the survivors or survivor of them (u).

V. That on the termination of the session of Parliament in which the petition or bill for the purpose of making or sanctioning any such work or undertaking shall have been introduced in Parliament, or if such petition or bill shall be rejected or finally withdrawn by some proceeding in either House of Parliament, or shall not be allowed to proceed, or if the person or persons by whom the said money was paid or security deposited shall have failed to present a petition, or if an act be passed authorizing the making of such work or undertaking (x), and if in any of the foregoing cases the person or persons named in such warrant or order, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the majority of such persons, apply by petition to the court in the name of whose Accountant-General the sum of money mentioned in such warrant or order shall have been paid, or such Exchequer bills, stocks, or funds shall have been deposited or transferred as aforesaid, or to the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, in case such sum of money shall have been paid in the name of the said Queen's Remembrancer, the court in the name of whose Accountant-General or Queen's Remembrancer such sum of money shall have been paid, or such Exchequer bills, stocks or funds shall have been deposited or transferred, shall by order direct the sum of money paid in pursuance of such warrant or order, or the stocks, funds or securities in or upon which the same may have been invested, and the interest or dividends thereof, or the Exchequer bills, stocks or funds so deposited or transferred as aforesaid, and the interest and dividends thereof, to be paid or transferred to the party or parties so applying, or to any other person or persons whom they may appoint in that behalf; but no such order shall be made in the case of any such petition or bill being rejected or not being allowed to proceed, or being withdrawn, or not being presented, or of an act being passed authorizing the making of such work or undertaking, unless upon the production of the certificate of the chairman of committees of the House of Lords with reference to any proceeding in the House of Lords, or of the speaker of the House of Commons with reference to any proceeding in the House of Commons, that the said petition or bill was rejected or not allowed to proceed, or was withdrawn during its passage through one of the Houses of Parliament, or was not presented, or that such act was passed, which certificate the said chairman or speaker shall grant on the application in writing of the person or persons or the majority of the persons named in such warrant, or the survivor or survivors of them: Provided always, that the granting of any such certificate, or any mistake or error therein or in relation thereto, shall not make the chairman or speaker signing the same liable in respect of any monies, stocks, funds and securities which may be paid, deposited, invested, or transferred in pursuance of the provisions of this act, or the interest or dividends thereof.

Investment of deposit.

Repayment of deposit.

Granting certificate, &c., not to make the chairman or speaker signing the same liable.

9 & 10 VICT. CAP. 57.

An Act for regulating the Gauge of Railways (y). [18th August, 1846.]

On what gauge railways shall be made.

Whereas it is expedient to define the gauge on which railways shall be constructed; be it enacted, That, after the passing of this act, it shall not be lawful (except as herein-after excepted) to construct any railway for the conveyance of passengers on any gauge other than four feet eight inches and half an inch in Great Britain, and five feet three inches in Ireland: Provided always, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall be deemed to forbid the maintenance and repair of any railway constructed before the passing of this act on any gauge other than those hereinbefore specified, or to forbid the laying of new rails on the same gauge on which such railway is constructed within the limits of deviation authorized by the several acts under the authority of which such railways are severally constructed.

Exception of certain railways.

II. That nothing hereinbefore contained shall apply to any railway constructed or to be constructed under the provisions of any present or future act containing any special enactment defining the gauge or gauges of such railway, or any part thereof, or to any railway which is in its whole length southward of the Great Western Railway, or to any railway in any of the counties of Cornwall, Devon, Dorset or Somerset, for which any act has been or shall be passed in this session of Parliament, or to any railway in any of the last-mentioned counties now in course of construction, or to the two railways severally to be constructed under the authority of two acts passed in this session of Parliament, severally intituled "An Act for making a Railway from the Great Western Railway at West Drayton to Uxbridge in Middlesex," and "An Act for making a Railway from the Great Western Railway at Maidenhead in Berkshire to the Town of High Wycombe in the County of Buckingham;" or to so much of an act passed in this session, intituled "An Act to authorize certain Extensions of the Line of the Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Railway and to amend the Act relating thereto," as authorizes the construction of a branch railway from the Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Railway to the town of Witney in the County of Oxford; or to an act passed or which may be passed in this session of Parliament "to authorize the Construction of a Railway from Melin-y-Manach to Rhydydefydd in the County of Glamorgan."

IV. That it shall not be lawful, after the passing of this act, to alter the gauge of any railway used for the conveyance of passengers (y).

V. That nothing hereinbefore contained shall be deemed to affect the provisions of two acts passed in the last session of Parliament, respectively intituled "An Act for making a Railway from the City of Oxford to the Town of Rugby," and "An Act for making a Railway from Oxford to Worcester and Wolverhampton," with respect to the gauge on which they are to be formed, or the additional rails which, according to the several provisions of the last two recited acts, are to be or may be laid down and maintained on the railways thereby authorized, or with respect to the powers thereby conferred on the commissioners of her Majesty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations concerning the construction and use of the railways thereby authorized.

VI. That if any railway used for the conveyance of passengers shall be constructed or altered contrary to the provisions of this act, the company authorized to construct the railway, or, in the case of any demise or lease of such railway, the company for the time being having the control of the works of such railway, shall forfeit ten pounds for every mile of such railway which shall be so unlawfully constructed or altered, during every day that the same shall continue so unlawfully constructed or altered; and in estimating the amount of any such penalty any distance less than one mile shall be estimated as a mile (y).

VII. That over and above the penalty hereinbefore provided, if any railway used for the conveyance of passengers shall be constructed or altered contrary to the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings, or for the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's Privy

(y) Sections 4, 6, 7, 8 of this act were made applicable to railway companies incorporated by certificate of the Board of Trade under "The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864," by that act. 27 & 28 Vict. c. 121, post.

Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations, to abate and remove the same or any part thereof so constructed or altered contrary to the provisions of this act, and to restore the site thereof to its former condition (z).

VIII. That all penalties under this act may be recovered from the company liable to pay and make good the same, as, under the provisions of an act passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled "An Act for consolidating in one Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the making of Railways," a penalty for any infringement of the last-recited acts is recoverable against a company authorized to construct a railway (z).

An Act to abolish Deodands, [18th August, 1846.]

Whereas the law respecting the forfeiture of chattels which have moved to or caused the death of man, and respecting deodands, is unreasonable and inconvenient: Be it enacted, That, from and after the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, there shall be no forfeiture of any chattel for or in respect of the same having moved to or caused the death of man; and no coroner's jury sworn to inquire, upon the sight of any dead body, how the deceased came by his death, shall find any forfeiture of any chattel which may have moved or caused the death of the deceased, or any deodand whatsoever; and it shall not be necessary in any indictment or inquisition for homicide to allege the value of the instrument which caused the death of the deceased, or to allege that the same was of no value.

Deodands and forfeiture of chattels moving to or causing death abolished from and after 1 Sept. 1846.

9 & 10 VICT. CAP. 93.

An Act for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accidents (a).

[26th August, 1846.]

Whereas no action at law is now maintainable against a person who by his wrongful act, neglect or default may have caused the death of another person, and it is oftentimes right and expedient that the wrongdoer in such case should be answerable in damages for the injury so caused by him: Be it therefore enacted, That whensoever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect or default, and the act, neglect or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person who would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony.

An action to be maintainable against any person causing death through neglect, &c., notwithstanding the death of the person injured.

II. That every such action shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent and child of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and shall be brought by and in the name of the executor or administrator of the person deceased; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought; and the amount so recovered, after deducting the costs not recovered from the defendant, shall be divided amongst the before-mentioned parties in such shares as the jury by their verdict shall find and direct.

Action to be for the benefit of certain relations, and shall be brought by and in the name of executor or administrator of the deceased.

III. That not more than one action shall lie for and in respect of the same subject-matter of complaint; and that every such action shall be commenced within twelve calendar months after the death of such deceased person.

Only one action shall lie, and to be commenced within twelve months.

IV. That in every such action the plaintiff on the record shall be required, together with the declaration, to deliver to the defendant or his attorney a full particular of the person or persons for whom and on whose behalf such action shall be brought, and of the nature of the claim in respect of which damages shall be sought to be recovered.

Plaintiff to deliver a full particular of the person for whom such damages shall be claimed. Construction of act.

V. That the following words and expressions are intended to have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, so far as such meanings are not excluded by the context or by the nature of the subject-matter; that is to say, words denoting the singular number are to be understood to apply also to plurality of persons or things; and words denoting the masculine gender are to be understood to apply also to persons of the feminine gender; and the word "person" shall apply to bodies politic and corporate; and the word "parent" shall include father and mother, and grandfather and grandmother, and stepfather and stepmother; and the word "child" shall include son and daughter, and grandson and granddaughter, and stepson and stepdaughter.

VI. That this act shall come into operation from and immediately after the passing thereof, and that nothing herein contained shall apply to that part of the United Kingdom called Scotland.

Act to take effect after passing, and not to apply to Scotland.

10 & 11 VICT. CAP. 42.

An Act to transfer the Collection and Management of the Duties in respect of Stage Carriages, Hackney Carriages, and Railway Passengers, from the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes to the Commissioners of Excise.

[25th June, 1847.]

Duties in respect of stage and hackney carriages and licences for the same respectively, and in respect of railway passengers, transferred to the commissioners of excise.

Powers and provisions of the said acts to be executed by commissioners and officers of excise.

Bonds and securities given by railway companies to account for duties to be applicable to the duties when transferred to the commissioners of excise.

Whereas the collection and management of the several and respective duties hereinafter specified and described are now by law vested in the commissioners of stamps and taxes, and it is expedient to transfer the same to the commissioners of excise: Be it therefore enacted, That from and after the fifth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven, the several and respective duties hereinafter specified and described; (that is to say), the duties granted and now payable in Great Britain by and under an act passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty (b), for and in respect of stage carriages, and licences for keeping, using or employing stage carriages, and for and in respect of passengers conveyed upon railways, and also the duties granted and now payable by and under an act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, for and upon and in respect of licences to keep, use, employ, and let to hire hackney carriages within the distance of five miles from the General Post Office in the city of London, shall be and the same are hereby transferred to and placed under the care and management of the commissioners of excise for the time being; and the said several and respective duties shall thenceforth be denominated and deemed to be duties of excise, and shall be raised, levied, collected and accounted for by and under the authority of the commissioners of excise and their officers, anything in any former act or acts contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

II. That from and after the said fifth day of September all the powers, provisions, regulations and directions now in force contained in the said several acts hereinbefore mentioned or referred to, or in any other act or acts, and which at the time of the passing of this act may lawfully be executed and enforced by the commissioners of stamps and taxes or their officers, in relation to the said respective duties hereby transferred as aforesaid, or any of them, or in relation to stage carriages or hackney carriages, or the drivers or conductors of any such carriages, shall be executed and enforced by the commissioners of excise and their officers respectively, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such powers, provisions, regulations and directions had been repeated and re-enacted in this act, and expressly given to the said commissioners of excise and their officers respectively; and that all the powers, provisions, regulations and directions, forfeitures, pains and penalties contained in or imposed by any act or acts now in force relating to the said respective duties hereby transferred as aforesaid, as well as the powers, provisions, regulations and directions, forfeitures, pains and penalties contained in or imposed by any act or acts in force in relation to any of the duties of excise, so far as such last-mentioned powers, provisions, regulations and directions, forfeitures pains and penalties shall be applicable to the said respective duties hereby transferred as aforesaid, and so far as the same shall not be inconsistent with the special powers, provisions, regulations and directions, forfeitures, pains and penalties now in force in relation to the said respective duties hereby transferred as aforesaid, shall be of full force and effect, and shall be applied, enforced and put in execution for raising, collecting, levying, recovering and securing the last-mentioned duties, and for preventing, detecting and punishing all frauds, forgeries and other offences relating thereto, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such powers, provisions, regulations and directions, forfeitures, pains and penalties were repeated and specially enacted in this act with reference to the said respective duties hereby transferred as aforesaid; and wherever in any act or acts now in force in relation to the said last-mentioned respective duties, or to stage carriages or hackney carriages, or the drivers or conductors of any such carriages, the head office for stamps or for stamps and taxes, or the solicitor of stamps or for stamps and taxes, or any officer of stamp duties or for stamps and taxes, is mentioned or designated, the same shall in relation to the said respective duties hereby transferred as aforesaid, and to stage carriages and hackney carriages, and the said drivers and conductors respectively, be deemed and taken to mean the chief office of excise in London, the solicitor of excise, and any officer of excise respectively.

III. That every bond which before or upon the said fifth day of September shall have been given by the proprietor or company of proprietors of any railway for accounting for and paying to the Receiver-General or any other officer or officers of stamps and taxes the said duties for and in respect of passengers conveyed upon railways, and every transfer of stock or deposit of exchequer bills which shall have been made in lieu of giving any such bond as aforesaid, shall, so far as relates to such duties as shall become payable at any time and from time to time after the said last-mentioned day respectively, be and remain a good and valid security for accounting for and paying over the said last-mentioned duties to the Receiver-General or other officer or officers of excise, and for that purpose, wherever in the condition of any such bond, or in any declaration relating to any such transfer or deposit as aforesaid, the terms and expressions following occur; (that is to say), "Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes," "Receiver-General of Stamps and Taxes," "Officer of Stamp Duties," or "Head Office for Stamps and Taxes in the City of Westminster," the same, so far as relates to the said duties which shall become payable after the said last-mentioned day, shall be severally construed and read as if the following terms and expressions had been inserted in the said condition or declaration, and severally substituted for and in lieu of the said former terms and expressions; (that is to say), "Commissioners of Excise" for and in lieu of "Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes," "Receiver-General of Excise" for and in lieu of "Receiver-General of Stamps and Taxes," "Officer of Excise" for and in lieu of "Officer of Stamp Duties," and "Chief Office of Excise in the City of London" for and in lieu of "Head Office for Stamps and Taxes in the City of Westminster;" and in all proceedings at law or in equity touching or concerning any of the said duties which shall become payable after the said last-mentioned day, the condition of any such bond and every such declaration as aforesaid shall respectively be pleaded and read as if such substituted terms and expressions had been originally inserted therein for and in lieu of the said other terms and expressions.

(b) See ante, 15.

APPENDIX.

IV. That nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to terminate, affect or alter any licence which shall have been granted with relation to any of the said respective duties on or before the said fifth day of September, and which shall then be unexpired and in full force, but that every such licence shall remain and continue as valid and effectual for the purposes for which the same was granted, until the expiration thereof by effluxion of time or otherwise, as it would have been if this act had not been passed.

Act not to affect existing licences.

V. That nothing herein contained shall extend or be deemed or construed to extend to any arrears of the said duties or to any penalties which shall respectively have been or be or become due or payable, or have been or be incurred, before or upon the said fifth day of September, or to any offence committed before or upon the said last-mentioned day, but that all such arrears of duty and all such penalties as aforesaid shall respectively be collected, received, sued for, and recovered, and all such offences shall be dealt with and punished as if this act had not been passed.

Act not to extend to arrears of duty or penalties incurred or offences committed on or before 5th Sept. 1847.

An Act for the more effectual Taxation of Costs on Private Bills in the House of Commons (c). [22nd July, 1847.]

Whereas an act was passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act to establish a Taxation of Costs on Private Bills in the House of Commons, and to prohibit the Sale of certain Offices under the Serjeant at Arms attending the House of Commons:" And whereas it is expedient to repeal the same, and to make more effectual provision for taxing the costs and expenses to be charged by parliamentary agents, attornies, solicitors and others in future sessions of Parliament, in respect of bills subject to the payment of fees in Parliament, commonly called private bills, and to be incurred in complying with the standing orders of the House of Commons relative to such bills, and in preparing, bringing in and carrying the same through, or in opposing the same in, the House of Commons: Be it enacted, That, except as to any costs, charges and expenses which shall have been incurred in the present or any preceding session of Parliament, the said recited act shall be repealed: Provided always, that the repeal of the said recited act shall not be construed to revive any act or any provision thereof which was thereby repealed.

6 Geo. 4, c. 123,

repealed.

II. That no parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, nor any executor, administrator or assignee of any parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any costs, charges or expenses in respect of any proceedings in the House of Commons in any future session of Parliament relating to any petition for a private bill, or private bill, or in respect of complying with the standing orders of the said house relative thereto, or in preparing, bringing in and carrying the same through, or opposing the same in, the House of Commons, until the expiration of one month after such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, has delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent by post to or left for him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode, a bill of such costs, charges and expenses, and which bill shall either be subscribed with the proper hand of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or, in the case of a partnership, by any of the partners, either with his own name or with the name of such partnership, or of the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or be enclosed in or accompanied by a letter subscribed in like manner referring to such bill: Provided always, that it shall not in any case be necessary, in the first instance, for such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator, or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, in proving a compliance with this act, to prove the contents of the bill delivered, sent or left by him, but it shall be sufficient to prove that a bill of costs, charges and expenses subscribed in manner aforesaid, or inclosed in or accompanied by such letter as aforesaid, was delivered, sent or left in manner aforesaid, but nevertheless it shall be competent for the other party to show that the bill so delivered, sent or left was not such a bill as constituted a bonâ fide compliance with this act: Provided also, that it shall be lawful for any judge of the superior courts of law or equity in England or Ireland, or of the court of session in Scotland, to authorize a parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor to commence an action or suit for the recovery of his costs, charges and expenses against the parties chargeable therewith, although one month has not expired from the delivery of a bill as aforesaid, on proof to the satisfaction of the said judge that there is probable cause for believing that such party is about to quit that part of the United Kingdom in which such judge hath jurisdiction.

Parliamentary agent, attorney, or solicitor not to sue for costs until one month after delivery of his bill.

III. That the speaker of the House of Commons shall appoint a fit person to be the taxing officer of the House of Commons, and every person so appointed shall hold his office during the pleasure of the speaker, and shall execute the duties of his office conformably to such directions as he may from time to time receive from the speaker.

IV. That the speaker may from time to time prepare a list of such charges as it shall appear to him that, after the present session of Parliament, parliamentary agents, attorneys, solicitors and others may justly make with reference to the several matters comprised in such list; and the several charges therein specified shall be the utmost charges thenceforth to be allowed upon the taxation of any such bill of costs, charges and expenses in respect of the several matters therein specified; provided always, that the said taxing officer may allow all fair and reasonable costs, charges and expenses in respect of any matters not included in such list.

V. That for the purpose of any such taxation the said taxing officer may examine upon oath any party to such taxation, and any witnesses who may be examined in relation thereto, and may receive affidavits, sworn before him or before any master or master extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, relative to such costs, charges or expenses; and any person who on such examination on oath, or in any such affidavit, shall wilfully or corruptly give false evidence, shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

VI. That the said taxing officer shall be empowered to call for the production of any books or writings in the hands of any party to such taxation relating to the matters of such taxation; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize such taxing officer to determine the amount of fees which may have been payable to the House of Commons in respect of the proceedings upon any private bill.

VII. That it shall be lawful for the said taxing officer to demand and receive for any such taxation such fees as the House of Commons may from time to time by any standing order authorize and direct, and to charge the said fees, and also to award costs of such taxation against either party to such taxation, or in such proportion against each party, as he may think fit; and he shall pay and apply the fees so received by him in such manner as shall be directed by any such standing order as aforesaid.

VIII. That if any person upon whom any demand shall be made by any parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney, or solicitor, or other person, for any costs, charges or expenses in respect of any proceedings in the House of Commons in any future session of parliament relating to any petition for a private bill, or private bill, or in respect of complying with the standing orders of the said house relative thereto, or in preparing, bringing in or carrying the same through, or in opposing the same in, the House of Commons, or if any parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or other person, who shall be aggrieved by the non-payment of any costs, charges and expenses incurred or charged by him in respect of any such proceedings as aforesaid, shall make application to the said taxing officer at his office for the taxation of such costs, charges and expenses, the said taxing officer, on receiving a true copy of the bill of such costs, charges and expenses which shall have been duly delivered as aforesaid to the party charged therewith, shall in due course proceed to tax and settle the same; and upon every such taxation, if either the parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney, or solicitor or other person, by whom such demand shall be made as aforesaid, or the party charged with such bill of costs, charges and expenses, having due notice, shall refuse or neglect to attend such taxation, the said taxing officer may proceed to tax and settle such bill and demand ex parte; and if depending such taxation any action or other proceeding shall be commenced for the recovery of such bill of costs, charges and expenses, the court or judge before whom the same shall be brought shall stay all proceedings thereon until the amount of such bill shall have been duly certified by the speaker as hereinafter provided: provided always, that no such application shall be entertained by the said taxing officer if made by the party charged with such bill after a verdict shall have been obtained or a writ of inquiry executed in any action for the recovery of the demand of any such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor or other person, or after the expiration of six months after such bill shall have been delivered, sent or left as aforesaid; provided also, that if any such application shall be made after the expiration of six months as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the speaker, if he shall so think fit, on receiving a report of special circumstances from the said taxing officer, to direct such bill to be taxed.

IX. That the said taxing officer shall, if required by either party, report his taxation to the speaker, and in such report shall state the amount fairly chargeable in respect of such costs, charges and expenses, together with the amount of costs and fees payable in respect of such taxation as aforesaid; and within twenty-one clear days after any such report shall have been made either party may deposit in the office of the said taxing officer a memorial, addressed to the speaker, complaining of such report or any part thereof, and the speaker may, if he shall so think fit, refer the same, together with such report, to the said taxing officer, and may require a further report in relation thereto, and on receiving such further report may direct the said taxing officer, if necessary, to amend his report; and if no such memorial be deposited as aforesaid, or so soon as the matters complained of in any such memorial shall have been finally disposed of, the speaker shall, upon application made to him, deliver to the party concerned therein, and requiring the same, a certificate of the amount so ascertained, which certificate shall be binding and conclusive on the parties as to the matters comprised in such taxation, and as to the amount of such costs, charges and expenses, and of the costs and fees payable in respect of such taxation, in all proceedings at law or in equity or otherwise; and in any action or other proceeding brought for the recovery of the amount so certified such certificate shall have the effect of a warrant of attorney to confess judgment; and the court in which such action shall be commenced, or any judge thereof, shall, on production of such certificate, order judgment to be entered up for the sum specified in such certificate in like manner as if the defendant in any such action had signed a warrant to confess judgment in such action to that amount; provided always, that if such defendant shall have pleaded that he is not liable to the payment of such costs, charges and expenses, such certificate shall be conclusive only as to the amount thereof which shall be payable by such defendant in case the plaintiff shall in such action recover the same.

X. That in the construction of this act the word "month" shall be taken to mean a calendar month; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons, matters or things as well as one person, matter or thing; and every word importing the plural number shall extend and be applied to one person, matter or thing as well as several persons, matters or things; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male; and the word "person" shall extend to any body politic, corporate or collegiate, municipal, civil or ecclesiastical, aggregate or sole, as well as an individual; and the word "oath" shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, and any declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other person allowed by law to make a declaration instead of making an oath; unless in any of the cases aforesaid it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

XI. That in citing this act in other acts of Parliament, and in legal and other instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The House of Commons Costs Taxation Act, 1847."

APPENDIX.

No application to be entertained by taxing officer after verdict obtained.

Taxing officer to report to the speaker.

If either party complain of report, they may deposit a memorial, and the speaker may require a further report.

If no memorial deposited, speaker may issue certificate of the amount found due.

Certificate to have the effect of a warrant to confess judgment.

11 & 12 VICT. CAP. 72.

An Act to amend the Acts relating to the Constabulary Force in Ireland, and to amend the Provisions for the Payment of Special Constables. [31st August, 1848.]

Power to Lord Lieutenant, &c. to fix salaries of constables.

Whereas it is expedient to alter and amend several provisions of the acts relating to the constabulary force in Ireland: Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall and may be lawful for the lord lieutenant, or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, to fix and appoint such annual salary as may from time to time to him or them seem proper to be paid to each constable appointed or to be appointed under any of the acts now in force relating to the constabulary force in Ireland, not exceeding thirty-eight pounds for each mounted constable, and thirty-six pounds for each dismounted constable, and to direct that such annual salary shall commence on and from the first day of April in this present year.

Rate of charge on counties and boroughs for constabulary force appointed on application of town council of a borough.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 108.

IV. And whereas it is expedient to fix and determine the sum to be charged upon each county, or any part or district thereof, or any county of a city or county of a town in Ireland, in all cases where by the laws now in force one moiety of the costs and expenses of any constabulary force is chargeable thereupon respectively, and also the sum to be charged upon any borough for which a constabulary force shall be appointed in compliance with a memorial from the town council of such borough, in pursuance of an act of the third and fourth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in Ireland:" be it enacted, that from and after the thirty-first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, in all such cases as aforesaid there shall be chargeable to each such county, county of a city, county of a town or borough, per annum for each sub-inspector one moiety of the sum of one hundred and sixty pounds, for each head constable one moiety of the sum of seventy pounds, and for each constable or sub-constable one moiety of the sum of thirty-five pounds, two shillings and sixpence, and so in proportion for every fractional part of a year.

Proportion of sub-inspectors and head constables to additional force appointed on certificate of magistrates, or application from town council of a borough.

V. And be it enacted, that in all cases where an additional constabulary force shall have been certified by the magistrates of any county at large, at any general or special sessions, as now by law provided to be necessary for the due execution of the law within such county, and shall be appointed in conformity with such certificate, and also in all cases where an additional constabulary force shall be appointed for any borough in pursuance of the provisions of the said act of the third and fourth years of the reign of her present Majesty, it shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland to appoint one sub-inspector for every fifty constables and sub-constables, and one head-constable for every twenty-five constables and sub-constables, who may have been so appointed; and the expense of such sub-inspectors and head-constables shall be chargeable upon such county or borough respectively, and be repaid by grand jury presentment, or from the borough fund, in the same manner as the expense of the constables and sub-constables who may have been so appointed.

Where constabulary shall be required under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 46, to keep the peace near railway works, company, &c. requiring the same to pay the expense.

VII. And whereas by an act of the eighth and ninth years of her present Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act for the Appointment of additional Constables for keeping the Peace near Public Works in Ireland" (f), provision is made for the appointment and payment of additional head and other constables for keeping the peace in certain cases in the neighbourhood of railway works or other public works in Ireland: be it enacted, that, whenever such additional head or other constables shall have been or shall be appointed and employed for the purposes and under the provisions of the said last-recited act, the company or other parties carrying on such railway or other public works shall be chargeable for the expense of such head and other constables as in the said act provided, but according to the proportion of head and other constables hereinbefore provided, and also according to the scale of charge hereinbefore provided for head and other constables, save that such company or parties shall be chargeable for the whole and not for the moiety only of such respective rates of charge.

(e) See ante, 101, note (s).

(f) Ante, p. 101.

IX. And be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this act the officers and men of the constabulary force shall have the same rights, powers and authorities in and for each of the counties, counties of cities, and counties of towns immediately adjacent to that to which they may have been appointed, as if they had been appointed for such counties, counties of cities, or counties of towns respectively.

12 & 13 VICT. CAP. 78.

An Act for the more effectual Taxation of Costs on Private Bills in the House of Lords, and to facilitate the Taxation of other Costs on Private Bills in certain Cases (f). [28th July, 1849.]

Whereas an act was passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act to establish a Taxation of Costs on Private Bills in the House of Lords:" And whereas it is expedient to repeal the same, and to make more effectual provision for taxing the costs and expenses to be charged by parliamentary agents, attornies, solicitors and others, in future sessions of Parliament, in respect of bills subject to the payment of fees in Parliament, commonly called private bills, and to be incurred in complying with the standing orders of the House of Lords relative to such bills, and in preparing, bringing in, and carrying the same through, or in opposing the same in, the House of Lords, and to facilitate the taxation of other costs incurred in respect of private bills, in certain cases: Be it enacted, That, except as to any costs, charges, and expenses which shall have been incurred in the present or any preceding session of Parliament, the said recited act shall be repealed.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 64,

repealed.

II. That no parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, nor any executor, administrator or assignee of any parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any costs, charges or expenses in respect of any proceedings in the House of Lords in any future session of Parliament relating to any petition for a private bill, or private bill, or in respect of complying with the standing orders of the said house relative thereto, or in preparing, bringing in, and carrying the same through, or opposing the same in, the House of Lords, until the expiration of one month after such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or executor, administrator or assignee, of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, has delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent by post to or left for him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house or last known place of abode, a bill of costs, charges and expenses, and which bill shall either be subscribed with the proper hand of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or in case of a partnership by any of the partners, either with his own name or with the name of such partnership, or of the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or be inclosed in or accompanied by a letter subscribed in like manner referring to such bill: Provided always, that it shall not in any case be necessary, in the first instance, for such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, in proving a compliance with this act, to prove the contents of the bill delivered, sent or left by him, but it shall be sufficient to prove that a bill of costs, charges and expenses, subscribed in manner aforesaid, or enclosed in or accompanied by such letter as aforesaid, was delivered, sent or left in manner as aforesaid; but nevertheless it shall be competent for the other party to show that the bill so delivered, sent or left was not such a bill as constituted a bonâ fide compliance with this act: Provided also, that it shall be lawful for any judge of the superior courts of law or equity in England or Ireland, or of the court of session in Scotland, to authorize a parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor to commence an action or suit for the recovery of his costs, charges and expenses against the party chargeable therewith, although one month has not expired from the delivery of a bill as aforesaid, on proof to the satisfaction of the said judge that there is probable cause for believing that such party is about to quit that part of the United Kingdom in which such judge hath jurisdiction.

Parliamentary agent, attorney, or solicitor not to sue for costs, until one month after delivery of his bill.

Evidence of delivery of bill.

Power to judge to authorize action before expiration of one month.

III. That the clerk of the Parliaments, when discharging the duties of his office in person, or in his absence the clerk assistant, shall appoint a fit person to be the taxing officer of the House of Lords; and every person so appointed shall hold his office during the pleasure of the clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant, and shall execute the duties of his office conformably to such directions as he may from to time receive from the clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant.

Taxing officer to be appointed by the clerk of Parliaments or clerk assistant.

(f) See ante, text, 35. See a similar statute relating to costs in the House of Commons, ante, 109.

APPENDIX.

The clerk of Parliaments or clerk assistant to prepare list of charges thenceforth to be allowed.

Taxing officer empowered to examine parties and witnesses on oath.

Taxing officer empowered to call for books and papers.

Taxing officer to take such fees as may be allowed by House of Lords.

Application of fees.

On application of party chargeable, or on application of parliamentary agent, attorney, or solicitor, the taxing officer to tax the bill.

No application to be entertained by taxing officer after verdict obtained.

Taxing officer to report to the clerk of the Parliaments.

If either party complain of report, they may deposit a memorial, and the clerk of the Parliaments may require a further report.

IV. That the clerk of the Parliaments, when discharging the duties of his office in person, or in his absence the clerk assistant, may from time to time prepare a list of such charges as it shall appear to him that, after the present session of Parliament, parliamentary agents, attornies, solicitors and others may justly make with reference to the several matters comprised in such list; and the several charges therein specified shall be the utmost charge thenceforth to be allowed upon the taxation of any such bill of costs, charges and expenses in respect of the several matters therein specified: Provided always, that the said taxing officer may allow all fair and reasonable costs, charges and expenses in respect of any matters not included in such list.

V. That for the purpose of any such taxation the said taxing officer may examine upon oath any party to such taxation, and any witnesses who may be examined in relation thereto, and may receive affidavits, sworn before him or before any master or master extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, relative to such costs, charges or expenses; and any person who on such examination on oath or in any such affidavit shall wilfully or corruptly give false evidence shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

VI. That the said taxing officer shall be empowered to call for the production of any books or writings in the hands of any party to such taxation relating to the matters of such taxation.

VII. That it shall be lawful for the said taxing officer to demand and receive for any such taxation such fees as the House of Lords may from time to time by any order authorize and direct, and to charge the said fees, and also to award costs of such taxation against either party to such taxation, or in such proportion against each party as he may think fit, and he shall pay and apply the fees so received by him in such manner as shall be directed by any such order as aforesaid.

VIII. That if any person upon whom any demand shall be made by any parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or other person, for any costs, charges or expenses in respect of any proceedings in the House of Lords in any future session of Parliament relating to any petition for a private bill, or private bill, or in respect of complying with the standing orders of the said house relative thereto, or in preparing, bringing in, or carrying the same through, or in opposing the same in, the House of Lords, or if any parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or other person, who shall be aggrieved by the nonpayment of any costs, charges and expenses incurred or charged by him in respect of any such proceedings as aforesaid, shall make application to the said taxing officer at his office for the taxation of such costs, charges and expenses, the said taxing officer, on receiving a true copy of the bill of such costs, charges and expenses which shall have been duly delivered as aforesaid to the party charged therewith, shall in due course proceed to tax and settle the same; and upon every such taxation, if either the parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or other person, by whom such demand shall be made as aforesaid, or the party charged with such bill of costs, charges and expenses, having due notice, shall refuse or neglect to attend such taxation, the said taxing officer may proceed to tax and settle such bill and demand ex parte; and if pending such taxation any action or other proceeding shall be commenced for the recovery of costs, charges and expenses, the court or judge before whom the same shall be brought shall stay all proceedings thereon until the amount of such bill shall have been duly certified by the clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant as hereinafter provided: Provided always, that no such application shall be entertained by the said taxing officer if made by the party charged with such bill after a verdict shall have been obtained or a writ of inquiry executed in any action for the recovery of the demand of any such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator or assignee of such parliamentary agent, attorney or solicitor, or other person, or after the expiration of six months after such bill shall have been delivered, sent or left as aforesaid: Provided also, that if any such application shall be made after the expiration of six months as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant aforesaid, if he shall so think fit, on receiving a report of special circumstances from the said taxing officer, to direct such bill to be taxed.

IX. That the said taxing officer shall report his taxation to the clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant as aforesaid, and in such report shall state the amount fairly chargeable in respect of such costs, charges and expenses, together with the amount of costs and fees payable in respect of such taxation as aforesaid, and shall also state in such report the amount due in respect of the said costs, charges and expenses; and within twenty-one clear days after any such report shall have been made either party may deposit in the office of the clerk of the Parliaments a memorial, addressed to the clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant as aforesaid, complaining of such report or any part thereof, and such clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant as aforesaid may, if he shall so think fit, refer the same, together with such report, to the said taxing officer, and may require a further report in relation thereto, and on receiving such further report may direct the said taxing officer, if necessary, to amend his report; and if no such memorial be deposited as aforesaid, or so soon as the matters complained of in any such memorial shall have been finally disposed of, such clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant as aforesaid shall, upon application made to him, deliver to the party concerned therein and requiring the same, a certificate of the amount so ascertained, which certificate shall be binding and conclusive on the parties as to the matters comprised in such taxation, and as to the amount of such costs, charges and expenses, and the amount due in respect of the same, and of the costs and fees payable in respect of such taxation, in all proceedings at law or in equity or otherwise; and in any action or other proceeding brought for the recovery of the amount so certified to be due, such certificate shall have the effect of a warrant of attorney to confess judgment; and the court in which such action shall be commenced, or any judge thereof, shall on production of such certificate, order judgment to be entered up for the sum specified in such certificate, in like manner as if the defendant in any such action had signed a warrant to confess judgment in such action to that amount: Provided always, that if such defendant shall have pleaded that he is not liable to the payment of such costs, charges and expenses, such certificate shall be conclusive only as to the amount thereof which shall be payable by such defendant in case the plaintiff shall in such action recover the same.

X. That if any bill of costs taxable by virtue of this act, or of "The House of Commons Costs Taxation Act, 1847," (g) shall comprise any costs, charges and expenses incurred in respect of a private bill, but not taxable by virtue of the act in pursuance whereof such bill shall come to be taxed, it shall be lawful for the taxing officer of the House of Lords, or for the taxing officer of the House of Commons, as the case may be, either to tax and settle such last-mentioned costs, charges and expenses, or to request the taxing officer of the other House of Parliament, or the proper officer of any other court having such an officer, to assist him in taxing and settling any part of such bill; and such officer so requested shall thereupon proceed to tax and settle the same, and shall return the same, with his opinion thereupon, to the officer who shall have so requested him to tax and settle the same; and in taxing such costs, charges and expenses the taxing officer of the House of Lords and the taxing officer of the House of Commons respectively shall have the same powers and may receive the same fees in respect of such taxation as if such costs, charges and expenses were taxable by virtue of this act, or of "The House of Commons Costs Taxation Act, 1847," as the case may be; and the proper officer of any court so requested to tax the same shall have the same powers and may receive the same fees as upon a reference from the court of which he is such officer.

XI. That the taxing officer of the House of Lords, or the taxing officer of the House of Commons, as the case may be, may include the amount of such last-mentioned costs, charges and expenses in the report of his taxation of any such bill of costs; and in case the clerk of the Parliaments or clerk assistant, or the speaker of the House of Commons, as the case may be, shall deliver a certificate of the amount so ascertained and declared in such report, including such last-mentioned costs, charges and expenses, such certificate shall have the same force and effect as if the whole of such bill of costs were taxable by virtue of the act in pursuance whereof such certificate shall be so delivered.

XII. That in case the taxing officer of the House of Lords, or the taxing officer of the House of Commons, shall be requested by the proper officer of any other court to assist him in taxing and settling any costs, charges and expenses incurred in respect of a private bill, being part of any bill of costs which shall have been referred to him by the court of which he is such officer, such taxing officer so requested shall thereupon proceed to tax and settle the same, and shall return the same, with his opinion thereupon, to the officer who shall have so requested him to tax and settle the same, and shall have the same powers and may receive the same fees in respect of such taxation, as if application had been made to him for the taxation thereof in pursuance of this act, or of "The House of Commons Costs Taxation Act, 1847" (g), as the case may be.

XIII. That it shall be lawful for the taxing officer of the House of Lords, and for the taxing officer of the House of Commons, to take an account between the parties to any taxation under this act or "The House of Commons Costs Taxation Act, 1847," of all sums of money paid or received in respect of any bill of costs which is the subject of such taxation, or any matters contained therein, and to report the amount of all such sums of money and the amount due in respect of such bills of costs.

XIV. That in the construction of this act the word "month" shall be taken to mean a calendar month; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons, matters or things, as well as one person, matter or thing; and every word importing the plural number shall extend and be applied to one person, matter or thing, as well as several persons, matters or things; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male; and the word "person" shall extend to any body politic, corporate or collegiate, municipal, civil or ecclesiastical, aggregate or sole, as well as an individual; and the word "oath" shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, and any declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other person allowed by law to make a declaration instead

APPENDIX.

If no memorial deposited, clerk of the Parliaments may issue certificate of the amount found due.

Certificate to have the effect of a warrant to confess judgment.

Taxing officer of either house may tax costs not otherwise taxable under the act by virtue of which any bill shall be taxed; and may request other officers to assist him.

Such officers to have the same powers as in taxing other costs.

Taxing officers to include certain costs in their reports, and certificates of the amount to be delivered.

Officers of other courts may request the taxing officer of either house to tax parts of bills.

Taxing officer of either house may take an account between the parties.

13 & 14 VICT. CAP. xxxiii.

An Act for regulating legal Proceedings by or against the Committee of Railway Companies associated under the Railway Clearing System, and for other Purposes (h).
[25th June, 1850.]

Whereas for some time past arrangements have subsisted between several railway companies for the transmission without interruption of the through traffic in passengers, animals, minerals and goods passing over different lines of railway, for the purpose of affording, in respect to such passengers, animals, minerals and goods, the same or the like facilities as if such lines had belonged to one company, which arrangements are commonly known as and in this act are designated as "the clearing system," and which arrangements are conducted under the superintendence of a committee appointed by the boards of directors of such several railway companies, which committee is in this act designated "the committee," and the business of such committee has heretofore been and is now carried on at a building appropriated for the purpose in Seymour Street, adjoining the Euston station of the London and North Western Railway Company : And whereas the clearing system has been productive of great convenience to the public, and of a considerable saving of expense in the transmission of passengers, animals, minerals and goods over the lines of the several railway companies parties to such association ; but considerable difficulty has been experienced in carrying into effect the objects of the association, in consequence of the committee not possessing the power of prosecuting or defending actions or suits, or taking other legal proceedings : And whereas George Carr Glyn, Esquire, is the present chairman, and Kenneth Morison is the present secretary of the committee : And whereas the purposes aforesaid cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament : May it therefore please your Majesty that it may be enacted ; and be it enacted by (&c. &c.), That the several companies which at the time of the passing of this act are parties to the clearing system, and every other company which shall in manner hereafter mentioned become party to the same, shall be subject to the provisions of this act.

Companies parties to the clearing system to be subject to the provisions of this act.

Other companies may join, with assent of committee.

II. And be it enacted, That if any company which may not be a party to the clearing system shall, by writing sealed with the common seal of such company, request the committee to admit such company to be a party to the clearing system, and the committee shall assent to such request, such company shall from the time of such assent being given, or at such other time as may be specified in the said request, become a party to the clearing system.

Companies may retire, on giving notice.

III. And be it enacted, That if any company shall, by writing sealed with the common seal of such company, give notice to the committee of the desire of such company to cease to be a party to the clearing system, such company shall, at the expiration of one calendar month from the time when such notice shall be given, or if a more distant time shall be stated in such notice then at the time so stated, cease to be a party to the clearing system.

Committee may give company notice to retire.

IV. And be it enacted, That if not less than two-thirds of the committee present at a meeting specially summoned shall, by writing signed by their secretary or by two members of the committee, give notice to any company that such company shall cease to be a party to the clearing system at a time named in such notice, not being less than one calendar month from the time of giving such notice, such company shall at the time so named cease to be a party to the clearing system.

Each company to appoint a member of the committee.

V. And be it enacted, that each company party to the clearing system shall at all times be entitled to be represented on the committee by one delegate appointed by the board of directors of such company from time to time, such appointment to be certified in writing by the secretary or any two directors of such company : Provided always, that, notwithstanding any company may happen to be unrepresented by a delegate at any meeting, the acts of the committee shall be valid.

Meetings of the committee, quorum, &c.

VI. And be it enacted, That the committee shall meet at one of the clock in the afternoon of the second Wednesday in the months of March, June, September and December in every year, or so soon thereafter as a quorum shall be assembled, and at any other times whereof the secretary shall, at the written request of the chairman for the time being, or any two members of the committee, give at least ten days' notice in writing to every company party to the clearing system, or the secretary of every such company ; and every such meeting may be adjourned from time to time and from place to place as the committee shall think proper; and meetings and adjourned meetings of the committee shall be held at the said building in Seymour Street, except when the committee shall have appointed some other place, and then at such other place; and in order to constitute a meeting of the committee there shall be present at least ten members; and, except where otherwise provided, all questions at every meeting shall be determined by the majority of votes of the committee present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman of the meeting shall have a casting vote, in addition to his vote as one of the committee; and notice of the business to be brought before any meeting shall, at least six days before the day of such meeting, be given to every company party to the clearing system, or the secretary of every such company.

VII. And be it enacted, That until the first meeting of the committee which shall be held after the passing of this act the said George Carr Glyn, or other the chairman of the committee for the time being, shall continue in office; and at the first meeting of the committee which shall be held after the passing of this act, and in the month of March in each succeeding year, the committee present at the meeting shall, if they think fit, either continue in office the chairman for the time being, or choose another chairman; and a general meeting of the committee specially summoned shall have power to remove any chairman; and if any chairman shall die, or resign, or be removed, the committee shall have power, as soon as may be, to choose some other person to fill the vacancy thereby occasioned; but every chairman elected to supply a vacancy other than at a general meeting in the month of March in any year shall continue in office so long only as the person in whose place he shall be so elected would have been entitled to continue if such death, resignation or removal had not happened: Provided always, that it shall not be necessary that the person chosen as chairman be a delegate of any of the companies parties to the clearing system; but in case he shall not be a delegate he shall not be entitled to vote on any question, unless in the case of an equality of votes, when he shall be entitled to give the casting vote.

Appointment of the chairman.

VIII. And be it enacted, That if at any meeting of the committee the chairman shall not be present the committee present shall choose one of their members to be chairman of such meeting.

In the absence of chairman, committee to elect a chairman.

IX. And be it enacted, That the said Kenneth Morison shall be the secretary to the committee until he die, or resign, or be removed; and that the committee shall have the power to remove him and all future secretaries; and that in the event of the resignation, or death, or such removal as aforesaid of any secretary, the committee shall appoint a secretary to the committee.

Appointment of Secretary.

X. And be it enacted, That the committee may from time to time appoint a treasurer, and remove such treasurer from his appointment, and prescribe and alter the duties of the office of treasurer, and take from the treasurer such security as they shall think fit, which security may be taken in the name or names of such person or persons as the committee approve of.

Appointment of treasurer.

XI. And be it enacted, that any money which shall be received by the committee shall be held by the committee as trustees for the company or companies to whom the committee shall decide such money to be payable; but no member of the said committee shall be answerable for any such money as may be lost or withheld by reason of the misconduct, default or insolvency of the treasurer, or of any banker or agent, in whose hands the same may be, or by reason of any cause other than the personal misconduct of such member.

As to monies received by committee.

XII. And be it enacted, That the accounts of the clearing system, and the balances due to and from the several companies parties thereto, shall be settled and adjusted by the secretary of the committee for the time being, which secretary shall also settle and determine the amount to be from time to time contributed to the funds of the clearing system by the companies parties thereto; and in case of any difference respecting such accounts the decision of the committee, to the effect that any balance or sum is payable by any company then or theretofore party to the clearing system, shall be final and conclusive, and such sum or balance shall be a debt due to the said committee.

Accounts to be settled, and balance ascertained and declared by the committee.

XIII. And be it enacted, that the committee shall, out of the funds of the clearing system, pay all the expenses of the clearing system, and all costs, charges, damages and expenses which the members of the committee, or any or either of them, shall as such members or member, or which the secretary as nominal plaintiff or defendant, or other party, on behalf of the committee, bear, sustain or be put to, and that the members of the committee and secretary shall be completely indemnified and saved harmless out of the funds of the clearing system, and by the companies parties to the clearing system, of, from and against all action and actions, suit and suits, proceeding and proceedings, of any sort, costs, charges, damages and expenses, to which they or any or either of them may in any way be subjected, as members or member of the committee, by reason of anything which they or he may bona fide do or omit to do, whether such deed or omission be within their powers or not.

Expenses to be paid out of the funds of the clearing system.

XIV. And be it enacted, That the committee may, by action of debt in the name of their secretary, recover from any company any balance or sum which such committee shall decide to be payable by such company, whether to any other company or on account of the clearing system, and whether such company be still at the time of such decision or has then ceased to be a party to the clearing system, and whether such sum or balance shall or shall not have been previously ascertained by the secretary to be payable.

XV. And be it enacted, That the declaration for the recovery of such sum or balance may be in the form or to the effect of the form given in the Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, and that the directions contained in the said schedule for the use of the same shall be taken as part of this act.

XVI. And be it enacted, That if the defendants in such action shall plead that they never were indebted, then, on proof that the committee decided the sum in question to be payable by the defendants, and that the defendants were either at the time of such decision or at some previous time a party to the clearing system, and in the latter case upon further proof that such sum was decided to be payable in respect of some transactions, matters or expenses which happened or were sustained whilst the defendants were parties to the clearing system, the plaintiff shall be entitled to a verdict on that plea.

XVII. And be it enacted, That the defendants in such action may plead any matter showing that they have since the time of the decision discharged the sum or balance so decided to be payable, and shall not plead any plea with a plea denying the plaintiff to be secretary.

XVIII. And be it enacted, That the committee shall cause notes, minutes or copies, as the case may require, of all appointments made or contracts entered into by them, and of the orders and proceedings of all their meetings, to be duly entered in books to be kept by them for that purpose; and every such entry shall be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which such appointments, contracts, orders or proceedings respectively took place, who shall add the word "chairman" to his signature, and which entries may be made and signed either at or after the meetings to which they respectively relate; and every entry purporting to be so signed shall be received as evidence in all courts, and before all judges, justices and others, without proof of such respective meetings having been duly convened or held, or of the persons making or entering such orders or proceedings being members of the committee, or of the signature of such chairman, or of the fact of his having been chairman, all which last-mentioned matters shall be presumed, till the contrary be proved.

XIX. And be it enacted, That on the trial of any such action, after it is proved to the satisfaction of the court or judge trying the cause that such company is or had once been such a party, the books kept by the committee shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein stated and contained; and the secretary, although the nominal plaintiff, and the members of the committee, shall be competent witnesses, either for the plaintiff or for the defendants.

XX. And be it enacted, That the committee may in all cases sue and be sued in the name of the secretary to the committee; and that in all proceedings at law and in equity, and in bankruptcy, or of any other sort, whether civil or criminal, the name of the secretary may be used instead of the names of the members of the committee; and proofs, in cases of bankruptcy, insolvency or in winding up affairs, may be made by the secretary for the committee.

XXI. And be it enacted, That in any indictment or information for any felony or misdemeanor wherein it shall be necessary to state the ownership of any property whatsoever, whether real or personal, and the same shall either belong to the committee or be in their custody, or in the custody or possession of any officer, clerk or servant of the committee, or of any person employed for the purpose or in the capacity of clerk or servant by the committee, or in or on any building or land used for the purposes of the clearing system, or shall be used or intended to be used for the purposes of the clearing system, it shall be sufficient to state such property to belong to the secretary of the committee.

XXII. And be it enacted, That in any indictment for embezzlement, wherein it shall be necessary to state the party charged with the embezzlement to have been the clerk or servant of some master or masters, or to have been employed for the purpose or in the capacity of clerk or servant by some master or masters, and such masters shall have been the committee, it shall be sufficient in such indictment to name the secretary of the committee in every place in such indictment where the names of the members of the committee would but for this enactment be required to be inserted.

XXIII. And be it enacted, That every notice or requisition on the business of the clearing system, or given pursuant to this act, shall be sufficient if it be in writing signed by the secretary of the committee, or secretary or other officer of the company giving the same, and if it be sent by the General Post addressed to the secretary of the company for whom the same is intended, in case such notice or requisition be intended for any company, or to the secretary at the principal office of the clearing system, in case such notice or requisition be intended for the committee; and proof of such notice or requisition being deposited in any public letter box or receiving house for letters, intended to be forwarded by the General Post, shall be deemed proof of the due service of such notice or requisition; and notices or requisitions for each member of the committee shall be sufficient if sent in manner aforesaid, addressed to him at the principal office of the company whom he represents.

Short title and public act.

XXIV. And be it enacted, That in all pleadings or proceedings, civil or criminal, when it shall be required to mention all the companies parties to the clearing system, or the committee, it shall be sufficient to mention the companies by the description of "The Companies Parties to the Clearing System mentioned in the Railway Clearing Act, 1850," and to describe the committee by the description of "The Clearing Committee mentioned in the Railway Clearing Act, 1850," without stating the names of the individual companies and members.

XXV. And be it enacted, That in all cases where the name of the secretary to the committee shall be used under the authority of this act it shall be sufficient to name and describe him, and to state the authority for using his name, as in the form of declaration in Schedule (A.)

XXVI. And be it enacted, That upon the death or removal of any secretary no action or suit or other proceeding pending in his name, as plaintiff or defendant or otherwise, either on behalf of or against the committee, shall abate or be stayed, but as soon as another secretary shall be appointed the name of such new secretary shall be thereafter used; and in an action at law such name shall, whether it be before or after judgment, be introduced by suggestion, to which no plea or demurrer shall be allowed; and the omission to make such suggestion, and an erroneous suggestion, shall be mere irregularities, and shall, on the application of the committee or of the party opposed to the committee, be rectified, but shall not otherwise be taken advantage of.

XXVII. And be it enacted, That all the costs, charges and expenses of obtaining and passing this act or incident thereto shall be paid by the said committee out of the first monies which shall come to their hands after the passing of this act.

XXVIII. And be it enacted, That this act may be called "The Railway Clearing Act, 1850," and shall be deemed to be a public act, and as such shall be judicially noticed.

13 & 14 VICT. CAP. 83.

An Act to facilitate the Abandonment of Railways, and the Dissolution of Railway Companies, in certain Cases. [14th August, 1850.]

Whereas divers joint stock companies have been incorporated by act of Parliament for making railways, and it has been found that such railways, or certain parts thereof, cannot be made or carried on with advantage either to the promoters thereof or to the public, and it is expedient therefore that facilities should be given for the abandonment of such railways or parts of railways, and for the dissolution of such companies, or some of them, and winding up the concerns thereof; Be it therefore enacted, That if any company authorized by act of Parliament heretofore passed to make a railway desire that the making and carrying on of such railway or some part thereof, whether commenced or not, be abandoned, such company may, by the authority and with the consent of the holders of three-fifths of the shares or stock of such company, represented in manner hereinafter mentioned at a general meeting of shareholders to be convened in manner hereinafter mentioned, make application in writing to the commissioners of railways (i), setting forth the particulars of the railway or portion of the railway desired to be abandoned by them, and the grounds upon which such application is made.

Railway company may make application to commissioners of railways to be allowed to abandon their undertaking.

II. That it shall be lawful for the directors of any such railway company at any time to call a meeting of the shareholders thereof for the purpose of determining whether such application shall be made to the commissioners of railways, and so from time to time as they shall see fit.

Directors may call meeting to consider such application.

(i) This application must now be made to the Board of Trade; and see the provisions of this statute abstracted, ante, text, 450.

APPENDIX.

Shareholders may require directors to call meeting.

III. That it shall be lawful for any number of shareholders of any such company, not being less than five, and holding in the aggregate not less than one-twentieth of the capital or stock of the company, consisting of shares or stock whereon all calls for the time being have been paid up, but exclusive of any shares or stock held by or in the names of the directors of the company or any of them, or by or in the name of any person in trust for the directors or any of them, or for the company, and which shareholders shall have paid all the calls then due on the shares held by them, by writing under their hands to require the directors of such company to call a meeting for the purpose aforesaid; and upon the receipt of any such requisition such directors shall forthwith proceed to call a meeting of the shareholders of such company on a day to be named by them, not being less than fourteen nor more than twenty-eight days after the receipt of such requisition: Provided always, on the default of the directors to call and advertise such meeting within fourteen days after the receipt of the requisition, it shall be lawful for the requisitionists to call such meeting themselves, at a time and place to be appointed by them, of which fourteen days' notice shall be given by them by advertisement as hereinafter provided: Provided also, that when any meeting of any such company shall have been called pursuant to any such requisition as aforesaid, the directors of such company shall not be required to call any further meeting of such company upon any further requisition for the like object until twelve months shall have elapsed since the holding of such previous meeting.

After receipt of requisition, directors not to make any payments, except under existing liabilities, nor to enter into new contracts, nor to make new calls.

IV. That after any such meeting has been called by the directors, or after the receipt of any such requisition as aforesaid, it shall not be lawful for the directors to make any payments out of the monies of the company for the purposes of the railway proposed to be abandoned, except in discharge of bonâ fide debts or liabilities, or in performance of contracts or engagements previously entered into, and in payment of the expenses of calling and holding such meeting, nor to enter into any contracts or engagements on behalf of the company with respect to the railway so proposed to be abandoned, nor to make any calls, nor to register the transfer of any shares, until the meeting called as aforesaid shall have determined whether such application shall be made.

Mode of calling meeting, and signifying the consent of the shareholders to the application.

V. That the calling of any such meeting shall be by public advertisement in the manner required or usually adopted for advertising the extraordinary general meetings of such company, and where such meeting is called by the directors of the company a circular letter shall be sent by the post addressed to each of the registered shareholders of such company, according to his registered address or known address, seven clear days at least before the holding of such meeting, and stating that a general meeting of the shareholders of such company will be held at a time and place mentioned in such circular for the purpose of determining whether application shall be made to the commissioners of railways that such railway or the part thereof specified in such notice may be abandoned, and requesting such shareholder to signify his assent to or dissent therefrom, which may be according to a form to be contained in such circular letter, which form shall be to the effect set forth in the schedule hereto, and such circular letter shall request such shareholder either to return such form, signed by him, in a letter addressed to the secretary of such company, or to attend such general meeting as aforesaid, and deliver the same, so signed by him, to the chairman thereof; and in the case of every such meeting, whether called by the directors or by such requisitionists as aforesaid, the shareholders may signify their assent to or dissent from the proposed application, either by attending such meeting in person or by letter addressed to the secretary of the company, stating the assent or dissent of such shareholders, in a form which shall be to the effect of the form set forth in the schedule hereto, and signed by such shareholders respectively.

The number of the shareholders assenting or dissenting to be ascertained by scrutineers, and reported to the chairman.

VI. That at the meeting so to be called as aforesaid the scrutineers to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned shall cast up the amount of shares held by shareholders assenting to the making of such application, and the amount of shares held by shareholders dissenting therefrom, whether such assent or dissent have been signified by the shareholders sending to the secretary of the company such form as aforesaid, signed by him, or by such shareholder attending such meeting, and delivering in the same to the chairman thereof, and such scrutineers shall report to the chairman the amount of shares of the shareholders assenting to such application, and the amount of the shares of those dissenting therefrom, and the said chairman shall thereupon publicly announce to the meeting the said amounts respectively, and shall state whether or not the holders of three-fifths of the whole of such shares represented in manner aforesaid at the meeting consent to such application: Provided always, that in computing the amount of shares of the shareholders assenting or dissenting as aforesaid no share shall be taken into account the holder whereof shall not have been duly registered, or who shall not have paid all the calls then due by him upon all the shares held by him, unless such calls shall have been made within three months prior to the holding of such meeting, or if such meeting be held pursuant to a requisition of shareholders as hereinbefore provided, then three months prior to the day on which such requisition was presented to the directors.

Chairman of the meeting.

VII. That the chairman of the directors of such company, if present, or in his absence the deputy chairman, if any, of such directors shall be the chairman of such meeting as aforesaid, or if neither such chairman nor deputy chairman of the directors be present, any shareholder chosen for that purpose by a majority of the shareholders present at the meeting shall be the chairman thereof.

VIII. That at every such meeting the shareholders present thereat shall elect three shareholders of the company to be scrutineers for the purposes aforesaid, and in electing such scrutineers each shareholder shall have one vote only, and shall vote for one scrutineer only; and the decision of such scrutineers, or of any two of them, upon any of the matters hereby intrusted to them, shall be final in all respects.

IX. That for the purpose of receiving the report of the said scrutineers the chairman of such meeting may, if he think fit, on the application of any one of such scrutineers, and he shall, if required by more than one of such scrutineers, adjourn such meeting to some time to be appointed by him, not less than one clear day nor more than seven clear days from the day of holding such meeting.

X. That a certificate under the hand of the chairman of the meeting, stating that such meeting as aforesaid has been duly held, and such consent given as aforesaid in cases where the same is given, shall within one week after the day of holding such meeting be deposited in the office of the said commissioners of railways.

XI. Provided always, and be it enacted, That if it appear to any of the shareholders of any such company who shall have signed any such requisition, or been present at any such meeting as aforesaid at which the proposal to apply to the said commissioners to authorize the abandonment of the whole or part of a railway shall have been negatived or alleged to be negatived, either that such meeting was not duly called, or that the sense thereof was not duly taken according to the true intent and meaning of this act, and that if such meeting had been duly called, and the sense thereof duly taken, the consent of such meeting to the proposed application would have been given, it shall be lawful for any such shareholders, not being less in number than five, and holding in the aggregate not less than one-twentieth of the capital or stock of the company, consisting of shares or stock whereon all calls for the time being have been paid up, and which shareholders shall have paid all the calls then due on the shares held by them, to apply to the said commissioners, setting forth in writing the grounds on which they complain of the decision alleged to have been come to at such meeting as aforesaid, and praying that a further meeting may be called, and if it appear to the said commissioners (after hearing the parties complained of, if they desire to be heard,) that there is good reason to believe that if such meeting had been duly called, and the sense thereof duly taken, the consent of such meeting to the proposed application to the said commissioners would have been given, the said commissioners shall certify their judgment to that effect, and shall direct a further meeting to be called by the directors of such company at the time and place to be appointed by the said commissioners, and the said directors shall call such meeting accordingly, or in default thereof it shall be lawful for the shareholders who complained to the said commissioners of the proceedings of the former meeting to call such meeting, and all the provisions of this act shall apply to any further meeting so directed to be called in like manner as to any original meeting hereinbefore authorized or required to be called.

XII. That if at any such meeting any railway company shall determine, as hereinbefore mentioned, that such application as aforesaid shall be made, or if the said commissioners shall certify as aforesaid their judgment, that if such meeting had been duly called and the sense thereof duly taken the consent of such meeting to the proposed application to the said commissioners would have been given, then, as from the date of the resolution so come to at such meeting, or the date of the said certificate, as the case may be, the directors of such company shall not have power to proceed any further with the making of the railway, or the part thereof so proposed to be abandoned, until the decision of the commissioners of railways with respect to such application be made, and then only in accordance with such decision.

XIII. That if it appear to the said commissioners that there are sufficient grounds for entertaining such application, the said commissioners shall require and direct the company making the same to give notice of such application having been made, by advertisement inserted, in a form to be approved of by the said commissioners, once in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, according as the railway or part of the railway proposed to be abandoned is situate in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and once in each of three successive weeks in some newspaper published or circulating in each county in which any part proposed to be abandoned of such railway is situated, and affixed for three successive Sundays on the principal outer door of the church or churches of every parish in which any part of such railway where the whole is proposed to be abandoned, or in which any part proposed to be abandoned, is situate, and in Ireland such notice shall also be affixed to the Roman Catholic Chapel, and where there shall be no such church or chapel on some public or conspicuous place of such parish; and every such notice shall set forth within what time and in what manner any person who thinks himself aggrieved by any such proposed abandonment, and who desires to object thereto, may bring such objection before the commissioners.

XIV. That, for the purpose of ascertaining the state and condition of the company making any such application, and of inquiring into the expediency of the proposed abandonment of railway, and of determining the terms and conditions on which the same may be authorized by them, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of railways, by themselves or by any officers appointed and specially empowered by them for that purpose, to inspect the books of accounts, minutes of proceedings, or any other books, papers or documents in the possession or control of such company, and also, if they see fit so to do, to send, at the expense of such railway company, or at the expense of any person who applies to them for that purpose, an officer to be appointed by them to inspect the railway or proposed railway or work so proposed to be abandoned, and to collect evidence on the spot relative to such abandonment; and if any such company, or any of their officers or servants, shall refuse such inspection by the said commissioners, or any officer appointed and specially empowered by them for that purpose, or refuse or wilfully neglect to produce to the said commissioners or any such officer, on demand, any books, papers or documents in the possession or control of such company, every such company shall, for every such refusal or neglect, forfeit to her Majesty the sum of twenty pounds, and a further sum of five pounds for every day during which such refusal or wilful neglect shall be continued.

XV. That upon proof to the satisfaction of the said commissioners that such notice has been duly given, and after the expiration of the time therein appointed for bringing objections before the said commissioners, and after considering all the objections, if any, brought before them, the said commissioners may, if they think fit, and upon such terms and conditions as they think fit, by warrant under their seal, and signed by two or more of the said commissioners, authorize the abandonment of the railway or portion of railway described in such warrant.

XVI. Provided always, and be it enacted, That in considering the objections which may be made by any of the shareholders of any railway company to the proposed abandonment of a part only of the railway of such company, and in determining the terms and conditions on which the said commissioners may think fit to authorize any such partial abandonment, the said commissioners shall have regard to the local situation of the lands and residences of the shareholders so objecting with reference to the portion of railway proposed to be abandoned; and in the case of any such shareholders being original subscribers in the undertaking, and not being solicitors, agents or engineers employed in promoting the same, and whose places of residence or lands are adjoining or near the line of the portion of railway so proposed to be abandoned, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they think fit so to do, in any direction which (under the provision hereinafter contained) they may give for reducing the capital of the company authorized to construct such railway, to provide, at the request of any such last-mentioned shareholders, that the nominal amount of the shares held by them in such company may be reduced to the amount then already paid up by them respectively, or to such other extent as the said commissioners may think fit to order in that behalf, or the said commissioners may, at the like request, direct any such shares to be cancelled, and a part of the monies that may have been paid up in respect of such shares, bearing such proportion to the whole as the said commissioners having regard to all the circumstances of the case shall think fit to determine, to be repaid to such shareholders.

XVII. That within one month after the day on which any such warrant as aforesaid is granted by the said commissioners the railway company to which the same applies shall cause notice thereof to be inserted in the London, Edinburgh or Dublin Gazette, according as the railway or part of railway mentioned therein is situated in England, Scotland or Ireland, and once in each of three successive weeks in some newspaper published or circulating in each county in which any part of such abandoned railway is situate, and to be affixed for three successive Sundays on the principal outer door of the church or churches of every parish in which any such part of such railway is situate, and in Ireland such notice shall also be affixed to the Roman Catholic Chapel, and where there shall be no such church or chapel, on some public or conspicuous place of such parish; and every such notice shall require all persons having any claims or demands upon the said company for compensation or otherwise, by reason of the abandonment of railway authorized by such warrant, to transmit the statement of such claims or demands to the secretary of such company, at the office or usual place of business of the same company within four months from the date of such warrant.

XVIII. That upon proof to the satisfaction of the said commissioners that notice of such warrant has been duly published in manner hereinbefore required, the said commissioners shall certify the same accordingly; and such certificate shall be received in all courts of justice or elsewhere as evidence that such notice was duly published as aforesaid.

XIX. That after the granting of any such warrant, and the publication of such notice thereof as aforesaid, the company shall (subject to the provisions hereinafter contained) be released from all liability to make, maintain or work the railway mentioned in such warrant, or the part thereof thereby authorized to be abandoned, or to purchase any of the lands required for the making thereof, or to complete the purchase of any such lands for the purchase of which notice may have been given, or any contract entered into, by or on behalf of the company, or to complete any contract for or concerning the making, maintaining or working of the railway so to be abandoned, or any other contract relating to the railway or part of railway so authorized to be abandoned which by reason of such abandonment cannot be performed: Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall extend to release the company from any liability to complete the purchase of any land for the purchase of which any contract may have been entered into by or on behalf of the company, and which contract may have been in part performed, or by virtue or in pursuance of which a specified sum or price as the consideration for the purchase of the lands thereby agreed to be sold to or taken by the company shall have been fixed or ascertained previously to the passing of this act, notwithstanding the time for the completion of the purchase named in such contract shall have been subsequently extended by agreement or arrangement with the company.

XX. Provided always, and be it enacted, That in every case in which before the granting of any such warrant any notice hath been given or contract entered into by or on behalf of the company named therein for purchasing any lands which such company were by the acts relating thereto empowered to purchase for the purpose of constructing the railway or portion of railway so authorized to be abandoned, and from which contract such company would be relieved under the provisions hereinbefore contained, or where any contract had been entered into for or concerning the constructing, maintaining or working of the railway or part of railway so authorized to be abandoned, or any other contract relating thereto, which by reason of such abandonment cannot be performed, the company shall make to the owners or occupiers of and other parties interested in such lands, or being parties to such contracts as aforesaid, compensation, to be determined by arbitration as hereinafter mentioned, for all injury or damage, if any, sustained by such owners, occupiers, and other parties by reason of such purchase not being completed pursuant to such notice, or by reason of such contract not being performed.

XXI. That where any railway or part of a railway so authorized to be abandoned shall have been then made or commenced, such company shall make to the owners and occupiers of the lands adjoining the railway or part of a railway so commenced or made, and authorized to be abandoned, compensation, to be determined by arbitration as hereinafter mentioned, for all such injury or damage, if any, as shall be sustained by such owners or occupiers by reason of the omission to make gates, passages, drains, watercourses, bridges, and such other works, for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway, as such company would have been required to make if such railway had not been allowed to be abandoned.

XXII. That where the line of any railway so authorized to be abandoned shall have been wholly or partially laid out, and any road shall have been carried across such line of railway by means of a bridge or tunnel over or under such railway, which bridge or tunnel the company to whom such railway belonged would, in case the same had not been abandoned, have been liable to keep in repair, then in every such case, except where such bridge or tunnel shall, with the permission of the said commissioners, be by such company removed, and such road restored to the like or an equally convenient and good state as the same was in before it was interfered with by the makers of such railway, to the satisfaction (in case of difference between such company and the owner or persons having the management of such road) of the commissioners of railways, such company shall pay to the owner of such road, if it be a private road, or to the trustees, surveyors of highways, or other persons having the management of such road, if it be a turnpike or other public road, a sum of money, to be determined by arbitration as after mentioned, in lieu and discharge of their liability to keep such bridge or tunnel, and also the roadway over the same, in repair.

XXIII. That every sum so to be paid as last aforesaid to such trustees, surveyors, or other persons as aforesaid shall be by them forthwith paid over to the treasurer of the county where the bridge or tunnel in respect of which such sum was paid is situate, and shall be by him invested in consolidated bank annuities or other public securities, and the dividends or income thereof shall, until parliament shall otherwise provide, be applied in the maintenance of the bridge or tunnel in respect whereof the same was paid, in such manner as the justices in quarter sessions having jurisdiction where such bridge or tunnel is situate shall order.

XXIV. That every sum so to be paid as last aforesaid in Scotland to such trustees or other persons as aforesaid shall be by them paid into bank, and the interest to arise thereon shall, until parliament shall otherwise provide, be applied in the maintenance of the bridge or tunnel in respect whereof the same was paid, in such manner as the sheriff of the county in which such bridge or tunnel is situate, in case of any difficulty arising, shall direct.

XXV. That the amount of the compensation so to be made in the several cases aforesaid shall be determined, in case of difference, by arbitration, in the manner provided by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (k), or the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, Scotland, 1845, as the case may require, and for that purpose all the clauses of the said Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration shall be deemed to be incorporated with this act: Provided always, that no such railway company shall be liable to make any compensation in respect of damage alleged to have been sustained by reason of the abandonment of the railway or part of the railway, or the non-completion of any contract of such company in any of the cases aforesaid, unless the claim for such compensation shall have been made within six months after the Company liable for damage occasioned by their entry on lands for taking levels, &c. pursuant to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 84 (a), or 8 & 9 Vict. c. 19.

Lands purchased by the railway company to be sold within a limited time.

Where part of a railway is authorized to be abandoned, the commissioners may require the capital to be reduced.

After warrant for abandonment of the whole railway the powers of the company are to cease, except for winding up.

Provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108, to apply to cases where order of winding up was made prior to passing of said acts.

When warrant has been granted for abandoning the whole railway shareholders may petition for publication in the Gazette of the notice of the warrant for such abandonment as hereinbefore provided.

XXVI. Provided also, and be it enacted, That the authority so as aforesaid given for abandoning the making of any such railway or part of a railway shall not prejudice or affect the right of the owner or occupier of any lands to receive from such company compensation for any damage that may have been occasioned by the entry of such company upon such lands, for the purpose of surveying and taking levels, and of probing or boring to ascertain the nature of the soil, or of setting out the line of the railway, pursuant to the provisions for that purpose in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act (Scotland), 1845, contained.

XXVII. That all the lands acquired by such company for the purposes of the railway or part of railway so authorized to be abandoned shall be sold by such company within the time limited or prescribed for that purpose in the warrant authorizing the abandonment of such railway, and if no time be therein prescribed for that purpose, then within two years from the date of such warrant, in the manner prescribed by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts with respect to the sale of superfluous lands (b); and for that purpose all the clauses of the said last-mentioned acts with respect to the lands acquired by the promoters of the undertaking under the provisions of their special act, but which are not required for the purposes thereof, shall be deemed to be incorporated with this act: Provided always, that the offer to be made by the railway company pursuant to the said acts to sell such lands to the person entitled to the lands from which the same were severed shall be made at a price or sum not greater than the price or sum at which such lands were purchased by such company.

XXVIII. That when the said commissioners of railways, by any such warrant as aforesaid, authorize the abandonment of a part only of the railway of any railway company, they may, if they think fit, require that the capital authorized to be raised by such company in respect of such railway shall be reduced to such extent and in such manner as the said commissioners think fit, and so that such reduction do not bear a greater proportion to the whole capital so authorized to be raised than the cost of the part of the railway so authorized to be abandoned would have borne to the cost of the whole railway; and they may also, if they think fit, in like manner reduce the amount which such company are authorized to borrow on mortgage or bond, and every such reduction shall be expressed in the said warrant; and in every such case the capital of such company, and their power of borrowing money shall be reduced and limited in conformity with the directions for that purpose contained in such warrant; and such company shall have all the same powers for enforcing the payment of calls in respect of the shares in the capital when reduced in the manner required by the said commissioners, and for enforcing the forfeiture of any such shares in default of payment of such calls, as such company would have had in respect of the original capital of such company if this act had not been passed: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorize the said company to reduce or interfere with any amount of capital paid up or called for before the eleventh day of February, 1850, and entitled to any preferential or guaranteed dividend or interest.

XXIX. That after the granting of any such warrant as aforesaid for the abandonment of the whole railway of any railway company the powers of such company for the construction, maintenance and management of such railway shall cease, and such company shall continue to exist only for the purpose of winding up their affairs, and they shall accordingly, subject to the provisions herein contained with respect to the sale of lands acquired by such company for the purposes of their railway, proceed with all convenient speed to collect and to convert into money all their property and effects, and shall in the first place pay and satisfy all their debts and liabilities, and after full payment and satisfaction thereof shall distribute the surplus funds among the shareholders of the company in proportion to their shares and interests therein, and for the purposes aforesaid all the powers of such company shall continue in full force and effect; and when and so soon as the same shall have been fully accomplished such company shall be dissolved, and cease to exist.

XXX. That notwithstanding the provision in the Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849, excepting railway companies incorporated by act of parliament from the application of the Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, the said two several acts shall nevertheless apply to any railway company incorporated by act of parliament in respect of which an order may have been made by the Court of Chancery for winding up the affairs of such company previous to the passing of the said Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849, and the proceedings for winding up the same shall proceed and be carried on under the said Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, and the said Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849, or either of them.

XXXI. That where any such warrant as aforesaid shall have been granted for the abandonment of the whole railway of any railway company in England or Ireland, any shareholder of such company may present a petition under the Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, or any act for the amendment of such act, for the winding up of the affairs of such company under the said act, and for that purpose the railway company whose railway is so authorized to be abandoned shall, if the court shall think fit so to order, (notwithstanding anything to the contrary thereof in the said Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act, or in the Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849,) be deemed to be a company to which the said act applies.

(a) Ante, p. 60.

XXXII. That where any such warrant as aforesaid shall have been granted for the abandonment of the whole railway of any railway company in Scotland, any shareholder of such company may present a petition to the court of session, praying the said court to sequester such company, and it shall thereupon be lawful for the said court to issue a deliverance awarding sequestration of such company, and to appoint a factor, who shall take possession of and recover the estate of such company, and realise and manage the same, for the purposes of this act, and for winding-up and distributing the same, with due regard to the rights and interests of the creditors and shareholders, and of all others concerned therein.

XXXIII. That it shall be competent to the said court to establish, by acts of sederunt to be passed by them, all such rules and regulations as may be necessary in relation to the summary statement, discussion and adjudication of all claims at the instance of creditors, shareholders and other parties against such company, and by such rules and regulations to apply, as far as may be practicable and expedient, towards the purposes of this act, the provisions of an act passed in the session of parliament holden in the second and third years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for regulating the Sequestration of the Estates of Bankrupts in Scotland;" and it shall be competent to the said court so also to establish all such other rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying fully into effect the purposes of this act.

XXXIV. That in the event of the affairs of any such company being wound up under any such petition, the compensation hereinbefore directed to be given to the owners and occupiers of lands and others in respect of the damage sustained by them by reason of such abandonment in the cases hereinbefore mentioned, or by reason of the non-completion of any such contract as aforesaid, or otherwise, shall be deemed a demand claimed from and when ascertained in the manner provided by this act, a debt due from such company, and the party by whom such compensation is claimed shall be deemed a "creditor" in England or Ireland, within the provisions of the said Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act, or, in Scotland, within the provisions of the said recited act of the second and third years of the reign of her present Majesty; and in case any lands purchased by such railway company shall be sold by the official manager under the said act, they shall be sold in the manner and subject to the provisions contained in this act.

XXXV. Provided always, and be it enacted, That this act, or any proceeding thereunder, shall not prejudice or affect any action or suit or other proceeding at law or in equity commenced before the eleventh day of February, 1850, or any action or suit brought in connection with and during the dependence of and involving the same matter with such action or suit, nor any action, suit or other proceeding against a company which shall not have obtained a warrant authorizing the abandonment of the railway or part of a railway in respect of which such action, suit or other proceeding shall be instituted, unless such company shall, within three days after notice for that purpose from the party suing them, give such party notice of their intention to apply for such warrant, and shall obtain the same and serve notice thereof on such party within three calendar months thereafter, but all such actions and suits and other proceedings shall be proceeded with, and judgments recovered, and rules, orders and decrees made therein shall be enforced, as if this act had not been passed, save only that the same, after notice given by the company of their intention to abandon as aforesaid, shall be suspended for three calendar months, if the warrant be refused, or be not obtained, within that time.

XXXVI. Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to authorize the abandonment by any company of any railway or portion of a railway, or other works, which such company has agreed under its corporate seal to make and construct, according to any agreement entered into either with any individual or with any other company, unless such individual or company shall consent in writing to such abandonment.

XXXVII. That in each case in which the said commissioners authorize the abandonment of the whole or a portion of a railway, they shall, within ten days after issuing their warrant for that purpose, if Parliament be then sitting, or if not, then as soon thereafter as Parliament meets, lay before both houses of Parliament a copy of every such warrant, accompanied by such report and observations as shall in the judgment of such commissioners set forth and explain the reasons for their award and warrant in every such case as aforesaid.

XXXVIII. That the following words and expressions in this act shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,)

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include also the singular number:

An Act to repeal an Act of the Eleventh and Twelfth Years of her present Majesty, for making preliminary Inquiries in certain Cases of Applications for Local Acts, and to make other Provisions in lieu thereof. [1st August, 1851.]

11 & 12 Vict. c.
129,

Whereas an act was passed in the session of Parliament holden in the eleventh and twelfth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and twenty-nine: and whereas it is expedient to repeal the said act, and make other provisions in lieu thereof: be it therefore enacted by (&c., &c.):

repealed.

I. That in respect of all future applications to Parliament for local acts the said recited act shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

Where works proposed on tidal lands, admiralty may require statements, &c.

II. Whenever application shall be made to Parliament for a bill whereby power is sought to construct any works on the shore of the sea, or of any creek, bay, arm of the sea, or navigable river communicating therewith, or to construct any bridge, viaduct or other work across any creek, bay, arm of the sea or navigable river, or to construct any work affecting the navigation of any harbour, port, tidal water or navigable river, it shall be lawful for the lord high admiral, or for the lords commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral, to require the promoters of such bill to deposit at the office of the admiralty, in addition to the plans, sections or other documents which may have been deposited at such office in compliance with the standing orders of either house of Parliament(c), all such statements and other documents as the said lord high admiral or lords commissioners shall deem necessary, to explain the objects of the intended application to Parliament, and the proposed interference with such tidal lands or navigation, as the case may be.

Admiralty may
tors.

III. It shall be lawful for the said lord high admiral or lords commissioners, if they shall consider the same necessary or expedient, but not otherwise, to appoint a competent person or persons to be an inspector or inspectors, for the purpose of inquiring, in such manner and at such time and place as they shall direct, into all such matters as they shall deem necessary to enable them to report to Parliament their opinion upon every such bill touching the jurisdiction or authority of the lord high admiral.

Inspectors may
nesses,

IV. For the purposes of such inquiry the said inspector or inspectors may, by summons under his or their hands, summon before him or them any person having the custody of any map, survey or book made or kept in pursuance of any act of Parliament, to produce such map, survey or book for his or their inspection, and the said inspector or inspectors may summon, in manner aforesaid, any other person whose evidence shall, in the judgment of the said inspector or inspectors, be material to his or their inquiries, and pay or allow to every such person so summoned by him or them the reasonable charges of his attendance; and the said inspector or inspectors shall also have power to administer an oath to all persons who may be examined by him or them touching the premises.

V. Any person, being summoned by such inspector or inspectors, who, after the delivery to him of such summons as aforesaid, or of a copy thereof, shall wilfully neglect or refuse to attend in pursuance of such summons, or to produce such maps, surveys, books or other documents as he may be required to produce under the provisions hereinbefore contained, or to answer upon oath or otherwise such questions as may be put to him by such inspector or inspectors under the powers herein contained, shall be liable to forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding five pounds, which may be recovered before any two or more justices having jurisdiction within the town, district or place wherein such inquiry shall be held; and on conviction of the offender, and in default of payment of any such penalty, such justices shall be empowered and required to cause the same to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, by warrant under their hands and seals; and such penalty shall be paid to the treasurer of the county within which such conviction shall take place in aid of the county rate; provided that no person, other than the promoters of the proposed act, or their agents, shall be required to attend in obedience to any summons, unless the reasonable charges of his attendance be paid or tendered to him, nor to travel in obedience thereto more than ten miles from his usual place of abode.

VI. Before instituting any such inquiry, the said lord high admiral or lords commissioners may, if they think fit, require and take such security for the payment of the whole or any part of the costs, charges, and expenses to be incurred by them in respect of such inquiry (including the remuneration of the inspectors) as to them shall seem fit; and whenever any such security is given, the costs, charges, and expenses in respect whereof it is given, shall, to such amount as shall be certified by the said lord high admiral or lords commissioners (not exceeding the extent or amount of such security), be a debt due to her Majesty from the person or persons respectively by whom the same is entered into.

VII. The persons whose names shall be subscribed to the petition for any private bill shall be deemed to be promoters of such bill for all the purposes of this act, notwithstanding the persons subscribing such petition shall have signed for or on behalf of any other party.

VIII. In citing this act in other acts of parliament, and in legal and other instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression, "The Preliminary Inquiries Act, 1851."

An Act to repeal the Act for constituting Commissioners of Railways (d).

[7th August, 1851.]

Whereas an act was passed in the session holden in the ninth and tenth years of her Majesty (chapter one hundred and five), for constituting commissioners of railways: and whereas it is expedient that the said act should be repealed, and provision be made for the exercise and performance of the powers and duties which since the passing of the said act have been vested in or imposed on the said commissioners: be it enacted by (&c., &c.):

I. From and after 10th October, 1851, the said act shall be repealed, and all powers, rights, authorities and duties vested in or exercised or performed by the commissioners of railways under any act passed since the passing of the said recited act, or which may be passed during the present session of Parliament, shall be transferred to and vested in and performed by the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations as if they had been named in such acts instead of the said commissioners; and all proceedings pending before the said commissioners on the said tenth of October, or carried on under their authority, shall be continued and carried on by and before the lords of the said committee, who shall have, exercise, and perform the same powers, rights, authorities, and duties in respect of all such proceedings as might have been exercised or performed by such commissioners in case this act had not been passed.

II. It shall be lawful for the lords of the said committee, with the approval of the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury, to continue, for the transaction of the business transferred to the lords of the said committee under this act, all or any of the officers and servants appointed by the said commissioners of railways, and from time to time, with such approval, to remove such officers and servants, or any of them.

III. Where by an act relating to railways or to any railway the commissioners of railways or the lords of the said committee are empowered or required to make or issue any appointment, authority, determination, order, requisition, regulation, certificate, or notice, or to do any other act, the lords of the said committee may, after the said tenth of October, signify such appointment, authority, determination, order, requisition, regulation, certificate, notice, or other act by a written or printed document, signed by one of the joint secretaries of the lords of the said committee, or by some assistant secretary, or other officer appointed by them to sign documents relating to railways; and every appointment, authority, determination, order, requisition, regulation, certificate, notice, or other act, signified by a written or printed document purporting to be so signed as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have been duly made, issued, or done by the lords of the said committee; and every such document shall be received in evidence in all courts and before all justices and others, without proof of the authority or signature of such secretary or other officer, or other proof whatsoever, until it be shown that such document was not signed by the authority of the lords of the said committee.

14 & 15 VICT. CAP. 70.

An Act to alter and amend certain Provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (e), so far as relates to Ireland. [7th August, 1851.]

Whereas, on account of circumstances connected with the tenure of land in Ireland; the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, are found to be unsuited to the existing condition of that country, and it is expedient that some provision should be made for ascertaining the purchase money or compensation to be paid by railway companies in Ireland for the lands required for their undertakings, and for determining differences with respect to the works to be made and maintained by such companies for the accommodation of the owners and occupiers of lands adjoining such railways: be it therefore enacted by (&c., &c.):

Short title.

I. In citing this act in other acts of Parliament, legal instruments, proceedings at law or in equity, and all other instruments and proceedings whatsoever, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1851."

Act to apply to

Company to deliver maps, schedules, and estimates at the office of commissioners of public works, and deposit copies with clerks of the peace and clerks of unions.

II. This act shall apply to every railway in Ireland authorized to be made by any act passed in this session of parliament, or which shall hereafter be passed, and which shall authorize the purchase or taking of lands for such railway, and also to every railway or portion of a railway in Ireland by any act heretofore passed authorized to be made in relation to which the compulsory powers for taking lands are still in force, and this act shall be incorporated with and form part of the acts authorizing the said undertakings: provided always, that this act shall not apply to the railways authorized to be made by "The Waterford and Limerick Railway Amendment Act, 1850," "The Dublin and Drogheda Railway Act, 1850," "The Dundalk and Enniskillen Railway Act, 1850," and "The Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland (Deviation and Amendment) Act, 1850," "The Waterford and Limerick Railway Deviation Act, 1851," and "The Killybeg Junction Railway Act, 1851," "The Longford Line and Liffy Branch, 13 & 14 Vict.," or to which the provisions of such acts respectively are applicable, and shall not in anywise interfere with or affect the provisions of such acts.

III. The clauses of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement, except sections sixteen and seventeen of the said act, shall not be applicable or in force with respect to any railway or portion of a railway in Ireland to which this act applies.

IV. When and so often as any company authorized to make a railway to which this act applies shall require to purchase or take any lands which they are by the special act authorized to purchase or take, the company shall cause to be made out, and to be signed by their engineer and secretary, maps or plans and schedules of the lands so required (and for the purchase of which lands, or of all the several interests in which lands, the company shall not have contracted), and also of the works which the company propose to make and maintain for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway (and for compensation in lieu of which the company shall not have contracted), together with the names of the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees, and occupiers of the said lands respectively, so far as the same can be reasonably ascertained, with estimates of the gross annual value and the value in fee of such lands so required to be purchased or taken as aforesaid, and for the purchase of which, or of all the several interests in which, the company shall not have contracted, and the separate and distinct value of each such interest which the company shall not have contracted to purchase, so far as the same can be reasonably ascertained (taking into consideration damage by severance, and any other matters by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, required to be considered, if necessary); and every such map or plan shall be upon a scale of not less than one inch to every two hundred feet; and all lands, buildings, yards and courtyards, and lands within the curtilage of any building, and ground cultivated as a garden, shall be marked thereon with distinct numbers corresponding with the numbers marked upon the parliamentary plans of the railway, and shall have put thereon a distinct valuation to each number, and all bridges, roads, and other works proposed to be made for the use and accommodation of the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the lands adjoining the railway shall also be marked on the said maps or plans; and the company shall deposit such maps or plans, schedules and estimates, at the office of the commissioners of public works in Ireland, and a copy of such maps or plans, schedules and estimates, or so much thereof as relates to every county in or through which the railway is proposed to be made, with the clerk of the peace of each such county, and a copy of so much of the said maps or plans, schedules and estimates, as relates to each electoral division in which any such lands shall be situate, with the clerk of the poor law union in which every such electoral division is situate.

V. After such deposit at the office of the said commissioners as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, upon the application of the company, to appoint an arbitrator between the company and the persons interested in the lands to which such maps or plans, schedules and estimates relate, and such arbitrator shall, in relation to the lands required and the works to be made and maintained by the company, as herein mentioned, be the arbitrator under this act; and if any such arbitrator die, or refuse, decline, or become incapable to act, the said commissioners may appoint an arbitrator in his place, who shall have the same powers and authorities as the arbitrator first appointed.

Commissioners of public works to appoint an arbitrator, on application of company.

VI. The arbitrator may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of the company, or of any party making any claim under the provisions of this act, which such arbitrator may think necessary for determining any question or matter to be determined by him under this act, and may examine any such party and his witnesses, and the witnesses for the company, on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose.

Arbitrator may call for documents, and administer oaths.

VII. Before any arbitrator shall enter upon any inquiry, he shall, in the presence of a justice of the peace, make and subscribe the following declaration; that is to say, Arbitrator to make and subscribe declaration.

"I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely declare, that I will faithfully and honestly, and to the best of my skill and ability, hear and determine the matters referred to me under the provisions of the act [naming this act].

"Made and subscribed in the presence of

"A. B."

And such declaration shall be annexed to the award when made; and if any arbitrator, having made such declaration, wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

VIII. Upon the first appointment of an arbitrator as aforesaid, the said commissioners shall deliver to such arbitrator the maps or plans, schedules and estimates, deposited at their office as hereinbefore required; and the company shall forthwith after such appointment publish notice of such appointment, and of such deposits as hereinbefore directed, with such clerk of the peace and clerks of poor law unions as aforesaid, once in the Dublin Gazette, and once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper circulated in the county in which the lands are situate, stating the times and places of such deposits, and requiring all persons claiming to have any right to or interest in the lands required for the purposes of the railway, and specified in such maps or plans, or to have compensation for any injury to any lands injuriously affected by the execution of the works of the company, or to have any works made by the company for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway, to deliver to the arbitrator, on or before a day fixed by the arbitrator, and named in such notice (and which day shall not be earlier than thirty-one (f) days from the date of the insertion of the last of such newspaper notices), a short statement in writing of the nature of such claim; and upon the appointment of any arbitrator in the place of an arbitrator dying, or refusing, declining or becoming incapable to act, all the documents relating to the matter of the arbitration which were in the possession of such arbitrator shall be delivered to the arbitrator appointed in his place, and the company shall publish notice of such appointment in the Dublin Gazette.

Maps, &c. deposited with commissioners of public works to be delivered to arbitrator, notice of appointment of arbitrator, &c. to be published.

IX. The arbitrator shall, after the expiration of the period within which such claims are required to be delivered to him as aforesaid, proceed to inquire into and adjudicate upon the value of the lands required for the purposes of the railway, and specified in such maps or plans, and the several interests in such lands, in respect of which no agreement shall have been come to between the company and the persons entitled thereto, and the purchase-money to be paid for such lands, and the compensation to be paid for injury to any lands injuriously affected by the execution of the works of the company, and to Arbitrator to adjudicate upon compensation to be paid for lands and upon accommodation works.

(f) Twenty-one—23 & 24 Vict. c. 97, s. 1, post.

APPENDIX.

inquire and determine what works should be made and maintained by the company for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway; and the arbitrator shall, after due inquiry and examination, frame a draft award setting forth the price or compensation to be paid by the company in respect of the several interests in the lands so required and specified or injuriously affected, and the works to be made and maintained by the company for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway; and where any inquiry relates not only to the value of the lands to be purchased, but also to compensation claimed for injury done or to be done to any lands held therewith, the arbitrator shall award separate and distinct sums to be paid for the purchase of such lands, or of any interest therein to which the inquiry may relate, and for the damage (if any) to be sustained by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the other lands, or otherwise injuriously affecting such other lands by the exercise of the powers of the company; and such draft award, and copies thereof, or of so much thereof as relates to lands in the respective counties and electoral divisions, shall be deposited as hereinbefore directed concerning the said maps or plans, schedules and estimates, and copies thereof, or of so much thereof as aforesaid; and the arbitrator shall cause notice of such award to be given to all persons entitled to payment or compensation under the same, or who shall have been heard before such arbitrator as claimants for compensation, and also shall cause notice to be published as hereinbefore directed concerning notice of the deposit of copies of the said maps or plans, schedules and estimates, or so much thereof as aforesaid, of the deposit of copies of such draft award, or of so much thereof as aforesaid, and shall in such notices appoint a time and place, or times and places, for holding a meeting or meetings to hear objections against such draft award (the first such meeting to be not earlier than twenty-one (g) days after the last day of publication of the said notice), and shall hold such meeting or meetings accordingly, and thereat hear and determine any objections which may then and there be made to such draft award by any person interested therein, or adjourn the further hearing thereof, if the arbitrator see fit, to a future meeting, and may take any measures which he may deem proper for ascertaining the value of any such lands or interests as aforesaid, or the justice or propriety of any other matter of such draft award, and may from time to time, if he see occasion, appoint and hold further meetings for hearing and determining objections to such draft award, of which further meetings, when not holden by adjournment, notice shall be given in manner hereinbefore directed; and when the arbitrator has heard and determined all such objections, and made such inquiries as he may think necessary in relation thereto, and made such alteration (if any) as he may deem proper in the draft award, he shall make his award under his hand and seal accordingly; and every such award shall be binding and conclusive, subject to the provisions concerning traverse hereinafter contained, upon all persons whomsoever; and no such award shall be set aside for irregularity in matter of form; and every such award and copies thereof, or of so much thereof as relates to lands in the respective counties and electoral divisions, shall be deposited as hereinbefore directed with respect to the said maps or plans, schedules and estimates, and copies thereof, or of so much thereof as aforesaid; and the company shall thereupon publish notice, as hereinbefore directed concerning notice of the deposit of copies of such maps or plans, schedules and estimates, or of so much thereof as aforesaid, of the deposit of copies of such award, or of so much thereof as aforesaid, and requiring all persons claiming to have any right to or interest in the lands, the price or compensation to be paid in respect of which is ascertained by such award, to deliver to the company, on or before a day to be named in such notice (such day not being earlier than thirty-one days from the date of the last publication of the notice), a short statement in writing of the nature of such claim, and a short abstract of the title on which the same is founded; and such statement and abstract shall be paid for by the company.

Separate awards may be made as to lands in the several parishes or otherwise.

X. Provided always, that the arbitrator may make several awards, so as to include in a separate award the lands in each electoral division, or such portion of the lands in relation to which he is arbitrator as, having reference to the deposits to be made under this act, the meetings to be holden, and the inquiries to be made in relation to such lands, and the convenience of the parties interested in the matter of the arbitration, he may think fit.

Clerks of the peace and clerks of unions required to take charge of documents deposited, as provided by 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 83.

XI. Every clerk of the peace and clerk of any union is hereby required to retain the documents to be deposited with him under this act in his custody, and to permit all persons interested to inspect the same and to make copies and extracts of and from the same, in like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided by an act of the session holden in the seventh year of King William the Fourth and the first year of her Majesty, chapter eighty-three (h).

Expenses of the arbitrator to be borne by the company.

XII. The salary or remuneration, travelling and other expenses of the arbitrator, and all costs, charges and expenses (if any) which shall be incurred by the said commissioners of public works in carrying the provisions of this act into execution, shall be paid by the company; and the amount of such costs, charges and expenses shall from time to time be certified by the said commissioners, after first hearing any objections that may be made to the reasonableness of any such costs, charges and expenses by or on behalf of the company; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners from time to time to require the company to deposit in the Bank of Ireland, to the credit of the said commissioners, any sum or sums of money, or to give such other security for the payment of any such costs, charges and expenses as to the said commissioners shall seem fit; and every certificate of the said commissioners, certifying the amount of such costs, charges and expenses, shall be taken as proof in all proceedings at law or in equity of the amount of such respective costs, charges and expenses, and the amount so certified shall be a debt due from the company to the crown, and shall be recoverable accordingly.

XIII. It shall be lawful for the arbitrator, where he thinks fit, upon the request of any party by whom any claim has been made before him, to certify the amount of the costs properly incurred by such party in relation to the arbitration, and the amount of the costs so certified shall be paid by the company; and if within seven days after demand the amount so certified be not paid to the party entitled to receive the same, such amount shall be recoverable by distress, and on application to any justice he shall issue his warrant accordingly; but no such certificate shall be given where the arbitrator has awarded the same or a less sum than has been offered by the company in respect of such claim before the commencement of the arbitration.

Costs of parties.

XIV. Within thirty days from the delivery of such statement and abstract as aforesaid to the company, the company shall, where it appears to them that any person so claiming is absolutely entitled to the lands, estate or interest claimed by him, deliver to such person, on demand, a certificate under the company's seal, stating the amount of the price or compensation to which he is entitled under the said award; and where more lands than are included in one number shall be claimed by the same person, such lands, or the interests therein, may be included in one certificate, if the company think fit, such certificates to be prepared by and at the costs of the company; and where any agreement has been entered into in respect to the value of the interest of any person in any lands, or his right to compensation, the company may, where it appears to them that such person is absolutely entitled, deliver to such person a like certificate.

Certificates of amount of compensation to be delivered by company.

XV. The company shall, on demand, pay to the party to whom any such certificate is given, or otherwise as herein provided in the cases hereinafter mentioned, the amount of monies specified to be payable by such certificate to the party to whom or in whose favour such certificate is given, his or her executors, administrators or assigns; and if the company wilfully make default in such payment as aforesaid, then the party named in such certificate shall be entitled to enter up judgment against the company in the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland for the amount of the sums specified in such certificate, in the same manner in all respects as if he had been, by warrant of attorney from the company, authorized to enter up judgment for the amount mentioned in the certificate, with costs, as is usual in like cases; and all monies payable under such certificates, or to be recovered by such judgments as aforesaid, shall at law or in equity be taken as personal estate as from the time of the company entering on any such lands as aforesaid.

Amount mentioned in certificates to be paid to parties, on demand, &c.

XVI. When and so soon as the company have paid to the party to whom any such certificate as aforesaid is given, or otherwise, as herein provided, in the cases hereinafter mentioned, the amount specified to be payable by such certificate to the party to whom or in whose favour the certificate is given, his executors, administrators, or assigns, it shall be lawful for the company, upon obtaining such receipt as hereinafter mentioned, from time to time to enter upon any lands in respect of which such certificate is given, and thenceforth to hold the same for the estate or interest in respect of which the amount specified in such certificate was payable.

When amount mentioned in certificates is paid to parties, company may take possession.

XVII. In every case in which any monies are paid by any company under the provisions of this act, for such price or compensation as aforesaid, the party receiving such monies shall give to the company a receipt for the same, and such receipt shall have the effect of a grant, release, and conveyance of all the estate and interest of such party, and of all parties claiming under or through him, in the lands in respect of which such monies are paid, so as such receipt shall have an ad valorem stamp of the same amount impressed thereon in respect of the purchase-monies mentioned in such certificate (but exclusive of the amount of compensation for damage by severance or other injury) as would have been necessary if such receipt had been an actual conveyance of such estate or interest, every such receipt to be prepared by and at the costs of the company.

Receipts duly stamped to operate as a conveyance.

XVIII. If it appear to the company, from any such statement and abstract as aforesaid, or otherwise, that the party making any such claim as aforesaid is not absolutely entitled to the lands, estate, or interest in respect of which his claim is made, or is under any disability, or if the title to such lands, estate, or interest be not satisfactorily deduced to the company, then and in every such case the amount to be paid by the company in respect of such lands, estate, or interest as aforesaid shall be paid and applied as provided by the clauses of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," "with respect to the purchase-money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, or prevented from treating, or not making title."

Payment of monies where parties making claims deemed not entitled, or are under disability, or title not satisfactorily deduced.

under the provisions of this act in respect of the price or compensation whereof, or of any estate or interest wherein, no claim has been made within one year from the time of the company taking possession, or if any party to whom any such certificate has been given or tendered refuse to receive such certificate, or to accept the amount therein specified as payable to him, then and in any such case the amount payable by the company in respect of such lands, estate, or interest, or the amount specified in such certificate, shall be paid into the Bank of Ireland, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, in manner provided by the last-mentioned clauses of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the amount so paid into the said bank shall be accordingly dealt with as by the said act provided; and no monies paid into the bank under this act shall be liable to ushers' poundage.

XX. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the company from requiring any further abstract or evidence of title respecting any lands included in any such award as aforesaid, in addition to the abstract or statement hereinbefore mentioned, if they think fit, so as the same be obtained at the costs of the company.

XXI. If from any reason whatever the company shall not deliver the certificate aforesaid to any party claiming to be entitled to any interest in any lands the possession whereof has been taken by the company as aforesaid, then the right to have a certificate according to the provisions of this act may, at the costs and charges of the company, be enforced by any party or parties, by application to the High Court of Chancery in Ireland in a summary way by petition, and all other rights and interests of any party or parties arising under the provisions of this act may be in like manner enforced against the company by such application as aforesaid.

XXII. Provided always, that where the company are desirous, for the purposes of their works, of entering upon any lands before they would be entitled to enter thereon under the provisions hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for the company, at any time after the arbitrator shall have framed his draft award, upon depositing in the Bank of Ireland, as herein directed, such sum as the arbitrator may certify to be in his opinion the proper amount to be so deposited in respect of any lands authorized to be purchased or taken by the company, and mentioned in such draft award, to enter upon and use such lands for the purposes of the railway and works of the company; and the arbitrator shall, upon the request of the company, at any time after he shall have framed such draft award, certify under his hand the sum which in his opinion should be so deposited by the company in respect of any lands mentioned in such draft award before they enter upon and use the same as aforesaid, and the sum to be so certified shall be the sum or the amount of the several sums set forth in such draft award as the sum or sums to be paid by the company in respect of such lands, or such greater amount as to the arbitrator, under the circumstances of the case, may seem proper; and, notwithstanding such entry as aforesaid, all proceedings for and in relation to the completion of the award, the delivery of certificates, and other proceedings under this act, shall be had, and payments made, as if such entry and deposit had not been made; provided that the company shall, where they enter upon any lands by virtue of this present provision, pay interest at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum upon the purchase and compensation money payable by them in respect of any lands so entered upon, from the time of their entry until the time of the payment of such money and interest to the party entitled thereto, or where, under the provisions of this act, such purchase-money or compensation is required to be paid into the said bank, then until the same, with such interest, is paid into such bank accordingly; and where under this provision interest is payable on any purchase or compensation money the certificate to be delivered by the company in respect thereof shall specify that interest is so payable, and the same shall be recoverable in like manner as the principal money mentioned in such certificate (h).

XXIII. The money to be deposited as aforesaid in respect of any lands shall be paid into the Bank of Ireland in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, to be placed to his account there to the credit of the company (describing the company by its proper name), in the matter of the Railways Act (Ireland), 1851, and of the lands in respect of which the same is paid, subject to the control and disposition of the said court; and upon such deposit the cashier of the said bank shall give to the company, or to the party paying in such money by their direction, a receipt for the same (i).

XXIV. The money so deposited as last aforesaid shall remain in the bank by way of security to the parties interested in the lands which shall so have been entered upon, for the payment of the money to become payable by the company in respect thereof under the award of the arbitrator; and the money so deposited may, on the application by petition of the company, be ordered to be invested in bank annuities or government securities, and accumulated; and upon such payment as aforesaid by the company it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in Ireland, upon a like application, to order the money so deposited, or the funds in which the same shall have been invested, together with the accumulation thereof, to be repaid or transferred to the company, or in default of such payment as aforesaid by the company, it shall be lawful for the said court to order the same to be applied in such manner as it shall think fit for the benefit of the parties for whose security the same shall so have been deposited (k).

(h) Sect. 22 is repealed, and 23 & 24 c. 97, s. 3, post, substituted.

Vict. c. 97, s. 2, post, substituted.

(k) Sect. 24 is repealed, and 23 & 24

(i) Sect. 23 is repealed, and 23 & 24 Vict. Vict. c. 97, s. 4, post, substituted.

XXV. If at any time the company be unable, by reason of the closing of the office of the Accountant-General of the said Court of Chancery, to obtain his authority in respect of the payment of any sum of money so authorized to be deposited in the bank by way of security as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the company to pay into the bank, to such credit as aforesaid (subject nevertheless to being dealt with as herein provided), such sum of money as the company shall by some writing signed by their secretary or solicitors for the time being, addressed to the governor and company of the bank in that behalf, request, and upon any such payment being made the cashier of the bank shall give a certificate thereof; and in every such case, within ten days after the re-opening of the said Accountant-General's office, the solicitor for the company shall there bespeak the direction for the payment of such sum into the name of the Accountant-General, and upon production of such direction at the Bank of Ireland the money so previously paid in shall be placed to the credit of the said Accountant-General accordingly, and the receipt for the said payment be given to the party making the same in the usual way, for the purpose of being filed at the report office.

XXVI. Where the party named in any certificate issued under the provisions hereinbefore contained of the amount of the price or compensation ascertained by any award under this act (or any party claiming under the party so named) shall be dissatisfied with the amount in such certificate certified to be payable, and where any party claiming any interest in any monies so paid into the court as aforesaid shall be dissatisfied with the amount of the price or compensation in respect of which such monies shall be so paid into court, and where any party interested in land adjoining any railway shall be dissatisfied with any award under this act so far as respects any works for the accommodation of such lands thereby awarded to be made and maintained by the company, or which such party may claim to have so made and maintained, it shall be lawful for such party, at the assizes for the county in which the lands are situate, or, where the lands are situate in the county of Dublin or county of the city of Dublin, in the term next following the giving of such certificate or the payment of such money into court, or (if the claim be only in respect of accommodation works) the making of the award, or where such assizes are holden or such term begins within less than twenty-one days after the giving of such certificate, or the payment of such money, or the making of the award, then at the next subsequent assizes, or in the next subsequent term (as the case may be), upon giving ten days' notice in writing previously to such assizes or term respectively to the secretary of the company, of the amount or the accommodation works intended to be claimed, to have a traverse for damages entered in the crown book in respect of such claim, and thereupon such traverse shall be tried in like manner, and like proceedings shall be had, and subject to like provisions, as far as the same can be applied, as in the case of traverses entered for damages under the acts for consolidating and amending the laws relating to the presentment of public monies by grand juries in Ireland: provided always, that the sum to be awarded or allowed as the costs, charges and expenses of the trial of every such traverse for damages shall in no case exceed the sum of twenty pounds, and further that no party shall have any other remedy for the purpose of impeaching the amount of any price or compensation ascertained by any such award as aforesaid, or the sufficiency of the accommodation works awarded thereby, other than by means of such traverse as aforesaid, anything in any act to the contrary notwithstanding: provided also, that the jury which shall try such traverse shall be sworn a true verdict to give, whether any and what damages will be sustained by the traverser, regard being had to the value of the lands of such traverser required, and to the injury to any lands of such traverser injuriously affected by the works of the company, or (as the case may be) as to what accommodation works ought to be made and maintained by the company for the accommodation of the lands of the traverser, or to the like effect respectively, as the case may be.

XXVII. The entry of the verdict of the jury in case of each traverse in the crown book shall be a final decision, and binding upon all parties interested, and shall have the effect of a judgment at law obtained in the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland against the company, and may be enforced by like remedies against the company, as in the case of a judgment at law, by all parties interested therein; and in each case where a certificate shall have been delivered, such damages shall be taken and recovered in lieu of the monies expressed to be payable by the certificate, and which shall, on payment of the damages, and any costs payable by the company, be delivered up to the said company, and such receipt for such damages shall be given as hereinbefore provided in cases of payment of monies on such certificates as aforesaid; and where such damages shall be given in respect of any land, the amount of the price or compensation in respect of which, as ascertained by an award under this act, shall have been paid into court, then if the amount of such damages shall be less than the amount paid into court, the company shall, on a summary application by petition, be entitled to receive the difference between the amount of such damages and the amount of the sum paid into court, but if the amount of such damages shall exceed the amount of monies paid into court, then the difference between the amount paid in and the damages shall, at the costs of the company, be paid into court;

APPENDIX.

Company may deposit money by way of security while the office of the Accountant-General is closed.

Parties dissatisfied with award, may enter a traverse at assizes (1).

17 & 18 VICT. CAP. 31.

An Act for the better Regulation of the Traffic on Railways and Canals (n).

[10th July, 1854.]

Whereas it is expedient to make better provision for regulating the traffic on railways and canals: be it enacted (&c. &c.) as follows:

"Board of Trade."

"Traffic."

"Railway."

"Canal."

"Company."

"Stations."

Duty of railway companies to make arrangements for receiving and forwarding traffic, without unreasonable delay, and without partiality.

I. In the construction of this act "the Board of Trade" shall mean the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations:

The word "traffic" shall include not only passengers, and their luggage, and goods, animals and other things conveyed by any railway company or canal company, or railway and canal company, but also carriages, waggons, trucks, boats and vehicles of every description adapted for running or passing on the railway or canal of any such company:

The word "railway" shall include every station of or belonging to such railway used for the purposes of public traffic; and,

The word "canal" shall include any navigation whereon tolls are levied by authority of Parliament, and also the wharves and landing places of and belonging to such canal or navigation, and used for the purposes of public traffic:

The expression "railway company," "canal company" or "railway and canal company" shall include any person being the owner or lessee of or any contractor working any railway or canal, or navigation constructed or carried on under the powers of any act of Parliament:

A station, terminus or wharf shall be deemed to be near another station, terminus or wharf when the distance between such stations, termini or wharves shall not exceed one mile, such stations not being situate within five miles from St. Paul's Church, in London.

II. Every railway company, canal company and railway and canal company shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable facilities for the receiving and forwarding and delivering of traffic upon and from the several railways and canals belonging to or worked by such companies respectively, and for the return of carriages, trucks, boats and other vehicles, and no such company shall make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favour of any particular person or company, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, nor shall any such company subject any particular person or company, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever; and every railway company and canal company and railway and canal company having or working railways or canals which form part of a continuous line of railway or canal or railway and canal communication, or which have the terminus, station or wharf of the one near the terminus, station or wharf of the other, shall afford all due and reasonable facilities for receiving and forwarding all the traffic arriving by one of such railways or canals by the other, without any unreasonable delay, and without any such preference or advantage or prejudice or disadvantage, as aforesaid, and so that no obstruction may be offered to the public desirous of using such railways or canals or railways and canals as a continuous line of communication, and so that all reasonable accommodation may, by means of the

APPENDIX.

III. It shall be lawful for any company or person complaining against any such companies or company of anything done, or of any omission made in violation or contravention of this act, to apply in a summary way, by motion or summons, in England, to her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, or in Ireland to any of her Majesty's superior courts in Dublin, or in Scotland to the Court of Session in Scotland, as the case may be, or to any judge of any such court; and, upon the certificate of her Majesty's Attorney-General in England or Ireland, or her Majesty's Lord Advocate in Scotland, of the Board of Trade, alleging any such violation or contravention of this act by any such companies or company, it shall also be lawful for the said Attorney-General or Lord Advocate to apply in like manner to any such court or judge, and in either of such cases it shall be lawful for such court or judge to hear and determine the matter of such complaint; and for that purpose, if such court or judge shall think fit, to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such engineers, barristers or other persons as they shall think proper, all such inquiries as may be deemed necessary to enable such court or judge to form a just judgment on the matter of such complaint; and if it be made to appear to such court or judge on such hearing, or on the report of any such person, that anything has been done or omission made in violation or contravention of this act, by such company or companies, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to issue a writ of injunction or interdict, restraining such company or companies from further continuing such violation or contravention of this act, and enjoining obedience to the same, and in case of disobedience of any such writ of injunction or interdict, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to order that a writ or writs of attachment, or any other process of such court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or interdict, shall issue against any one or more of the directors of any company, or against any owner, lessee, contractor or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or interdict; and such court or judge may also, if they or he shall think fit, make an order directing the payment, by one or more of such companies, of such sum of money as such court or judge shall determine, not exceeding for each company the sum of two hundred pounds for every day after a day to be named in the order, that such company or companies shall fail to obey such injunction or interdict, and such monies shall be payable as the court or judge may direct, either to the party complaining or into court, to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or to her Majesty, and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by decree or judgment in any superior court at Westminster or Dublin, in England or Ireland, and in Scotland by such diligence as is competent on an extracted decree of the Court of Session; and in any such proceeding as aforesaid, such court or judge may order and determine that all or any cost thereof or thereon incurred shall and may be paid by or to the one party or the other, as such court or judge shall think fit; and it shall be lawful for any such engineer, barrister or other person, if directed so to do by such court or judge, to receive evidence on oath relating to the matter of any such inquiry, and to administer such oath (p).

Parties complaining that reasonable facilities, for forwarding traffic, &c., are withheld, may apply by motion or summons to the Superior Courts.

IV. It shall be lawful for the said Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, or any three of the judges thereof, of whom the chief justice shall be one, and it shall be lawful for the said courts in Dublin, or any nine of the judges thereof, of whom the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas and the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer shall be five, from time to time to make all such general rules and orders as to the forms of proceedings and process, and all other matters and things touching the practice and otherwise in carrying this act into execution before such courts and judges, as they may think fit, in England or Ireland, and in Scotland it shall be lawful for the Court of Session to make such acts of sederunt for the like purpose as they shall think fit (q).

Judges may make such regulations as may be necessary for proceedings under this act.

V. Upon the application of any party aggrieved by the order made upon any such motion or summons as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the court or judge by whom such order was made, to direct, if they think fit so to do, such motion or application on summons to be reheard before such court or judge, and upon such rehearing to rescind or vary such order.

Court or judge may order a rehearing.

VI. No proceeding shall be taken for any violation or contravention of the above enactments, except in the manner herein provided; but nothing herein contained shall take away or diminish any rights, remedies or privileges of any person or company against any railway or canal or railway and canal company under the existing law.

Mode of proceeding under this act.

VII. Every such company as aforesaid shall be liable for the loss of or for any injury done to any horses, cattle or other animals, or to any articles, goods or things in the receiving, forwarding or delivering thereof, occasioned by the neglect or default of such company or its servants, notwithstanding any notice, condition or declaration made and given by such company contrary thereto, or in anywise limiting such liability; every such

An Act to amend and extend the Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange and Improvement of Land.
[10th August, 1854.]

Application of compensation for common rights, paid under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18.

Money to be paid into Bank of England.

Interest to be ascertained by commissioners.

XV. Where any money shall have been or may hereafter be paid to a committee under "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or under any railway or other special act by which money may have been directed or authorized to be paid to a committee as compensation for the extinction of commonable or other rights, or for lands being common lands or in the nature thereof, the right to the soil of which may have belonged to the commoners, and the majority of such committee shall be of opinion that the provisions of such act for the apportionment thereof cannot be satisfactorily carried into effect, such majority may make application in writing to the commissioners to call a meeting of the persons interested in such compensation money to determine whether or not such compensation money shall be apportioned under the provisions of this act.

XVI. If the majority in number and interest shall resolve that such compensation money shall be apportioned, the amount of such compensation money shall be forthwith paid into the Bank of England to the credit of an account to be named by the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales, and the said committee shall be absolutely discharged from all liability in respect of such compensation money upon payment thereof into the Bank of England as hereinbefore directed.

XVII. As soon as the said monies shall have been paid into the bank as aforesaid the said inclosure commissioners, or any assistant commissioner appointed or to be appointed by them for that purpose, shall proceed to ascertain, determine and award the names of the parties who were entitled to such estates, rights and interests in the said common and commonable lands, and the amount or value of the respective shares, rights and interests therein, and the proportionate amount of the price so to be paid as aforesaid for such estates, rights and interests to which each party so entitled as aforesaid is entitled in respect of his share, right or interest as aforesaid; and the award of the commissioners, under their common seal, or assistant commissioner in writing under his hand and seal, shall be binding on all parties claiming such estates, rights and interests as aforesaid; and for the purpose of ascertaining the rights and interests of such parties as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said inclosure commissioners, or assistant commissioner, to call such meetings as they or he shall think fit of all persons having or claiming any such rights or interests in the said common and commonable lands as aforesaid, at such time and place as the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall think fit, so as the same shall be appointed by a public notice thereof in writing to be affixed at least twelve days before such meeting on the principal outer door of the parish church in which such land or any part is situate, and to be inserted in one of the public newspapers published or generally circulated in the county in which such land is situate; and at such meeting the said commissioners or assistant commissioner do and shall proceed to examine into and ascertain all and every the claims which shall be made or put forward in respect of any such rights or interests as aforesaid, and the relative and proportionate value of the estates, rights and interests of any person or persons claiming to be entitled thereto, and for that purpose do and may employ any valuer or surveyor, and call for and receive such records, deeds and writings, and such other proof or evidence as the said commissioners or assistant commissioner may think fit, and they and he are and is hereby authorized and required to take the testimony of any witnesses upon oath (which oath they and he are and is respectively hereby empowered to administer), or to take the affirmation of such witnesses in cases where affirmation is allowed by law instead of oath.

XVIII. All the costs and expenses of the said inclosure commissioners and assistant commissioner, and of any valuer or surveyor employed by them or him under the provisions hereinbefore contained, shall in the first place be paid out of such compensation monies, and the residue of the said monies shall be paid and divided between and amongst the said several parties to be named in the said award, and in the shares and proportion to be ascertained and set forth in such award.

XIX. When it shall appear to the commissioners or assistant commissioner that any of the parties entitled to such rights or interests are only entitled thereto for a limited interest, then it shall be lawful for them or him, by their or his award, to direct that the monies to be paid in respect of such right or interest, where the same shall exceed twenty pounds, shall be paid to the trustees acting under the will, conveyance or settlement under which such person having such limited interest shall be interested in such rights or interests, and where there are no trustees, then into the hands of trustees to be appointed under the hand and seal of the commissioners, to be held by them on trusts similar to the uses or trusts to which such rights or interests had been immediately before the payment of such monies into the Bank subject to or as near thereto as the said commissioners or assistant commissioner can ascertain, and the receipts of any trustees to whom any such monies shall be paid as aforesaid shall be good and sufficient discharges for the same: provided always, that the payment of all such sums shall from time to time be subject to such rules and regulations for the purpose of ensuring the payment thereof to the person or persons duly entitled to receive the same as the said commissioners shall by any order direct.

XX. In all cases where the sum payable by virtue of such award in respect of any estate, right or interest shall not exceed twenty pounds, and the person entitled to such estate, right or interest shall be under any disability or incapacity, such sum shall and may be paid to the guardian committee or husband of such person, and where any such person shall have a limited interest only in such estate, right or interest, the whole of such sum shall and may nevertheless be paid to the person having such limited interest, to his or her guardian, committee or husband, as the case may be.

As to payment of costs of inclosure commissioners, and as to the residue of monies.

Compensation for limited interest to be paid to trustees.

As to sums payable in respect of lands not exceeding 20l.

7 & 8 Vict. c. 85,
s. 6.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 42.

For fractions under one mile one penny may be charged, and for fractions exceeding half a mile, where the distance amounts to one mile or more, one halfpenny may be charged.

Rates heretofore charged not exceeding those allowed by this clause not to be deemed excessive.

Canal companies, being also railway companies, not to take leases of canal unless specially authorized.

Act to be in force for one year.

Whereas by the act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, s. 6 (u), it is enacted, amongst other things, with respect to the cheap trains thereby required to be provided in certain cases, that the fare or charge for each third-class passenger by any such train shall not exceed one penny for each mile travelled: And whereas it is expedient to amend the said act in manner hereinafter mentioned: And whereas it is also expedient to amend the act passed in the ninth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter forty-two, intituled "An Act to enable Canal Companies to become Carriers of Goods upon their Canals," by restraining, as hereinafter mentioned, the exercise of certain powers therein contained: Be it enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:—

I. When the distance travelled by any third-class passenger by any train run in compliance with the provisions relating to cheap trains contained in the said act of the seventh and eighth of Victoria, chapter eighty-five, is a portion of a mile, and does not amount to one mile, the fare for such portion of a mile may be one penny, or when such distance amounts to one mile, or two or more miles, and a portion of another mile, the fare or charge for such portion of a mile, if the same amounts to or exceeds one half mile, may be one halfpenny: provided always, that for children of three years and upwards, but under twelve years of age, the fare or charge shall not exceed half the charge for an adult passenger.

II. After the passing of this act, no fare heretofore charged to or received from any third-class passenger by any such train as aforesaid shall in any proceeding to be hereafter instituted be deemed to have exceeded the rate prescribed in such case by the said act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, if the same shall not have exceeded the rate of one farthing for each entire quarter of a mile travelled.

III. Notwithstanding anything contained in the said recited act of the ninth year of her Majesty, it shall not be lawful for any canal or navigation company, being also a railway company, or entitled to work any railway constructed under the authority of any act of Parliament, hereafter to accept a lease of the whole or any part of the undertaking of any other railway and canal company or of any canal or navigation company, or of the tolls, dues or charges upon or in respect of the whole or any part of any such undertaking, except under the powers of some act or acts heretofore passed or to be hereafter passed in which the parties to any such lease shall be specifically named and authorized to enter into the same.

IV. This act shall continue in force for one year next after the passing thereof, and thence to the end of the then next session of Parliament (v).

An Act to enable Railway Companies to settle their Differences with other Companies by Arbitration (x). [13th August, 1859.]

For the better providing for the settlement by arbitration of matters in which railway companies in the United Kingdom are mutually interested, be it enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows; (that is to say,)

I. This act may for all purposes be cited as "Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 1859;" and the expression "railway companies" in this act extends to and includes all persons being the owners or lessees of, and all contractors working any railway upon which steam power is used.

Short title.

"Railway Companies."

II. Any two or more railway companies, whether already or hereafter incorporated (in this act called "the companies"), from time to time, by writing under their respective common seals, may agree to refer and may refer to arbitration, in accordance with this act, any then existing or future differences, questions, or other matters whatsoever in which they then are or thereafter shall be mutually interested, and which they might lawfully settle or dispose of by agreement between themselves, and may delegate to the person or persons to whom the reference is made any power to determine all or any of the terms of any contract to be made between the companies which the directors of the companies respectively might lawfully delegate to any committees of themselves respectively.

Power for railway companies to refer matters to arbitration.

III. The companies jointly, but not otherwise, from time to time, by writing under their respective common seals, may add to, alter, or revoke any agreement for reference in accordance with this act theretofore entered into between the companies, or any of the terms, conditions, or stipulations thereof.

Power to alter or revoke agreements for reference.

IV. Every reference or agreement in accordance with this act, except so far as it is from time to time revoked or modified in accordance with this act, shall bind the companies, and may and shall be carried into full effect.

Agreements to be carried into effect.

V. Where the companies agree, the reference shall be made to a single arbitrator.

Reference to a single arbitrator.

VI. Except where the companies agree that the reference shall be made to a single arbitrator, the reference shall be made as follows; to wit,

Reference to two or more arbitrators.

Where there are two companies the reference shall be made to two arbitrators:

Where there are three or more companies the reference shall be made to so many arbitrators as there are companies.

VII. Where there are to be two or more arbitrators, every company shall by writing under their common seal appoint one of the arbitrators, and shall give notice in writing thereof to the other company or companies.

Appointment of arbitrators by companies.

VIII. Where there are to be two or more arbitrators, if any of the companies fail to appoint an arbitrator within fourteen days after being thereunto requested in writing by the other company, or by the other companies or any of them, then, on the application of the companies or any of them, the Board of Trade, instead of the company so failing to appoint an arbitrator, may appoint an arbitrator; and the arbitrator so appointed shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be appointed by the company so failing.

Appointment of arbitrators by Board of Trade.

IX. When the reference is made to two or more arbitrators, if before the matters referred to them are determined any arbitrator dies, or becomes incapable or unfit, or for seven consecutive days fails to act as arbitrator, the company by which he was appointed shall by writing under their common seal appoint an arbitrator in his place.

Appointment of arbitrators by companies to supply vacancies.

X. Where the company by which an arbitrator ought to be appointed in the place of the arbitrator so deceased, incapable, unfit, or failing to act, fail to make the appointment within fourteen days after being thereunto requested in writing by the other company, or by the other companies or any of them, then, on the application of the companies or any of them, the Board of Trade may appoint an arbitrator; and the arbitrator so appointed by the Board of Trade shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be appointed by the company so failing.

Appointment of arbitrators by Board of Trade to supply vacancies.

(x) See ante, text, 490. This act was made applicable to railway companies incorporated by certificate of the Board of Trade under "The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864," by that act, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 121, post.

APPENDIX.

XI. When any appointment of an arbitrator is made, the company making the appointment shall have no power to revoke the appointment, without the previous consent in writing of the other company or every other company in writing under their common seal.

XII. Where two or more arbitrators are appointed, they shall, before entering on the business of the reference, appoint by writing under their hands an impartial and qualified person to be their umpire.

XIII. If the arbitrators do not appoint an umpire within seven days after the reference is made to the arbitrators, then, on the application of the companies, or any of them, the Board of Trade may appoint an umpire; and the umpire so appointed shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be appointed by the arbitrators.

XIV. Where two or more arbitrators are appointed, if before the matters referred to them are determined their umpire dies, or becomes incapable or unfit, or for seven consecutive days fails to act as umpire, the arbitrators shall by writing under their hands appoint an impartial and qualified person to be their umpire in his place.

XV. If the arbitrators fail to appoint an umpire within seven days after notice in writing to them of the decease, incapacity, unfitness, or failure to act of their umpire, then, on the application of the companies, or any of them, the Board of Trade may appoint an umpire; and the umpire so appointed shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be appointed by the arbitrators so failing.

XVI. Every arbitrator appointed in the place of a preceding arbitrator, and every umpire appointed in the place of a preceding umpire, shall respectively have the like powers and authorities as his respective predecessor.

XVII. Where there are two or more arbitrators, if they do not, within such a time as the companies agree on, or, failing such agreement, within thirty days next after the reference is made to the arbitrators, agree on their award thereon, then the matters referred to them, or such of those matters as are not then determined, shall stand referred to their umpire.

XVIII. The arbitrator, and the arbitrators, and the umpire respectively may call for the production of any documents or evidence in the possession or power of the companies respectively, or which they respectively can produce, and which the arbitrator, or the arbitrators, or the umpire shall think necessary for determining the matters referred, and may examine the witnesses of the companies respectively on oath, and may administer the requisite oath; and in Scotland may grant diligence for the recovery of the documents or evidence, and for citing witnesses, and on application to the lord ordinary he may issue letters of supplement or other necessary writs in support of the diligence.

XIX. Except where and as the companies otherwise agree, the arbitrator, and the arbitrators, and the umpire respectively may proceed in the business of the reference in such manner as he and they respectively shall think fit.

XX. The arbitrator, and the arbitrators, and the umpire respectively may proceed in the absence of all or any of the companies in every case in which, after giving notice in that behalf to the companies respectively, the arbitrator, or the arbitrators, or the umpire shall think fit so to proceed.

XXI. The arbitrator, and the arbitrators, and the umpire respectively may, if he and they respectively think fit, make several awards, each on part of the matters referred, instead of one award on all the matters referred; and every such award on part of the matters shall for such time as shall be stated in the award, the same being such as shall have been specified in the agreement for arbitration, or in the event of no time having been so specified, for any time which the arbitrator may be legally entitled to fix, be binding as to all the matters to which it extends, and as if the matters awarded on were all the matters referred, and that notwithstanding the other matters or any of them be not then or thereafter awarded on.

XXII. The award of the arbitrator, or of the arbitrators, or of the umpire, if made in writing under his or their respective hand or hands, and ready to be delivered to the companies within such a time as the companies agree on, or, failing such agreement, within thirty days next after the matters in difference are referred to (as the case may be) the arbitrator, or the arbitrators, or the umpire, shall be binding and conclusive on all the companies.

XXIII. Provided always, that (except where and as the companies otherwise agree) the umpire, from time to time by writing under his hand, may extend the period within which his award is to be made; and if it be made and ready to be delivered within the extended time, it shall be as valid and effectual as if made within the prescribed period.

XXIV. No award made on any arbitration in accordance with this act shall be set aside for any irregularity or informality.

XXV. Except only so far as the companies bound by any award in accordance with this act from time to time otherwise agree, all things by every award in accordance with this act lawfully required to be done, omitted, or suffered shall be done, omitted, or suffered accordingly.

XXVI. Full effect shall be given by all the superior courts of law and equity in the United Kingdom, according to their respective jurisdiction, and by the companies respectively, and otherwise, to all agreements, references, arbitrations, and awards in accordance with this act; and the performance or observance thereof may, where the courts think fit, be compelled by distress infinite on the property of the companies respectively, or by any other process against the companies respectively or their respective property that the courts or any judge thereof shall direct, and where requisite frame for the purpose.

XXVII. Except where and as the companies otherwise agree, the costs of and attending the arbitration and the award shall be in the discretion of the arbitrator, and the arbitrators, and the umpire respectively.

XXVIII. Except where and as the companies otherwise agree, and if and so far as the award does not otherwise determine, the costs of and attending the arbitration and the award shall be borne and paid by the companies in equal shares, and in other respects the companies shall bear their own respective costs.

XXIX. The submission to any arbitration in accordance with this act may at any time be made a rule of any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record at Westminster, or, as the case may be, at Dublin, on the application of any party interested; and the court may remit the matter to the arbitrator, or to the arbitrators, or to the umpire, with any directions the court think fit.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades and Offices.

[3rd April, 1860.]

V. No assessment shall be made under this act by the commissioners for general purposes in respect of the annual value or profits and gains arising from any railway, but in lieu thereof every such assessment shall be made by the commissioners for special purposes, and upon the value or profits and gains for the year ending the fifth day of April, 1860, and the said last-mentioned commissioners shall notify the assessment to the secretary or other officer of the company upon which the same shall be made, and the amount of such assessment shall be paid, collected and levied in like manner as any other assessment made by the said commissioners for special purposes.

Commissioners for special purposes to assess railways;

VI. In like manner as aforesaid, the commissioners for special purposes shall assess the duties payable under schedule (E) in respect of all offices and employments of profit held in or under any railway company (y), and shall notify to the secretary or other officer of such company the particulars thereof, and the said assessment shall be deemed to be and shall be an assessment upon the company, and paid, collected and levied accordingly; and it shall be lawful for the company, or such secretary or other officer, to deduct and retain out of the fees, emoluments or salary of each such officer or person the duty so charged in respect of his profits and gains.

and also the persons employed by railway companies.

An Act for more effectually carrying out the Clearing House System in Ireland, and for facilitating legal Proceedings in relation thereto (z).

[15th May, 1860.]

Whereas for some time past arrangements have subsisted between several railway, canal, and steam packet companies and public carriers in Ireland for facilitating the transmission of the through traffic in passengers, animals, minerals, goods, and all other descriptions of traffic passing over and upon railways, canals, and steam packets belonging to different companies, for the purpose of affording in respect to such passengers, animals, minerals, goods, and such other traffic, the same or the like facilities of through booking and charges, and otherwise, as if such railways, canals, and steam packets had belonged to one company, and for the settlement of the accounts of the receipts for through traffic in which two or more companies or parties are interested, and of the accounts arising out of the use by a company or other party of the carrying stock belonging to other companies or parties, and for the audit and adjustment of such traffic accounts of companies or parties as may be submitted to the clearing house for that purpose, which arrangements are conducted

(y) Persons employed by a railway company at weekly wages are not persons holding public employments, &c., within the third rule of Schedule (E), and the company is not liable to be assessed in respect of such servants. But it would seem that such persons, if their income amount to 100*l.* a year, are liable to be assessed under Schedule (D). Attorney-General v. Lancashire and Yorkshire R. Co., 33 Law J. (Exch.) 163.

APPENDIX.

under the control and superintendence of a committee appointed by the several railway, canal, and steam packet and other companies, and persons who are parties thereto, which committee is in this act designated "the committee," and the business of such committee has heretofore been in and is now carried on under the name or style of the Irish Railway Clearing House (hereinafter designated "the clearing house") in Dawson Street in the city of Dublin: And whereas the aforesaid arrangements have been productive of great convenience to the public and to the parties thereto, and a considerable saving of expense in the transmission of passengers, animals, minerals, goods, and other traffic over and upon the railways, canals, and steam packets belonging to such parties: And whereas difficulties have arisen in carrying the objects of the clearing house into effect in consequence of the committee not possessing the power of prosecuting or defending actions or suits, or taking other legal proceedings, and it is therefore expedient to remove such difficulties, and to extend and improve the clearing house system and the proceedings connected therewith; but the purposes aforesaid cannot be effected without the authority of parliament: May it therefore please your majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:

Parties to the clearing house to be subject to the provisions of this act.

I. The several companies, corporations, partnerships, and persons who at the time of the passing of this act are parties to the clearing house shall be subject to the provisions of this act, and all such companies, corporations, partnerships, and persons as shall respectively become, in manner hereinafter mentioned, parties to the clearing house, shall be subject to the like provisions; (that is to say,) every other company, corporation, partnership, and person who now is or are or hereafter may be engaged, or is or are or may be empowered to be engaged, either solely or in conjunction with any other business, in the business of carrying passengers, animals, minerals, goods, and moveable chattels and effects of whatever kind, or any of them, by land and water, or by land or by water, to or from any part or parts of Ireland, and all persons who shall be engaged in any such carrying business as aforesaid as lessees of or contractors with any such company, corporation, partnership, or person.

Other parties may join with assent of committee.

II. If any company, corporation, partnership, or person who may not be a party to the clearing house shall, by writing sealed with the common seal of any such company or corporation, or under the hand of any such partnership or person, request the committee to be admitted a party to the clearing house, and the committee shall assent to such request, such company, corporation, partnership, or person shall from the time of such assent being given, or at such other time as may be specified in the said request, become a party to the clearing house.

Parties may retire on giving notice.

III. If any party to the clearing house shall desire to retire therefrom, or cease to be a party thereto, and shall give notice thereof in writing to the committee, such party shall, at the expiration of three calendar months from the time when such notice shall be given, or if a more distant time shall be stated in such notice, then at the time so stated, cease to be a party to the clearing house: provided always, that such notice shall, in the case of a company or corporation, be sealed with the common seal of such company or corporation, and in the case of a partnership, to be under the hands of at least two co-partners; provided also, that such party shall have paid and discharged all sums due by such party to the committee.

Committee may give parties notice to retire.

IV. If not less than two-thirds of the committee present at a meeting specially summoned shall, by writing signed by their secretary or by two members of the committee, give notice to any company, corporation, partnership or person that they or he, as the case may be, shall cease to be a party to the clearing house at a time named in such notice, not being less than one calendar month from the time of giving such notice, such company, corporation, partnership or person shall, at the time so named, cease to be a party to the clearing house.

Appointment of the committee.

V. Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, the committee shall consist of delegates appointed by parties to the clearing house only, and shall be composed in the manner following: (that is to say), each company or corporation shall appoint a delegate being a director of such company or member of such corporation, each partnership shall appoint one of its members to be a delegate, and each person may appoint himself or another as a delegate, such appointment, in the case of a company or corporation, to be under seal, and in the case of a partnership, to be under the hands of at least two co-partners, and in the case of a person, to be under the hand and seal of such person: Provided always, that any such delegate may represent two or more parties on the committee, but shall in no case have more than one vote; provided also, that the acts of the committee shall be valid and binding, notwithstanding the absence of any such delegate, or that any company, corporation, partnership or person may happen to be unrepresented at any meeting of the committee.

Parties hereafter admitted may be represented on the committee.

VI. No company, corporation, partnership or person hereafter admitted a party to the clearing house shall be entitled to be represented on the committee by a delegate, unless the written request to be so admitted shall specify that the party applicant desires to be so represented, and shall specify the mode in which such delegate is to be from time to time appointed and removed, and unless the committee accept this mode of appointment or removal as a proper one; and the mode so specified for appointing any such delegate shall not be altered without the consent of the committee.

APPENDIX.

VII. No person claiming to be a member of the committee under an appointment made after the passing of this act shall be or shall be entitled to act as a member thereof until the committee have resolved that they are satisfied that such member has been duly appointed, and the decision of the committee that such member is duly appointed shall not only be evidence of such due appointment, but shall, until the committee otherwise order, make such person to be a member of the committee, though in fact he is not duly appointed.

Evidence of appointment.

VIII. Members of the committee which at the time of the passing of this act carries on business under the name or style of the Irish Railway Clearing House (in this act designated "the clearing house") in Dawson Street, in the city of Dublin, shall, without any further appointment, be members of the committee under this act.

Committee.

IX. The committee shall meet once a month, and at any other times whereof the secretary shall, at the written request of the chairman for the time being or any two members of the committee, give at least ten days' notice in writing to every company, corporation, partnership and person who may be parties to the clearing house, or to the secretary of every such company and corporation, and every such meeting may be adjourned from time to time as the committee shall think fit; and meetings and adjourned meetings of the committee shall be held at the offices of the clearing house in Dawson Street aforesaid, except when the committee shall have appointed some other place, and then at such other place; and in order to constitute a meeting of the committee there shall be present at least three members, including the chairman; and, except where otherwise provided, all questions at every meeting shall be determined by the majority of votes of the committee present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman of the meeting shall have a casting vote in addition to his vote as one of the committee; and notice of the business to be brought before any meeting shall, at least three days before the day of such meeting if the meeting be an ordinary one, and at least ten days before the day of such meeting if it be a special one, be given to every company, corporation, partnership and person who are parties to the clearing house, or the secretary of every such company and corporation.

Meetings of the committee, quorum, &c.

X. Until the first meeting of the committee which shall be held after the passing of this act, Sir Edward McDonnell, or other the chairman of the committee for the time being, shall continue in office; and at the first meeting of the committee which shall be held after the passing of this act, and at the meeting to be held in the month of January in each succeeding year, the members of the committee present at the meeting shall, if they think fit, either continue in office the chairman for the time being, or choose another chairman; and a general meeting of the committee specially summoned shall have power to remove any chairman; and if any chairman shall die or resign or be removed, the committee shall have power as soon as may be to choose some other person to fill the vacancy thereby occasioned; but every chairman elected to supply a vacancy other than at the meeting in the month of January in any year shall continue in office so long only as the person in whose place he shall be so elected would have been entitled to continue if such death, resignation or removal had not happened: Provided always, that it shall not be necessary that the person chosen as chairman be a delegate of any of the companies, corporations, partnerships or persons parties to the clearing house, but in case he shall not be a delegate he shall not be entitled to vote on any question, unless in the case of an equality of votes, when he shall be entitled to give the casting vote.

Appointment of the chairman.

XI. If at any meeting of the committee the chairman shall not be present the members of the committee present shall choose one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

In the absence of the chairman committee to elect a chairman.

XII. The committee may appoint sub-committees consisting of such number of members of the committee as they think fit, and shall fix the quorum of such sub-committees, and may grant to such sub-committees power to do any acts relating to the affairs of the clearing house which the committee could lawfully do, and may from time to time think proper to entrust to them; and all questions at any meeting of the sub-committees shall be determined by a majority of the votes of members present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman shall have a casting vote in addition to his vote as a member of such sub-committee: Provided always, that the acts, minutes and proceedings of the sub-committees shall from time to time be submitted to the committee, but all such acts, minutes and proceedings shall be held to be valid, and shall take effect, unless and until they are overruled by the committee.

Sub-committee and meetings thereof.

XIII. At every meeting of any such sub-committee the members thereof present shall appoint one of their number to be chairman of such meeting, who shall be entitled to give one vote as an ordinary member, and in case of an equality of votes shall be entitled to give another vote as the casting vote.

Chairman of sub-committee.

XIV. James Waller Elwin shall be the secretary to the committee until his death or resignation or removal, whichever shall first happen, and the committee shall have the power to remove him and all future secretaries, and in the event of the resignation or death or removal as aforesaid of any secretary the committee shall appoint a secretary in his stead.

Appointment of secretary.

XV. Any money which shall be received by the committee shall be held by them as trustees for the party or parties to whom the committee shall decide such money to be payable, but no member of the committee shall be answerable for any such money as may be lost or withheld by reason of any cause other than his own personal misconduct.

XVI. The accounts of the clearing house, and the balances due to and from the several parties thereto, shall be settled and adjusted by the secretary to the committee for the time being, which secretary shall also settle and determine the amount to be from time to time contributed to the funds of the clearing house by the parties thereto; and in case of any difference respecting such accounts, the decision of the committee to the effect that any balance or sum is payable by any company, corporation, partnership or person, then or theretofore party to the clearing house, shall be final and conclusive; and so long as any such balance or sum which the committee shall decide to be payable by any party, or any part thereof, shall not be paid, interest shall accrue and be paid on the same at such rate per centum per annum, not exceeding seven pounds per centum, as the committee shall from time to time determine, and such sum or balance, with interest thereon as aforesaid, shall be a debt due to the committee.

XVII. The committee shall, out of the funds of the clearing house, pay all the expenses of the clearing house, and all costs, charges, damages and expenses which the members of the committee or sub-committee, or any or either of them, as such members or member, or which the secretary as nominal plaintiff or defendant, or other party on behalf of the committee, may bear, sustain or be put to; and the members of the committee and secretary shall be completely indemnified and saved harmless out of the funds of the clearing house, and by the parties thereto, of, from and against all actions, suits and proceedings of any sort, costs, charges, damages and expenses to which they or any of them may in any way be subjected as members or member of the committee, or as secretary to the committee, by reason of anything which they or he may bonâ fide do or omit to do, whether such deed or omission be within their powers or not.

XVIII. The committee may, by action of debt in the name of their secretary, in any court of competent jurisdiction in Dublin, Westminster or Edinburgh, as the case may be, recover from any company, corporation, partnership or person any balance or sum, with interest thereon, not exceeding the rate of seven pounds per centum per annum, which the committee shall decide to be payable by such company, corporation, partnership or person, whether to any other company, corporation, partnership or person, or on account of the clearing house, and whether such company, corporation, partnership or person be still at the time of such decision or has then ceased to be a party to the clearing house, and whether such sum or balance and interest shall or shall not have been previously ascertained by the secretary to be payable.

XIX. If in any action brought according to this act the defendants shall plead that they never were indebted, or any plea in substance amounting to a denial that the defendants ever were indebted, the plaintiff shall, on issue joined on such plea, be entitled to a verdict, upon proof that the committee decided the sum in question to be payable by the defendants, and that the defendants were either at the time of such decision or at some previous time a party to the clearing house, and in the latter case, upon further proof that such sum was decided to be payable in respect of some transactions, matters, or expenses which happened or were sustained while the defendants were parties to the clearing house.

XX. The defendants in such action may plead any matter showing that they have, since the time of the decision, discharged the sum or balance and interest so decided to be payable, but shall not plead any plea denying the plaintiff to be secretary.

XXI. In support of any action under this act, it shall not be necessary, as part of the opening case, for the applicant or plaintiff to prove otherwise than as hereafter mentioned that the members of the committee were duly appointed, or that the meeting was duly instituted or holden, or that the proceedings were regular, but it shall be sufficient as prima facie evidence of those facts respectively to prove that the decision or resolution in question was made at a meeting purporting to be a meeting of the committee.

XXII. On the trial of any action under this act any company, corporation, partnership or person who may have acted as a party to the clearing house shall, upon proof thereof, be estopped from contending that at the time when they so acted they were not a party thereto, and they shall also be precluded from repudiating any accounts adjusted by or authorized to be adjusted by the committee, or the acts of their respective delegates during the time such delegate was a member of the committee.

XXIII. The committee shall cause notes, minutes or copies, as the case may require, of all appointments made or contracts entered into by them, and of the orders and proceedings of all their meetings, to be duly entered in books to be kept by them for that purpose; and every such entry shall be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which such appointments, contracts, orders or proceedings respectively took place, who shall add the word "chairman" to his signature, and which entries may be made and signed either at or after the meetings to which they respectively relate; and every entry purporting to be so signed shall be received as evidence in all courts, and before all judges, justices and others, without proof of such respective meetings having been duly convened or held, or of the persons making or entering such orders or proceedings being members of the committee, or of the signature of such chairman, or of the fact of his having been chairman, all which last-mentioned matters shall be presumed till the contrary be proved.

XXIV. On the trial of any such action, after it is proved to the satisfaction of the court or judge trying the cause that such company, corporation, partnership or person is or had once been a party to the clearing house, the books kept by the committee shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein stated and contained, and such books and all entries therein may be proved by copies, and a certificate that any writing is such a copy subscribed to or endorsed on such writing, and purporting to be signed by the chairman or secretary of the committee, shall be sufficient proof that such writing is a true copy, without proof of the signature or of the official character of the person who signs it, and such copy shall have the same effect in evidence as the originals respectively would have had; and the secretary, although the nominal plaintiff, and the members of the committee, shall be competent witnesses either for the plaintiff or for the defendants.

XXV. The committee to the clearing house may in all cases sue and be sued in the name of the secretary to the committee; and in all proceedings at law and in equity, and in bankruptcy or insolvency, or of any other sort, whether civil or criminal, the name of the secretary may be used instead of the names of the members of the committee and of the parties to the clearing house, and proofs in cases of bankruptcy, insolvency or winding-up affairs may be made by the said secretary.

XXVI. In any indictment or information for any felony or misdemeanor, wherein it shall be necessary to state the ownership of any property whatsoever, whether real or personal, and the same shall either belong to the committee, or be in their custody or in the custody or possession of any officer, clerk or servant to the committee, or of any person employed for the purpose or in the capacity of clerk or servant by the committee, or in or on any building or land used for the purposes of the clearing house, or shall be used or intended to be used for the purposes of the clearing house, it shall be sufficient to state such property to belong to the secretary of the committee.

XXVII. In any indictment for embezzlement wherein it shall be necessary to state the party charged with the embezzlement to have been the clerk or servant of some master or masters, or to have been employed for the purpose or in the capacity of clerk or servant by some master or masters, and such masters shall have been the committee, it shall be sufficient in such indictment to name the secretary of the committee in every place in such indictment where the names of the members of the committee would but for this enactment be required to be inserted.

XXVIII. Every notice or requisition on the business of the clearing house, or given pursuant to this act, shall be sufficient if it be in writing, signed by the secretary of the committee or by the secretary or other officer of the company, corporation, or by the partnership or person giving the same, and if it be sent by the general post addressed to the secretary of the company or corporation, or to the partnership or person for whom the same is intended, or to the secretary, at the office of the clearing house, in case such notice or requisition be intended for the committee; and proof of such notice or requisition being deposited in any public letter box or receiving house for letters intended to be forwarded by the general post shall be deemed proof of the due service of such notice or requisition; and notices or requisitions for each member of the committee shall be sufficient if sent in manner aforesaid addressed to him at his private residence, or at the principal office of the company or corporation, or the place of business of the partnership or person whom he represents.

XXIX. Every writ, summons, intimation or other document in and about all legal proceedings in the name of the secretary to the committee pursuant to this act against any company, corporation, partnership or person who shall be or shall have been a party to the clearing house may be served or given, as the case may be, by forwarding the same by post in a registered letter from the chief post office in Dublin, addressed in the case of a company or corporation to the secretary thereof at the principal office of such company or corporation, and in the case of all other parties to such parties at their respective places of business, and proof of such writ, summons, intimation or other document having been so forwarded shall be deemed proof of the due service thereof.

XXX. In all pleadings or proceedings, civil or criminal, it shall be sufficient to mention the companies, corporations, partnerships and persons who are parties to the clearing house by the description of "the parties to the clearing house mentioned in the Clearing Act (Ireland), 1860," and to describe the committee by the description of "the clearing house committee mentioned in the Clearing Act (Ireland), 1860," instead of stating the names of the individual parties and members.

XXXI. In all cases where the name of the secretary to the committee shall be used under the authority of this act it shall be sufficient to name and describe him, and to state the authority for using his name.

APPENDIX.

Books of the committee, or certified copies thereof, to be prima facie evidence, and the committee and secretary to be competent witnesses.

Suits to be in the name of the secretary to the committee.

In criminal proceedings property of committee to be deemed the property of secretary.

Short title.
Public act.

XXXII. Upon the death or removal or resignation of any secretary no action or suit, or other proceeding pending in his name as plaintiff or defendant, or otherwise, either on behalf of or against the committee, shall abate or be stayed, but as soon as another secretary shall be appointed the name of such new secretary shall be thereafter used, and in an action at law such name shall, whether before or after judgment, be introduced by suggestion, to which no plea or demurrer shall be allowed, and the omission to make such suggestion, and an erroneous suggestion, shall be mere irregularities, and shall, on the application of the committee, or of the party opposed to the committee, be rectified, but shall not otherwise be taken advantage of.

XXXIII. All such companies, corporations, partnerships and persons as are mentioned in the first section of this act, whether parties to the clearing house or not, may agree to refer and may refer to the arbitration of the committee or the said sub-committee, or any arbitrators and umpire to be chosen by or out of the committee, any existing or future differences, questions or other matters whatsoever in which any such companies, corporations, partnerships and persons then are or thereafter shall be mutually interested, and which they might settle or dispose of between themselves, and may delegate to the committee or the said sub-committee, or to the arbitrators and umpire to be chosen by or out of the committee, as the case may be, power to determine all or any of the terms of any contract to be made between the parties to any such reference; and all the powers conferred on railway companies by "The Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 1859," may be exercised by and shall in reference to this act be held to apply to and include all such parties as aforesaid; and all the provisions of the said "Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 1859," with respect to the appointment of arbitrators and umpire, either in the first instance, or to supply vacancies occasioned by death, incapacity, unfitness or failure to act, and whether by the companies or by the Board of Trade, and the powers of arbitrators and umpire, and the proceedings in the arbitration, may be exercised by or in reference to the committee and the said sub-committee, and arbitrators and umpire to be chosen by or out of the committee, as the case may be, on behalf of any such parties as aforesaid; and all the provisions of the last-mentioned act with respect to awards and the costs of the arbitration and awards shall be held applicable to and shall apply to any references to and awards to be made by the committee or the said sub-committee, or any arbitrators or umpire to be chosen by or out of the committee.

XXXIV. The submission to any arbitration in accordance with this act may at any time be made a rule of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record at Dublin on the application of any party interested, and the court may remit the matter to the committee or the said sub-committee, or any arbitrator or arbitrators to be chosen by or out of the committee, with any direction the court think fit.

XXXV. All the costs, charges and expenses of obtaining and passing this act, or incident thereto, shall be paid by the committee out of such moneys as shall come to their hands after the passing of this act, or shall be in their hands at the time of the passing thereof.

XXXVI. This act shall be called "The Clearing Act (Ireland), 1860," and shall be deemed to be a public act, and as such shall be judicially noticed.

23 & 24 VICT. CAP. 97.

An Act for amending and making perpetual the Railways Act (Ireland), 1851.
[13th August, 1860.]

14 & 15 Vict. c. 70.

Whereas it is expedient that "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1851" (t), should be amended as hereinafter provided, and that with such amendments the said act should be made perpetual: be it therefore enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:

Periods of notices shortened.

I. The words "twenty-one" shall be substituted for the words "thirty-one" in the eighth section of the said act, and the word "fourteen" shall be substituted for the words "twenty-one" in the ninth section of the same act.

After deposit of draft award company may, upon deposit of such amount as arbitrator may think fit, enter on lands.

II. The twenty-second section of the said act is hereby repealed; and in lieu thereof be it enacted, that when the company are desirous, for the purposes of their works, of entering upon any lands before they would be entitled to enter thereon under the provisions in the said act, as amended by this act, it shall be lawful for the company, at any time after the arbitrator shall have framed his draft award, upon depositing in the Bank of Ireland as herein directed such sum or sums as the arbitrator may certify to be in his opinion the proper amount to be so deposited in respect of any lands authorized to be purchased or taken by the company, and mentioned in such draft award, or of the several interests in such lands in respect of which no agreement shall have been come to between the company and the persons entitled thereto, to enter upon and use such lands for the purpose of the railway and works of the company; and the arbitrator shall, upon the request of the company, at any time after he shall have framed such draft award, certify under his hand the sum or sums which in his opinion should be so deposited by the company in respect of any lands mentioned in such draft award, or of any such interests therein as aforesaid, before they enter upon or use the same as aforesaid, and the sum or sums to be so certified shall be the sum or sums set forth in such draft award as payable by the company in respect of such lands or of such interests in such lands in respect of which no agreement shall have been come to between the company and the persons entitled thereto, or such greater amounts as to the arbitrator under the circumstances of the case shall seem proper; and notwithstanding such entry as aforesaid, all proceedings for and in relation to the completion of the said award, the delivery of certificates, and other proceedings under the said act as amended by this act, and under this act, shall be had and payments made as if such entry and deposit had not been made: provided that the company shall, where they enter upon any lands by virtue of this present provision, pay interest at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum upon the purchase and compensation money payable by them in respect of any lands so entered upon from the time of their entry until the time of the payment of such purchase money and compensation to the person entitled thereto, or where, under the provisions of the said act as amended by this act, such purchase money or compensation is required to be paid into the said bank, then until the same with such interest is paid into such bank accordingly; and where under this provision interest is payable on any purchase or compensation money, the certificate to be delivered by the company in respect thereof shall specify that interest is so payable, and the same shall be recoverable in like manner as the principal money mentioned in such certificate.

III. The twenty-third section of the said act is hereby repealed; and in lieu thereof be it enacted, that the sum or sums to be deposited as aforesaid in respect of any lands or any interests in any lands shall be paid into the Bank of Ireland in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, to be placed to his account there, to the credit of the company (describing the company by its proper name), in the matter of "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1851," and of the respective owners of the lands or of the interests in lands in respect of which the same is or are paid as aforesaid, subject to the control or disposition of the said court, and upon such deposit the cashier of the said bank shall give to the company, or the party paying in such money by their direction, a receipt for the same.

Mode of deposit.

IV. The twenty-fourth section of the said act is hereby repealed; and in lieu thereof be it enacted, that the sum or sums of money so deposited as last aforesaid shall remain in the bank by way of security to the parties respectively in respect of whose interests in the lands which shall so have been entered upon such sum or sums shall have been deposited for the payment of the money to become payable by the company to such parties respectively, for their respective interests in such lands under the award of the arbitrator; and the money so deposited may, on application by petition of the company, be ordered to be invested in bank annuities or government securities, and accumulated; and upon such payment as aforesaid by the company it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in Ireland, upon a like application, to order the money so deposited, or the funds in which the same shall have been invested, together with the accumulation thereof, to be repaid or transferred to the company, or in default of such payment as aforesaid by the company, it shall be lawful for the said court to order the same to be applied in such manner as it shall think fit for the benefit of the parties for whose security the same shall so have been deposited.

Deposit to remain as a security, and to be applied under direction of the Court of Chancery.

V. If part only of the lands charged with any rent-charge or fee-farm rent be required to be taken for the purposes of the special act, the apportionment of any such rent or rent-charge may be settled by agreement between the party entitled to the same and the owner of the lands on the one part and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not settled by agreement the same shall be settled by the arbitrator; and the owner of the rent-charge or fee-farm rent shall have all the same rights and remedies for the recovery of such apportioned part, as against the lands not required for the purposes of the special act, as previously to such apportionment he had for recovery of the entire.

Apportionment of rent-charge, &c. where part only of the land charged is required.

VI. If any lands shall be comprised in a lease for a life or lives or for a term of years unexpired, part only of which lands shall be required for the purposes of the special act, the rent payable in respect of the lands comprised in such lease shall be apportioned between the lands so required and the residue of such lands, and such apportionment may be settled by agreement between the lessor and lessee of such lands on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement between the parties, such apportionment shall be settled by the arbitrator, and after such apportionment the lessee of such lands shall as to all future accruing rent be liable only to so much of the rent as shall be apportioned in respect of the lands not required for the purposes of the special act; and as to the land not so required, and as against the lessee, the lessor shall have the same rights and remedies for the recovery of such portion of rent as previously to such apportionment he had for the recovery of the whole rent reserved by such lease; and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements of such lease, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall remain in force with regard to that part of the land which shall not be required for the purposes of the special act, in the same manner as they would have done in case such part only had been included in the lease.

VII. In case upon the trial of any traverse under the provisions of the said act it shall appear that the sum awarded to the traverser by the jury shall be less than the sum awarded by the arbitrator, it shall be lawful for the judge, if he shall think fit, to adjudge that such traverser is not entitled to any costs of such traverse, or that the company is entitled to costs not exceeding the sum of ten pounds against such traverser; and such adjudication of such judge shall be entered in the crown book, and such costs so awarded shall be deducted from the purchase or compensation money payable by the company to such traverser, or shall be recovered from him by distress in like manner as is provided by the fifty-third section of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845"^(u), with respect to costs payable to promoters.

VIII. "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1851," as amended by this act, and this act, shall be read together as one act, and shall be made perpetual, and this act shall be held to be incorporated with that act in any act already or hereafter incorporating that act.

IX. This act may be cited as "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1860."

23 & 24 VICT. CAP. 106.

An Act to amend the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts (1845) in regard to Sales and Compensation for Land by way of a Rent-charge, Annual Feu Duty or Ground Annual, and to enable Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the War Department to avail himself of the Powers and Provisions contained in the same Acts.

9th section of recited acts.

Whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, in regard to sales of land, or compensation for damages, in consideration of an annual rent-charge, annual feu duty or ground annual, and to enable her Majesty's principal secretary of state for the war department to avail himself of the powers and provisions contained in the same act for the purchase of lands wanted for the service of the war department or for the defence of the realm: Be it enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:

I. So much of the tenth section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, as provides that, save in the case of lands of which any person is seised in fee or entitled to dispose absolutely for their own benefit, the consideration to be paid for any lands, or for any damage done thereto, shall be in a gross sum, is hereby repealed.

II. The power to sell and convey lands in consideration of an annual rent-charge provided by the tenth section of the said act, and the power to recover such rent-charge provided by the eleventh section of the said act, are hereby extended to all cases of sale and purchase or compensation under the said act where the parties interested in such sale or entitled to such compensation are under any disability or incapacity, and have no power to sell or convey such lands, or to receive such compensation, except under the provisions of the said act.

III. The power to sell and convey lands in consideration of an annual feu duty or ground annual, under the tenth section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, and the power to recover such annual feu duty or ground annual, are hereby extended to all cases of sale or purchase or compensation under the said act, where the parties interested in such sale are under any disability or incapacity, and have no power to sell or convey such lands, or to receive such compensation, except under the provisions of the said act.

IV. In every case of such sale or compensation by any parties other than parties seised in fee or entitled to dispose absolutely of the lands so sold or damaged, the amount of such rent-charge, annual feu duty or ground annual, hereinbefore mentioned, shall be settled in the manner directed in the ninth section of each of the said acts respectively; provided that the amount of such annual rent-charge, annual feu duty or ground annual, shall in no case be less than one-fourth part greater than the net annual rent received by the parties beneficially interested in such lands, upon an average of the last seven years; and that a charge of five per cent. on the gross sum estimated or fixed as aforesaid, by way of compensation for any damage that may be done to the said lands, shall in all such cases be added to and shall form a part of the said rent-charge, annual feu duty or ground annual; and that no fine, foregift, grassum, premium or other consideration in the nature thereof shall be paid or taken in respect of the lands so sold or damaged, other than the annual rent-charge, annual feu duty or ground annual made payable for such lands: provided also, that such rent-charge shall be and remain upon and for the same uses, trusts and purposes as those upon which the rents and profits of the land so conveyed stood settled or assured at or immediately before the conveyance thereof, and shall be a first charge on the tolls and rates, if any, payable under the special act.

V. In case the promoters of the undertaking shall be empowered, by any act or acts relating thereto, to be passed after the passing of this act, to borrow money to an amount not exceeding a prescribed sum, then in the event of the promoters of the undertaking agreeing at any time after the passing of this act with any person under the powers of this act and of either of the acts hereinbefore mentioned, or of either of the said acts only, for the purchase of any lands in consideration of the payment of a rent-charge, annual feu duty or ground annual, the powers of the promoters of the undertaking for borrowing money shall be reduced by an amount equal to twenty years' purchase of any rent-charge, annual feu duty or ground annual, so for the time being payable.

If lands purchased by way of rent-charge, borrowing powers to be reduced proportionally.

VI. The clauses contained in "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," relating to the purchase of lands by agreement, and to agreements for sale, and conveyances, sales and releases of any lands or hereditaments, or any estate or interest therein, by parties under disability, shall extend and be applicable to all purchases of land and hereditaments for public purposes which shall be hereafter made by the council of any city or borough, with the sanction of the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury, under the powers for that purpose contained in "The Municipal Corporation Mortgages, &c. Act, 1860."

Certain clauses in 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, extended to purchases of land, &c. for public purposes.

VII. For the purchase or acquisition of any messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments wanted for the service of the admiralty or of the war department or for the defence of the realm, it shall be lawful for her Majesty's principal secretary of state for the war department for the time being to use all or any of the powers and provisions by "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and by "The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," given to promoters of the undertaking, as therein mentioned, and for such purposes the said principal secretary shall be deemed and taken to be the promoters of an undertaking within the meaning of the said act, and all the powers and provisions thereof shall, if used by her Majesty's principal secretary of state for the war department, be treated as if they were contained in the 5th & 6th Vict. c. 94, for the purpose of being used and made available by the principal officers of her Majesty's ordnance, and had been transferred to the said principal secretary for the time being by the 18th & 19th Vict. c. 117, for the purposes aforesaid: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorize any purchase otherwise than by agreement of any land, except according to the provisions of the twenty-third section of the said act of the fifth and sixth Victoria, or prejudice or affect the powers and authorities of the said principal secretary for the time being under the said last-mentioned statutes or either of them.

Power to secretary for war to use the powers given to promoters of undertakings by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18.

VIII. This act shall be read and construed as part of the said "Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," in all matters in which it relates to the said acts respectively; and in citing this act in other acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts Amendment Act, 1860."

This act and 8 & 9 Vict. cc. 18 & 19 to be construed together.

23 & 24 VICT. CAP. 152.

An Act to facilitate internal Communication in Ireland by means of Tramroads or Tramways (v). [28th August, 1860.]

Whereas it would be of great public and local advantage if powers were given to persons desirous to promote the construction of tramways in Ireland to make use for that purpose, under proper control, of public roads, post roads and common highways, where the same can be done without injury to public interests, and to purchase and hold such lands contiguous to such roads and highways, or agreed to be sold by the owners, as shall be found useful and necessary for the completion of such undertakings, and to use such tramways for the conveyance of passengers, produce, minerals, merchandize and other goods, in carriages, waggons and trucks moved by animal power: Be it therefore enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:

I. Any persons intending to apply under this act for authority to make and maintain a tramway, which persons are hereinafter called the promoters, shall in the months of April and May, or either of them, immediately preceding the application, publish notice of their intention, by advertisement, according to the regulations contained in Schedule assizes.

Tramway not wholly in one county.

(A.) to this Act, Part I.: provided always, that it shall not be competent to make application for a tramway or tramways under the provisions of this act to unite places between which statutory powers for making a railway or railways for directly connecting the same shall have been granted and be in force.

II. On or before the first day of May in the same year, the promoters shall deposit with the secretary of the grand jury of any county within which the tramway is proposed to be made—

1. A copy of the advertisement published by them;
2. A published map to a scale of not less than a quarter of an inch to a mile, with the line of the proposed tramway delineated thereon, so as to show its general course and direction;
3. A plan, book of reference and section, prepared according to the regulations contained in Schedule (A.) to this act, Part II.;

and with the county surveyor and the clerk of each union through which the tramway is proposed to be made a copy of each of the same documents.

III. On or before the second day of the same month of May, the promoters shall give to the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees, and occupiers, of all lands which the promoters intend to apply for power to take, notice of their intention, according to the regulations contained in Schedule (A.) to this act, Part III.

IV. On or before the twelfth day of the same month of May, the promoters shall deposit with the secretary of the said grand jury—

1. A memorial of the promoters, signed by them or some or one of them, addressed to the lord lieutenant in council, praying for an order in council authorizing the making of the tramway, with a draft of the proposed order scheduled to the memorial;
2. An estimate of the expense of the undertaking, signed by the person making the same;
3. Lists of the owners and others to whom the promoters have given such notice as is hereinbefore required, prepared according to the regulations contained in Schedule (A.) to this act, Part IV.;

and with the county surveyor a duplicate of each of the same documents.

V. At the summer assizes of the same year the said grand jury shall, on the application of the promoters, inquire whether or not the requirements contained in the foregoing enactments have been complied with (for which purpose they shall have power to summon witnesses, and require the production of documents, and take evidence on oath or otherwise), and shall hear any person interested in contending that such requirements have not been complied with who shall lodge with the secretary of the grand jury a memorial complaining of non-compliance in some particular specifically stated in such memorial, and shall then proceed to inquire generally into the primâ facie merits of the undertaking. With reference thereto the grand jury shall take into consideration the report of the county surveyor on the undertaking (who is hereby required to make a report thereon to the grand jury, and to deliver a copy thereof to the promoters three clear days at least before the inquiry by the grand jury), and shall hear in opposition to the application any owner, lessee or occupier of any lands proposed to be taken for the purposes of the undertaking, or alleged to be injuriously affected thereby, and any railway or other company or person desiring to be heard in opposition on the ground of competition, or any part of whose rails, trams, stations, works or accommodations is proposed to be taken or in any manner used or interfered with for the purposes of the undertaking, and the inhabitants of any town, place or district alleged to be injuriously affected by the undertaking. The grand jury shall then approve provisionally (x) or disapprove, as they may think fit, of the undertaking, with or without modification, having regard to the compliance or non-compliance of the promoters with the requirements aforesaid, and to the primâ facie merits of the undertaking, in engineering, financial and other respects; and such provisional approval or such disapproval (with, in case of disapproval, the grounds thereof), shall be certified in writing under the hand of the secretary of the grand jury; and in all cases where the proposed undertaking is provisionally approved of by any grand jury or grand juries, it shall be lawful for any railway company or owner of land who may have opposed the application for the same, to appeal against any such provisional approval to the lord lieutenant in council, who shall, as soon as may be, inquire into the grounds of such provisional approval, and allow or disallow the appeal.

VI. Where the proposed tramway does not lie wholly within one county, the foregoing enactments shall apply equally to every county within which any part of it lies, except that the promoters may, if they think fit, deposit with the secretary of the grand jury, and the surveyor of any county, and the clerk of any union, such plan, book of reference, section, estimate and lists only as relate to so much of the proposed tramway as lies within that particular county.

(x) One approval by the grand jury is not sufficient, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 102, s. 2, post, 166. And see that statute as to notices and traverse of approval.

VII. Where the proposed tramway does not lie wholly within one county, and the undertaking is provisionally approved of by any one of the grand juries before whom the application comes, but is disapproved of by any other or others of such grand juries, it shall be lawful for the promoters to appeal against such disapproval to the lord lieutenant in council, who shall, as soon as may be, inquire into the grounds of disapproval, and allow or disallow the appeal.

APPENDIX.

Appeal to lord lieutenant in council against disapproval.

VIII. Where the proposed tramway lies wholly within one county, and the grand jury of that county disapproves of the undertaking, and also where the proposed tramway does not lie wholly within one county, and either the grand juries of all the several counties disapprove of the undertaking, or any one of them disapproves of it, and no appeal is brought against such disapproval, or any appeal brought is disallowed, then and in every such case the application of the promoters shall be deemed to have wholly failed.

On disapproval, &c., application deemed to have failed.

IX. In every other case the commissioners of public works, hereinafter called the Board of Works, as soon as may be after such provisional approval (y) or such allowance of appeal as aforesaid, on the application of the promoters, and on being furnished by them with duplicates of all such plans and other documents as are hereinbefore required to be deposited, and with all such other plans and documents and all such other information as the Board of Works may require, shall, by such fit persons or person as they shall appoint for the purpose, make public inquiry concerning the merits of the undertaking (to be held on or near some part of the lands proposed to be taken for the tramway, and according to the regulations contained in Schedule (A.) to this act, Part V.), and shall report their opinion thereon, and by such report recommend, if they think fit, any such modification of the undertaking, in an engineering or financial or other respect, as may seem to them of public or local advantage.

On approval, local public inquiry by Board of Works as in Sched. (A.) Part V.

X. At the spring assizes next after the said summer assizes the grand jury of each county within which any part of the proposed tramway lies, shall, on the application of the promoters, take into consideration the report of the Board of Works, and also the further report of the county surveyor on the undertaking (who is hereby required to make a further report thereon to the grand jury, and to deliver a copy thereof to the promoters three clear days at least before the inquiry by the grand jury), and shall hear in opposition to the application any such owner, lessee, occupier, company, person or inhabitants as aforesaid. The grand jury shall then definitively approve or disapprove, as they may think fit, of the undertaking, with or without modification, having regard to the merits of the undertaking in engineering, financial and other respects, which definitive approval or disapproval (with, in case of disapproval, the grounds thereof) shall be certified in writing under the hand of the secretary of the grand jury.

At spring assizes definitive approval or disapproval.

XI. On the conclusion of such proceedings at the spring assizes, the promoters shall have the like right of appeal as is hereinbefore given to them in respect of proceedings at the summer assizes, and on definitive disapproval or on disallowance of appeal (as the case may be) the application of the promoters shall be deemed to have wholly failed.

Appeal, &c. as before.

XII. On the promoters bringing an appeal they shall give notice thereof by advertisement inserted in the Dublin Gazette and in the same newspaper or newspapers in which the advertisement required by Section I. of this act was inserted by them. On any such appeal the lord lieutenant in council shall, as far as may be requisite, take into consideration all such reports and documents and other things relative to the undertaking as were before the grand jury whose disapproval is appealed from, and shall hear in opposition to the appeal any such owner, lessee, occupier, company, person or inhabitants as aforesaid.

Notice, &c. of appeal.

XIII. Where the undertaking is definitively approved of by the only grand jury or by all the grand juries before whom the application comes, or all appeals against the disapproval of it are allowed, then and in every such case the lord lieutenant in council shall settle and make an order in council, authorizing the making and maintaining of the tramway, subject and according to the provisions of this act, by such persons or person or body corporate or company, in such manner, subject to such restrictions and provisions, and on such terms and conditions as shall be therein specified.

On definitive approval, lord lieutenant in council to make order.

XIV. Thereupon, and on the promoters doing everything required to be done by them by any provision for securing the completion of the tramway applicable in their case, the lord lieutenant in council shall, as soon as conveniently may be, procure all necessary steps to be taken for the confirmation of such order in council by act of parliament, and until such confirmation the order shall have no effect whatever (z). The bill for any such act shall be introduced on or before the first of June, and treated in all respects as a public bill. The order to be confirmed by the bill shall be specified in a schedule to it, but shall not be set out at length therein. The promoters shall deposit, for the use of the members of the houses of Parliament respectively, so many copies of the order in such

Order to be confirmed by act of parliament.

Plan and section furnished to Board of Works to be sufficient for purposes of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 70.

offices of the houses respectively as the clerk of the Parliaments and the Speaker of the House of Commons respectively may from time to time direct.

XV. Where the promoters desire that a joint stock company shall be constituted for the execution of the undertaking, the order authorizing the making of the tramway shall contain proper provisions, with apt terms, for uniting into a company for that purpose such persons as shall be named or referred to therein, being subscribers to the undertaking, and for incorporating them into a company by an appropriate name, with perpetual succession and a common seal, and with power to purchase and hold land for the purpose of the undertaking, subject and according to the restrictions of this act and of the order (z).

XVI. Every such order shall prescribe the amount of the share capital of the company (the same and every part thereof to be applied only in carrying into execution the objects and purposes of the order), the number of the shares into which the capital shall be divided, the amount of each share, the amount and intervals of calls, and the maximum aggregate amount to be called within a certain time.

XVII. Any such order may (where it seems to the lord lieutenant in council expedient) empower the company to borrow on mortgage or bond such money as in the order shall be specified (the same and every part thereof to be applied only in carrying into execution the objects and purposes of the order), and may provide, in such manner as may seem fit, for the payment of interest on and the discharge of the principal money borrowed, and for the appointment of a receiver on behalf of mortgagees: provided always, that no such order shall empower the company to borrow more money in the whole than one-third of the amount of their share capital, or to borrow any money whatever until the whole of their share capital is subscribed for, and one-half of it is actually paid up, and they prove to the justice who is to certify, under the provisions contained in the fortieth section of "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," that all such capital has been subscribed for bonâ fide, and is held by subscribers or their assigns, and for which such subscribers or their assigns are legally liable.

XVIII. Every such order shall prescribe the time within which the first general meeting of the shareholders shall be held, and may prescribe or provide for any such thing relating to the constitution, management, rights, powers or duties of the company as is ordinarily prescribed or provided for in a special act authorizing the construction of a railway and incorporating a company for that purpose.

XIX. Every such company, and no other, shall be deemed to be a tramway company within the meaning of this act, and (subject to the other provisions of this act) the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (a), shall apply to every tramway company, and shall be incorporated with the order constituting it, and (subject as aforesaid) the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (b), the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c), and the Railways Act (Ireland), 1851 (d), shall apply to every tramway authorized by any order (whether a tramway company is thereby constituted or not), and shall be incorporated with every such order.

XX. In the construction of the said acts in connexion with any such order—

The expression "the special act" used in the said acts, shall be taken to mean or apply to any such order as and when confirmed by act of Parliament;

The expressions "the undertaking" and "the railway," used in the said acts, shall be respectively taken to mean or apply to the tramway and works by such order authorized;

The expression "the Company," used in the said acts, shall be taken to mean, as to the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, a tramway company, and as to the said other acts, the persons or person or body corporate or company authorized by any such order to make a tramway; and the said acts shall be read as if the Board of Works were therein named instead of "The Board of Trade," and as if Dublin were therein named instead of London.

XXI. It shall not be lawful for the persons authorized to make a tramway under this act to begin to make the same without first depositing in like manner as a plan and a section are hereinbefore required to be deposited a plan and a section (prepared in like manner as the original plan and section) of all such alterations from the original plan and section as shall be authorized by the order in council, and without also first furnishing a duplicate thereof to the Board of Works.

XXII. For the purposes of the application of the Railways Act (Ireland), 1851 (d), to a tramway under this act, any map, plan, book of reference, and section furnished to the Board of Works under this act shall be sufficient, and the same shall be used and proceeded on in lieu of the maps or plans and schedules of lands, works and names by the last-mentioned act required. Such estimates, and such draft award, and copies thereof and of parts thereof, as are by the same act required, shall be deposited in like manner as plans and other documents are hereinbefore required to be deposited, and not otherwise, and the terms of notice of deposit to be published under that act shall be altered accordingly.

XXIII. The provisions of the said acts directing deposits to be made with clerks of the peace (except the provisions relative to access to the special act) and with clerks of poor law unions and postmasters, and the provisions with respect to the crossing of roads and other interferences therewith (other than the provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, sects. 65, 66, 67) (e), and the provisions with respect to the use of locomotive engines or other moving power, not being animal power, shall be excepted out of the incorporation hereinbefore made; and it shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant in council, in and by any such order, if the circumstances of the case appear so to require, to vary or except any of the provisions of any of the said acts.

XXIV. Every tramway made under this act shall be worked by animal power only, and shall (unless in any case the order in council otherwise provides) be constructed with iron rails or trams, and on the gauge of five feet three inches. Any such tramway may be authorized to be constructed wholly or partly along or across any post road, road now or formerly a turnpike road, public highway, street, square, market place, court, lane, alley, bridge or quay, or other public thoroughfare, passage or place whatsoever, on the level.

XXV. Any such order in council may prescribe the maximum tolls and rates of charge to be taken and made for passengers, animals and things conveyed on the tramway, not exceeding the tolls and rates of charge specified in Schedule (B.) to this act, and may make regulations for the calculation and charging thereof; and in the absence in any case of any special provisions for those purposes, or so far as any such special provisions shall not extend, the maximum tolls and rates of charge, and the regulations, shall be those specified in the same schedule.

XXVI. It shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant in council, on the like proceedings and inquiry as are hereinbefore specified being taken and made, to make an order authorizing the varying, extending or enlarging of any tramway already authorized, and the maintenance of the tramway, as and when so varied, extended or enlarged. No such order shall have any effect until confirmed by an act of parliament, proceedings for the obtaining of which shall be taken in manner hereinbefore provided with respect to an original order for the making of a tramway.

XXVII. It shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant in council, by order, when the circumstances of any case appear to render it expedient, to extend the time limited for the completion of a tramway, or to authorize the abandonment of all or any part of a tramway: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the lord lieutenant in council to make any such order without notice being given to the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees, and occupiers of the lands in which the work or the part thereof intended to be abandoned is situate, or without notice being given to such other persons or authorities as the lord lieutenant in council may think fit, or without hearing any person or authority concerned and desiring to be heard. No such order shall have any effect until confirmed by an act of Parliament, proceedings for the obtaining of which shall be taken in manner hereinbefore provided with respect to an original order for the making of a tramway.

XXVIII. Provided always, that any order in council authorizing the abandonment of a tramway, or any part thereof, shall be made and take effect subject to the following restrictions and conditions:

1. The order shall contain such provisions as may appear expedient for compelling the owners of the tramway to make good any damage that may have been caused to any post road, turnpike road, public highway, street, square, market place, court, lane, alley, bridge or quay, or other public thoroughfare, passage or place, by or in consequence of the making of the tramway, or of the part thereof authorized to be abandoned (as the case may be):
2. If, on the application for the order, it is shown to the lord lieutenant in council that all or any lands acquired by the owners of the tramway for the purposes thereof, or of the part thereof authorized to be abandoned (as the case may be), may with advantage be dedicated for highway purposes to the use of the public, and to that end be placed under the control of the grand jury, municipal corporation, body of commissioners, or other body having the control of the public roads in the county, city, borough, town corporate, place, or district where the lands are situate, the order in council shall contain such provisions in that behalf as may appear expedient:
3. In the absence of any such provisions, and so far as all or any such provisions shall not extend, the lands acquired by the owners of the tramway for the purposes thereof, or of the part thereof authorized to be abandoned (as the case may be), shall go to and vest in the person or persons from whom the same were acquired, his or their respective heirs, successors, executors, administrators or assigns (according to the tenure of the lands), discharged from all estates, interests and claims of the owners of the tramway, or any person claiming under them, and as if any order authorizing the making of the tramway had never been made or confirmed, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit.

APPENDIX.

Some provisions of incorporated acts excepted.

Construction and gauge.

Maximum tolls and rates of charge, with regulations in Sched. (B.)

Tramway may be varied, enlarged, &c.

Time for completion may be extended, or abandonment may be authorized.

On abandonment, damage to be made good, and land taken to be used for highway purposes, or to go back to original owner.

APPENDIX.

Deposit as security for completion by a company.

XXIX. Where the promoters are not an existing tramway company, and a tramway company is constituted by the order in council authorizing the undertaking, and also where the promoters are an existing tramway company, but are not possessed of a tramway actually open for traffic, then and in every such case the promoters shall give security for the completion of the proposed tramway, as follows:

1. Within forty-eight hours after the making of the order they shall, with the privity of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, either pay in his name into the Bank of Ireland a sum of money equal to one-twentieth part of the estimated cost of the undertaking, or deposit in his name in the Bank of Ireland, or transfer into his name there, exchequer bills or other government securities equivalent to that sum at the price at which such bills or securities were originally purchased by the promoters (to be proved by the broker's certificate of such purchase):
2. Before making any such payment, deposit or transfer, they shall obtain from the clerk of her Majesty's Privy Council in Ireland, a warrant under his hand authorizing the same, and stating the title of the account to which such money, bills or securities, shall be placed, which warrant shall be sufficient authority to the said accountant-general for permitting such payment, deposit or transfer: provided always, that in case of the accountant-general's office being closed at the time when any such payment, deposit or transfer is required, the same may be made and shall be received and acted on by the Bank of Ireland without his actual privity:
3. The Court of Chancery, on the petition in a summary way of the persons or person making such payment, deposit or transfer, or the majority of such persons, or the survivors or survivor of them, hereinafter called the depositors or depositor, may order that any money so paid, or any interest or dividend accrued on any bills or securities so deposited or transferred, be invested in any such securities as the depositors or depositor may desire and the court approve:
4. In the following cases, and not otherwise, the Court of Chancery, on the petition in a summary way of the depositors or depositor, shall order the money, bills or securities, so paid, deposited or transferred, and any securities in which any investment may be made as aforesaid, and any interest or dividend accrued thereon respectively, to be paid or transferred to or into the names or name of the depositors or depositor; namely,
 - (1.) If an act of Parliament confirming the order in council with respect to which such payment, deposit or transfer is made, does not pass in the session current at the date of the order, or, if Parliament be not then sitting, then in the session beginning next after that date:
 - (2.) If such an act does so pass, and within the time limited for the completion of the tramway the company open it for traffic, or prove to the Board of Works that they have paid up one half of their share capital, and have expended for the purposes of the order a sum equal to such half, or else execute a bond in twice the amount paid into the bank, or represented by the deposit or transfer aforesaid, conditioned for payment to her Majesty, her heirs or successors, of that amount, in the event of their failing either to open the tramway for traffic, or to give such proof as aforesaid, within the time limited for the completion of the tramway (such bond to be prepared to the satisfaction of and deposited with the Board of Works, and to be made with a surety or sureties approved of by the Board of Works):
5. If an act confirming the order passes as aforesaid, and the time limited for completion of the tramway expires before it is opened for traffic, or before such proof as aforesaid is given, then the money, bills or securities paid, deposited or transferred, and any securities in which any investment may have been made as aforesaid, and any interest or dividend accrued thereon respectively, or the monies secured by any bond given as aforesaid (as the case may be), shall, immediately on the expiration of the time so limited, be forfeited to her Majesty, and be paid or transferred, by the officer or person in whose name the same shall then be standing, or by whom the same may be recovered and received, to the account of her Majesty's exchequer, and shall then be carried to and form part of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom:
6. The certificate of the Board of Works that a confirming act of Parliament has or has not passed as aforesaid, or that the tramway has or has not been opened for traffic, or that such proof or such bond as aforesaid has or has not been given, shall be conclusive evidence thereof.

Deposit, where time extended.

XXX. Where an order in council authorizes an existing tramway company, being possessed of a tramway actually open for traffic, to make another tramway, or extends the time limited for the completion by a tramway company of their tramway, then and in every such case the order shall provide that after the expiration of a time thereby limited (not exceeding in the former case five, and in the latter case three years from the passing of the confirming act) the payment of dividend on the company's ordinary capital shall be suspended until the tramway to which the order relates is opened for traffic.

XXXI. Where the provisions of either of the two last preceding sections are not applicable, the lord lieutenant in council shall make such other provision as may seem fit for securing the completion of the tramway within the time limited.

XXXII. All costs, charges and expenses necessarily incurred in connection with the making of any such order in council, or any proceeding preliminary thereto, shall be paid by the promoters, and all other costs, charges and expenses shall be in the discretion of the lord lieutenant in council.

XXXIII. For the purposes of any application made or intended to be made under this act, it shall be lawful for the county surveyor, his assistants, servants and workmen, and also for the promoters, their engineers, surveyors, agents, servants and workmen, at all reasonable times, and causing as little inconvenience as may be, to enter on any lands in or near the line of the proposed tramway (not being lands which cannot be authorized to be taken under this act for the purposes of a tramway, without the consent in writing of the owner thereof), and to survey or otherwise examine the same, and to dig or bore therein; provided that he or they first obtain authority so to do in writing under the hand of a justice of the peace at petty sessions in and for the district where the lands are situate, such justice not having any pecuniary interest in the undertaking. The promoters shall also make full compensation for any damage caused under this provision, the amount of such compensation to be fixed by two or more justices of the peace at petty sessions in and for the same district (whose order shall be conclusive), and to be recovered as any compensation money for lands taken by the promoters is recoverable.

XXXIV. No deposit required by this act shall be of any effect if made on a Sunday; and any deposit made after eight o'clock in the evening of any week day but Saturday shall be deemed to be made on the following day, and if made after that hour on a Saturday shall be deemed to be made on the following Monday.

XXXV. The secretary of a grand jury and clerk of union shall make a memorandum in writing on every document deposited with him under this act, showing the time of deposit, and shall permit any person to inspect and examine the same at all reasonable hours and during a reasonable time, and to make copies of or extracts from it.

XXXVI. Everything required to be done under this act by the grand jury of a county shall be deemed to be a part of their fiscal business; and all enactments for the time being in force respecting the fiscal concerns of a county, or the fiscal business to be transacted by a grand jury, before or at any assizes, shall apply to everything done by a grand jury under this act, so far as the same enactments shall be applicable thereto.

XXXVII. With respect to the county of Dublin and the county of the city of Dublin, for the purposes of this act, two successive presenting terms for those counties respectively shall be in the place of the summer and spring assizes for other counties, and the times at which notices shall be given, deposits made, and other proceedings taken shall be from time to time regulated by general rules made in manner hereinafter provided.

XXXVIII. Where a proposed tramway lies wholly or partly in a city, borough, or town corporate, or other place or district in which the public roads are not under the control of the grand jury of the county within which such city, borough, town corporate, place, or district is locally situate, then and in every such case, for the purposes of this act, the grand jury of the county of the city or county of the town, municipal corporation, town or other commissioners having the control of the public roads in such city, borough, town corporate, place, or district, or other body having such control, or in case all such public roads are not under the control of any one such body then each such body as to the public roads under its control, shall be in the place of the grand jury of the county, with all the like rights, powers, and duties; and the secretary, town clerk, clerk, or other like officer of any such body shall be in the place of the secretary of the grand jury of a county, with all the like rights, powers, and duties; and (except as to the county of the city of Dublin which is hereinbefore provided for) meetings of each such body shall be held for the purposes of this act at times as nearly as may be corresponding with the respective times of the summer and spring assizes for the county within which such city, borough, town corporate, place, or district is locally situate:

Provided always, that the power of any such body (including the municipal corporation of the city of Dublin) to approve or disapprove of any undertaking shall be subject to the following restrictions:

1. Such approval or disapproval shall have no effect unless it is determined on by a majority of not less than two thirds of such members of the body as shall be present at a meeting of the body specially summoned by notice in writing, specifying the time and place and object of the meeting, delivered at the usual or last known place of abode of each member of the body seven clear days at least before the day of the meeting:
2. Any five members of the body dissenting from the approval of any undertaking may, within one month after such approval, appeal against the same to the lord lieutenant in council, and on any such appeal being brought such notice shall be given by advertisement or otherwise, and such persons shall be heard in support of and in opposition to the appeal, as shall be from time to time directed by general rules made in manner hereinafter provided:

APPENDIX.

In other cases other security for completion to be taken.

Expenses to be paid by promoters.

Power to promoters and county surveyor to enter and survey.

Rules as to deposits.

Secretary of grand jury, &c. to permit inspection, &c.

Proceedings of grand jury to be part of fiscal business.

Counties of Dublin and of city of Dublin.

Tramway in city or town.

APPENDIX.

As to altering level of streets when tramways pass through towns.

Persons interested in tramways not to vote, but not to be disqualified.

Promoters of tramways on tidal lands to deposit map at the Admiralty.

Lands not to be taken without owner's consent, except lands adjoining to public roads.

Demesnes, &c. not to be taken without owner's consent.

Owners of sewers, &c. not to be impeded from access.

Lord lieutenant in council may make general rules for execution of this act.

Provided also, that where in any such city, borough, town corporate, place, or district the public roads or any of them shall, by virtue of any special agreement or by usage or otherwise, be in fact under the control of a body not being the body in law having or entitled to have such control, then and in every such case, for the purposes of this act, the body in fact having such control shall be deemed to be the body to which the present provision applies.

XXXIX. Where any tramway shall be made through any city or town, it shall not be lawful to alter the level of any street therein without the consent of two thirds of the owners of the houses adjoining the same, or in such a manner as to prevent convenient access to all the houses adjoining such street, and in no case shall the level be altered more than four feet; and when any street shall be so raised or sunk, the whole of the surface of the roadway of such street shall be brought by the promoters to the same level, unless it shall appear to the Board of Works that such alteration is objectionable.

XL. If any member of a grand jury, municipal corporation, or body of commissioners, or other body having the control of the public roads in any county, city, borough, town corporate, place or district, shall be also the promoter or owner or one of the promoters or owners, or a member or shareholder of a tramway company being the owners, of a tramway lying wholly or in part within such county, city, borough, town corporate, place or district, it shall not be lawful for him to vote on or otherwise act in relation to any question directly or indirectly concerning such tramway or tramway company; but no member or shareholder of a tramway company shall be disqualified from being a member of any such municipal corporation, body of commissioners, or other body as aforesaid by reason of any contract entered into between the tramway company and such municipal corporation, body of commissioners, or other body: provided always, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall be deemed to render invalid any resolution or act of a grand jury, municipal corporation, body of commissioners, or other body as aforesaid on or in relation to which any person shall be found to have voted or acted contrary to this enactment.

XLI. Where any part of a tramway is proposed to be made on tidal lands within the flow of ordinary spring tides, the promoters shall, on or before the first day of May in the year in which their application is begun, deposit with the secretary of the lord high admiral of the United Kingdom, or the commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral, a copy of so much of the plan and section aforesaid as relates to such tidal lands. The Board of Works, in the course of their public inquiry, shall inquire whether or not the last-mentioned requirement has been complied with, and shall take into consideration any communication that the lord high admiral or commissioners may think fit to make to the Board of Works respecting such tidal lands, and shall in their report respecting the undertaking refer to such communication, and state any recommendation that they may think fit to make in consequence thereof. The Preliminary Inquiries Act, 1851 (a), shall apply, mutatis mutandis, in respect of any application for an order in council under this act, as if the same were an application to Parliament for such a bill as is in that act mentioned.

XLII. Nothing in this act, or in any order under it, shall be deemed to authorize any lands to be taken for the purposes of the undertaking without the consent in writing of the owner thereof, except such lands as may be not more than thirty feet distant at any point on a line drawn horizontally from the centre of some post road, turnpike road, public highway, bridge, or quay.

XLIII. Nothing in this act, or in any order under it, shall be deemed to authorize to be taken for the purposes of the undertaking any mansion house, or house wholly built of stone or brick, with lime, or any of the outbuildings or offices thereof, or any part of any yard, haggard, garden, orchard, or plantation attached or belonging thereto, or any part of any deer park or other park or demesne, or planted or ornamental walk, drive, approach, or avenue, or of any ground ornamentally planted, or of any lawn or bleach green, without the consent in writing of the owner thereof respectively, although the same may lie within such limited distance as in the last preceding section is mentioned.

XLIV. Nothing in this act, or in any order under it, shall be deemed to empower the owners or promoters of a tramway to impede, at any time, the owners of any sewer, drain, main, or pipe from having access to the same for the purpose of cleansing, repairing, removing, adding to, or amending it, or to give the owners or promoters of a tramway any claim for compensation or damages for or by reason of any unavoidable injury to or for any temporary stoppage of the tramway that may be necessary for or in the execution of any such cleansing, repair, removal, addition, or amendment.

XLV. It shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant in council, by order, to make from time to time such general rules as may seem fit for the effectual execution of this act, and the regulation of the procedure on appeals, and on inquiries by the Board of Works, and generally of all proceedings under this act, and also for fixing the amount of any fees, and the allowance, taxation, and payment of any costs, charges, and expenses to be taken, allowed, and paid under this act, and for the remuneration of any county surveyor, engineer, surveyor, or other person employed in the execution of this act under the direction or authority of a grand jury or of the Board of Works or otherwise, and from time to time to revoke or amend any such rules; but no such rules shall have any effect until the expiration of one month after the same shall have been published in the Dublin Gazette, and laid before both houses of Parliament.

(a) Ante, 126.

APPENDIX.

XLVI. The acts specified in Schedule (C.) to this act shall, as far as circumstances will admit, and as far as those acts are not inconsistent with this act, apply to tramways under this act. For the purposes of those acts, a tramway under this act shall be deemed to be a railway (although the moving power is animal only), and the word "company" in any of those acts shall be deemed to mean the owners of a tramway under this act (whether a company or not), and the Board of Works shall be deemed to be in the place of the lords of the committee of her Majesty's Privy Council appointed for trade and foreign plantations, and with respect to the constabulary, the inspector-general of constabulary shall be deemed to be in the place of the secretary-at-war, in any of those acts mentioned: provided always, that with respect to tramways under this act, such rates of speed as the Board of Works may from time to time direct shall be deemed to be substituted in sections VI. and XI. of the act fourthly in the same schedule specified for the rates therein respectively mentioned or referred to.

General railways acts in Sched. (C.) to apply to tramways.

XLVII. Nothing in this act, or in any order under it, shall be deemed to exempt any tramway from the provisions of any future general act relating to tramways or tramway companies, or their accounts, or from any future revision or alteration, under authority of Parliament, of the maximum tolls or rates of charge authorized by this Act, or any order under it.

Tramways not exempted from future general acts.

XLVIII. Provided always, that if at any time it shall appear to the lord lieutenant in council to be expedient that any provision that may be hereafter adopted in the standing orders of either house of Parliament relative to private bills should be applied to tramways or proceedings under this act, it shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant in council, by order, to apply such provision accordingly in such manner as may seem fit, notwithstanding that the same may be inconsistent with any of the regulations contained in the schedules to this act, and from time to time to revoke or amend any such order; but no such order shall have any effect until the expiration of one month after the same shall have been published in the Dublin Gazette, and laid before both houses of Parliament.

Order in council may apply amended standing orders.

XLIX. In this act—

The expression "the lord lieutenant in council" means the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time being, by and with the advice of her Majesty's Privy Council in Ireland;

Interpretation of terms.

The word "county" includes any riding or division of a county for which riding or division separate assizes are held, but not a county of a city or county of a town;

The word "lands" includes lands, houses, buildings and hereditaments of any tenure;

The word "owner," used with reference to lands, means any person who, under the provisions of any order in council made under this act, is enabled to sell and convey lands to the owners of a tramway;

And the words "persons" and "person" shall (unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context) be construed to include a body corporate or a company.

L. This act shall extend to Ireland only, and may be cited as "The Tramways (Ireland) Act, 1860."

Extent of act. Short title.

SCHEDULE (A.)

PART I.

Notices by Advertisement.

1. Every advertisement shall state—

(1.) The objects of the intended application;

(2.) The description of the termini, with the names of the parishes, townlands, townships and extra-parochial places from, through or into which the tramway is intended to be made;

(3.) The times and places at which the deposit required by section II. of this act will be made;

(4.) The intention of the promoters (if they intend) to apply for powers for the compulsory purchase of lands.

2. The whole notice shall be included in one advertisement, which shall be headed with a short title descriptive of the undertaking.

3. The advertisement shall be inserted in three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of the county in which the lands to which the application relates are situate, or if there be none, then in a newspaper of some adjoining or neighbouring county. Where the application relates to lands situate in more than one county, the advertisement shall be inserted once in each of three successive weeks in a newspaper published at least twice a week in Dublin, and in a newspaper of the county in which is the principal office of the promoters, and in a newspaper of every county in which any new work is proposed to be executed, or in which any lands are situate in respect of which any new or further powers for the completion of works already authorized are intended to be applied for.

4. The advertisement shall in all cases be also inserted once in the Dublin Gazette.

PART II.

Form in which Plans, Books of Reference, Sections and Cross Sections, shall be prepared.

Plan.

1. Every plan required to be deposited shall be drawn to a scale of not less than four inches to a mile, and shall describe the line or situation of the whole of the work (no alternative line or work being in any case permitted), and the lands in or through which it is to be made, maintained, varied, extended or enlarged, or through which every communication to or from the work shall be made; and where it is the intention of the parties to apply for powers to make any lateral deviation from the line of the proposed work, the limits of such deviation shall be defined upon the plan, and all lands included within such limits shall be marked thereon; and unless the whole of such plan shall be upon a scale of not less than a quarter of an inch to every one hundred feet an enlarged plan shall be added of any building, yard, courtyard or land within the curtilage of any building, or of any ground cultivated as a garden either in the line of the proposed work or included within the limits of the said deviation, upon a scale of not less than a quarter of an inch to every one hundred feet.

2. The plan shall exhibit thereon the distances in miles and furlongs from one of the termini; and a memorandum of the radius of every curve, not exceeding one mile in length, shall be noted on the plan in furlongs and chains; and where tunnelling, as a substitute for open cutting, is intended, such tunnelling shall be marked by a dotted line on the plan.

3. If it be intended to divert, widen or narrow any turnpike road, public carriage road, navigable river, canal, tramway or railway, the course of such diversion, and the extent of such widening or narrowing, shall be marked on the plan.

Book of Reference.

4. The book of reference to every such plan shall contain the names of the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees, and occupiers of all lands in the line of the proposed work, or within the limits of deviation as defined upon the plan, and shall describe such lands.

Section.

5. The section shall be drawn to the same horizontal scale as the plan, and to a vertical scale of not less than one inch to one hundred feet, and shall show the surface of the ground marked on the plan, the intended level of the proposed work, the height of every embankment and the depth of every cutting, and a datum horizontal line, which shall be the same throughout the whole length of the work or any branch thereof respectively, and shall be referred to some fixed point (stated in writing on the section) near either of the termini.

6. The line of the tramway marked on the section shall correspond with the upper surface of the trams.

7. Distances on the datum line shall be marked in miles and furlongs to correspond with those on the plan; a vertical measure from the datum line to the line of the tramway shall be marked in feet and inches, or decimal parts of a foot, at each change of the gradient or inclination; and the proportion or rate of inclination between each such change shall also be marked.

8. Wherever the line of the tramway is intended to cross any turnpike road, public carriage road, navigable river, canal, tramway or railway, the height of the tramway over or depth under the surface thereof, and the height and span of every arch of all bridges and viaducts by which the tramway will be carried over the same, shall be marked in figures at every crossing thereof; and where the tramway will be carried across any such turnpike road, public carriage road, tramway or railway on the level thereof, such crossing shall be so described on the section, and it shall also be stated if such level will be unaltered.

9. If any alteration be intended in the water level of any canal, or in the level or rate of inclination of any turnpike road, public carriage road, tramway or railway, which will be crossed by the line of tramway, then the same shall be stated on the section, and each alteration shall be numbered; and cross sections, in reference to the said numbers, on a horizontal scale of not less than one inch to every three hundred and thirty feet, and on a vertical scale of not less than one inch to every forty feet, shall be added, which shall show the present surface of such canal, road, tramway or railway, and the intended surface thereof when altered; and the greatest of the present and intended rates of inclination of such road, tramway or railway shall also be marked in figures thereon; and where any public carriage road is crossed on the level, a cross section of such road shall also be added, and all such cross sections shall extend for two hundred yards on each side of the centre line of the tramway.

10. Wherever the extreme height of any embankment or the extreme depth of any cutting shall exceed five feet, the extreme height over or depth under the surface of the ground shall be marked in figures upon the section; and if any bridge or viaduct of more than three arches shall intervene in any embankment, or if any tunnel shall intervene in any cutting, the extreme height or depth shall be marked in figures on each of the parts into which such embankment or cutting shall be divided by such bridge, viaduct or tunnel.

11. Where tunnelling, as a substitute for open cutting, or a viaduct as a substitute for solid embankment, is intended, the same shall be marked on the section.

12. Every plan and section shall be signed by the engineer of the promoters.

PART III.

Notice to Owners, Lessees and Occupiers of Lands.

1. The notice required to be given by sect. III. of this act shall be given in respect of all lands intended to be taken, or which may be taken as being within the limits of deviation defined upon the plan, and shall be as nearly as may be in the form set forth in the Appendix marked (A.)

2. Such notice shall be given by being delivered personally to every person to whom the same is to be given, or by being left at his usual or last known place of abode, or, in his absence from the United Kingdom, with his agent, on or before the first day of May, or by being forwarded by post in a registered letter, addressed with a sufficient direction to his usual place of abode, and posted on or before the twenty-eighth day of April at the chief post office in Dublin, Belfast, Cork or Athlone, at such hours and according to such regulations as her Majesty's postmaster-general shall from time to time appoint for the posting and registration of such letters.

3. In all cases the written acknowledgment of the person applied to shall, in the absence of other proof, be sufficient evidence of a notice having been given, and in case of a notice having been forwarded by post in a registered letter, the production of the post-office receipt for such letter, duly stamped, in such form as the postmaster-general shall appoint, shall be sufficient evidence of the due delivery of such letter; provided it appear that the same was properly and sufficiently directed, and was not returned by the post office as undelivered.

4. Except in the case of delivery of letters by post, a notice served on a Sunday shall be of no effect, and a notice served after eight o'clock in the evening of any week day but Saturday shall be deemed to be served on the following day, and if served after that hour on a Saturday, shall be deemed to be served on the following Monday.

APPENDIX (A.) to PART III.

[Form referred to in Regulation 1.]

No. —

Sir,—We beg to inform you, that application is intended to be made to the lord lieutenant in council, through the [grand jury of the county of _____, or as the case may be,] at the ensuing [summer assizes, or as the case may be,] for an order in council [here insert a short statement of the objects of the proposed order], and that the property mentioned in the annexed schedule, or some part thereof, in which we understand you are interested as therein stated, will be required for the purposes of the said undertaking, according to the line thereof as at present laid out, or may be required to be taken under the usual powers of deviation to the extent of _____ yards on either side of the said line which will be applied for, and will be passed through in the manner mentioned in such schedule.

We also beg to inform you, that a plan and section of the said undertaking, with a book of reference thereto, have been or will be deposited with the [secretary of the grand jury of the said county, or as the case may be], on or before the _____ of _____, on which plan your property is designated by the numbers set forth in the annexed schedule.

As we are required to report whether you assent to or dissent from the proposed undertaking, or whether you are neuter in respect thereto, you will oblige us by writing your answer of assent, dissent or neutrality in the form left herewith, and returning the same to us with your signature on or before the _____ day of _____ next; and if there should be any error or misdescription in the annexed schedule, we shall feel obliged by your informing us thereof, at your earliest convenience, that we may correct the same without delay.

We are, Sir, your most obedient servants,

To

Note.—If the application be forwarded by post, the words "Parliamentary Notice" are to be printed or written on the cover.

APPENDIX.

SCHEDULE referred to in the foregoing Notice, describing the Property therein alluded to, and the Manner in which the Line of the proposed Work, as delineated upon the Plan and Section, will affect the same.

	Parish, Township, Townland, or Extra-parochial Place.	Number on Plan.	Description.	Owner.	Lessee.	Occupier.	Description of the Section of the Line deposited, showing the greatest Height of Embankment and Depth of Cutting where the Property is intersected by the centre Line of the proposed Work.
Property in the Line of the proposed Work, as at present laid out (including Property, any Part of which is within Eleven Yards, or thereabouts, of the centre Line of such proposed Work, as delineated upon the Plan).
Property within the Limits of the Deviation intended to be applied for.

Note.—Where the Property is not intersected by the centre Line, the description of the Section is not given in the last Column.

PART IV.

APPENDIX.

List of Owners, &c. assenting, dissenting and neuter.

Separate lists shall be made of the names of the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees and occupiers, to whom notice has been given, distinguishing those who have assented, dissented or are neuter in respect of such notice, or who have returned no answer thereto; and where no written acknowledgment has been returned to a notice sent by post, or where a notice by post has been returned as undelivered, the direction of the letter in which the notice was sent shall be inserted in the lists.

PART V.

Public Inquiry by Board of Works.

1. The Board of Works shall direct their attention especially to the following heads of inquiry, and shall require evidence from the promoters thereon; namely,—

- (1.) The financial arrangements made or proposed by the promoters:
- (2.) Where the promoters propose that a company should be incorporated by order in council for the execution of the undertaking, the number and amount of shares actually subscribed for or agreed to be taken, and the amount of share capital and of loans proposed to be authorized:
- (3.) The sufficiency of the estimate for the works:
- (4.) The merits, in an engineering point of view, of the proposed tramway; the character of the gradients and curves; the number and extent of the tunnels, if any; the crossings or other user of public roads on the level; and any peculiar engineering difficulties, with the modes proposed for overcoming them:
- (5.) The degree of favour or objection with which the project is regarded by the landowners and others in the neighbourhood of the proposed tramway.

2. The Board of Works shall hear in opposition to the undertaking any such owner, lessee, occupier, company, person or inhabitants as is or are entitled to be heard under the provisions of this act before a grand jury.

3. The Board of Works may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of the promoters, or of any company or person admitted to be heard in opposition to the undertaking, which the Board of Works may think necessary, and may examine any such person and his witnesses, and the witnesses for any such company and for the promoters, on oath or otherwise, and administer any oath or declaration necessary for that purpose.

SCHEDULE (B.)

Maximum Tolls and Rates of Charge, with Regulations.

PASSENGERS.

1. The maximum rates of charge to be made by the owners of the tramway for the conveyance of passengers thereon, including the tolls for the use of the tramway and of carriages, and cost of moving power, and every other expense connected with such conveyance, shall be—

For every passenger conveyed in a first-class carriage, the sum of twopence per mile:

For every passenger conveyed in a carriage of inferior class, the sum of one penny halfpenny per mile.

2. The foregoing restrictions shall not extend to any special trains that may be required to run on the tramway, but shall apply only to the express and ordinary trains appointed from time to time by the owners for the conveyance of passengers and goods on the tramway.

3. Every passenger travelling on the tramway may take with him his ordinary luggage, not exceeding one hundred pounds in weight for first-class passengers and sixty pounds in weight for passengers of inferior class, without any charge being made for the carriage thereof.

GOODS.

4. Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained respecting small parcels and single articles of great weight, the tolls to be taken by the owners of the tramway in respect of the tonnage of all articles conveyed in carriages thereon, or on any part thereof, shall be—

(Class 1.)

For dung, and all sorts of manure, chalk and all undressed materials for the repair of roads or highways:

For all coals, coke, culm, ironstone and iron ore:

For all charcoal, limestone, stones for building, pitching and paving, bricks, tiles, slates, clay and sand:

For all iron, lead, tin and tin plates (except nails, utensils or other articles of merchandise):

Not exceeding for the use of the tramway one penny per ton per mile:

H.

3 L

APPENDIX.

If conveyed in carriages provided by the owners of the tramway, an additional sum per ton per mile not exceeding one-eighth of a penny:
 If drawn or propelled by power provided by the owners of the tramway, a further sum per ton per mile not exceeding three-eighths of a penny.

(Class 2.)

For all other goods, wares, merchandise, articles, matters or things (except carriages, hereinafter otherwise provided for), not exceeding for the use of the tramway twopence per ton per mile:

If conveyed in carriages provided by the owners of the tramway, a further sum per ton per mile not exceeding one halfpenny:

If drawn or propelled by power provided by the owners of the tramway, a further sum per ton per mile not exceeding one halfpenny.

(Class 3.)

For every carriage, of whatever description (not being a carriage adapted and used for travelling on a tramway, and not weighing more than one ton), not exceeding for the use of the tramway sixpence per ton per mile, and the sum of twopence per mile for every additional quarter of a ton or fractional part of a quarter of a ton above one ton which any such carriage may weigh:

If any such carriage be conveyed on a truck or platform provided by the owners of the tramway, an additional sum per mile not exceeding twopence:

If drawn or propelled by power provided by the owners of the tramway, a further sum per mile not exceeding twopence.

ANIMALS.

5. The tolls to be taken by the owners of the tramway in respect of animals conveyed in carriages on the tramway, shall be,—

(Class 4.)

For every horse, mule, ass or other beast of draught or burden, ox, cow, bull or head of neat cattle, conveyed in or upon any such carriage, not exceeding for the use of the tramway threepence per mile:

If conveyed in or upon any carriage provided by the owners of the tramway, an additional sum per mile not exceeding one penny:

If such carriage be drawn or propelled by power provided by the owners of the tramway, an additional sum per mile not exceeding twopence.

(Class 5.)

For every calf, pig, sheep, lamb or other small animal conveyed in or upon any such carriage, not exceeding for the use of the tramway one penny per mile:

If conveyed in any carriage provided by the owners of the tramway, an additional sum per mile not exceeding one farthing:

If such carriage be drawn or propelled by power provided by the owners of the tramway, an additional sum per mile not exceeding twopence.

6. The maximum rate of charge to be made by the owners of the tramway for the conveyance of animals, articles, matters or things respectively included in the classes before mentioned, including the tolls for the use of the tramway, and of carriages, and cost of moving power, and every other expense connected with such conveyance, shall not exceed the amounts following:

For the matters mentioned in Class 1, not exceeding one penny halfpenny per ton per mile:

For the matters mentioned in Class 2, not exceeding threepence per ton per mile:

For any carriage mentioned in Class 3, not weighing more than one ton, not exceeding tenpence per mile, and if weighing more than one ton, not exceeding twopence per mile for every quarter of a ton or fractional part of a quarter of a ton additional:

For everything mentioned in Class 4, not exceeding sixpence per mile:

For everything mentioned in Class 5, not exceeding threepence farthing per mile:

Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the owners of the tramway to demand and take, in addition to the tolls and rates of charge hereinbefore authorized, a reasonable sum for the delivery and collection of goods and other services incidental to the business of a carrier where such services respectively shall be performed by the owners of the tramway otherwise than on the premises of the tramway.

7. The following provisions and regulations shall be applicable to the calculation of the tolls:

For passengers, animals or things conveyed on the tramway for a less distance than four miles the company may demand tolls as for four miles:

For a fraction of a mile beyond four miles, or beyond any greater number of miles, the company may demand tolls on merchandise for such fraction in proportion to the number of quarters of a mile contained therein, and if there be a fraction of a quarter of a mile, such fraction shall be deemed a quarter of a mile; and in respect of passengers every fraction of a mile beyond an integral number of miles shall be deemed a mile:

For a fraction of a ton the company may demand toll according to the number of quarters of a ton in the fraction, and if there be a fraction of a ton the fraction shall be deemed a quarter of a ton:

With respect to all things, except stone and timber, the weight shall be determined according to the usual avoirdupois weight:

With respect to stone and timber, fourteen cubic feet of stone, forty cubic feet of oak, mahogany, teak, beech or ash, and fifty cubic feet of any other timber, shall be deemed one ton weight, and so in proportion for any smaller quantity.

8. With respect to small parcels and single articles of great weight, the owners of the tramway may lawfully demand for the carriage thereof on the whole or any part of the line the tolls following:

SMALL PARCELS.

For any parcel not exceeding seven pounds in weight, sixpence:

For any parcel exceeding seven pounds in weight, but not exceeding fourteen pounds in weight, ninepence:

For any parcel exceeding fourteen pounds in weight, but not exceeding twenty-eight pounds in weight, one shilling:

For any parcel exceeding twenty-eight pounds in weight, but not exceeding fifty-six pounds in weight, one shilling and sixpence:

For parcels exceeding fifty-six pounds in weight, but not exceeding five hundred pounds in weight, such reasonable sum as the owners of the tramway may think fit:

Provided always, that articles sent in large aggregate quantities, although made up of separate parcels, such as bags of sugar, coffee, meal, and the like, shall not be deemed small parcels, but that term shall apply only to single parcels in separate packages.

SINGLE ARTICLES OF GREAT WEIGHT.

For the carriage of any one boiler or cylinder, or any one piece of machinery, or single piece of timber or stone, or other single article, the weight of which, including the carriage, shall exceed three tons, the owners of the tramway may demand such sum as they think fit.

9. Nothing herein contained shall be held to prevent the owners of the tramway from taking any increased charge, over and above the charges hereinbefore limited, for the conveyance of goods of any description, by agreement with the owners of and persons in charge of such goods, either in respect of the conveyance of such goods, except small parcels, by passenger or other trains, or by reason of any other special service performed by the owners of the tramway in relation to such goods.

24 & 25 VICT. CAP. 69.

An Act to provide for the Formation of Tramways on Turnpike and Statute Labour Roads in Scotland. [1st August, 1861.]

Whereas it would be of great public and local advantage if provision were made for the formation of tramways on turnpike and statute labour roads in Scotland: Be it enacted by (&c. &c.), as follows :

Short title.

Interpretation of terms.

1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Tramways (Scotland) Act, 1861."
2. The following words in this act shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them :

The word "trustees" shall mean the trustees for the time being appointed and acting under any local turnpike or statute labour road act in Scotland :

The word "clerk" shall mean the clerk for the time being to such trustees :

The word "tramways" shall mean and include any tramroad or tramway, whether temporary or permanent, formed of iron, stone or other material, and laid down level with the surface on any turnpike or statute labour road under the provisions of this act.

With respect to the formation of tramways on turnpike roads :

Special meeting of trustees may be called to consider the expediency of laying down tramways.

3. Any two trustees may, by a requisition under their hands, require the clerk to call a special meeting of the trustees for any day and hour specified in such requisition, not being earlier than twenty-one days after the date thereof, for the purpose of considering the expediency of forming tramways on the roads under their management, or any part thereof; and within three days after the receipt of such requisition the clerk shall call such special meeting, to be held at the time specified therein, and at the place where the meetings of the trustees are usually held; and notice of such meeting, and of the special purpose thereof, shall be given by advertisement inserted once in each of two successive weeks in a newspaper published in the county in which such roads are situated, or if there be no newspaper published therein, in a newspaper published in an adjoining county.

Trustees may remit to their surveyor or to an engineer to prepare plans of tramways and estimate of expense.

4. If the trustees present at such special meeting shall resolve that it is expedient to form tramways on the roads under their management, or any part thereof, they may remit to their surveyor, or to any engineer to be named by them, to prepare plans of the proposed tramways, showing the extent thereof, and the mode in which the same are to be formed, and the portions of the roads to be occupied thereby, with an estimate of the expense of such tramways; and such plans and estimate of expense shall be lodged with the clerk, for the inspection of the trustees, at least one month previous to the general or special meeting before which the same are to be laid.

Plans and estimate to be laid before general or special meeting of trustees.

5. The plans and estimate of expense prepared by such surveyor or engineer shall be laid before any general meeting of the trustees convened under the provisions of the General Turnpike Road Act for Scotland, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 43, or of any local act under which the trustees are appointed and acting, or before a special meeting of the trustees to be called in the manner provided by the said General Turnpike Road Act; and the trustees present at such general or special meeting may approve or disapprove of such plans and estimate of expense, or may direct such alterations to be made thereon as they may deem necessary, and may resolve to proceed or not to proceed with the formation of the tramways as they may think fit.

Tramways may be laid down according to plans.

6. On such plans and estimate being finally approved by the trustees at any general or special meeting, as the case may be, it shall be lawful for the trustees to form and lay down the tramways in the manner described on such plans, and on the roads included therein, or on the sides of such roads.

Tramways to form part of roads.

7. The tramways shall be laid down on the surface of the roads or on the sides thereof, and shall form part of the roads, and, subject to the provisions of this act, all the enactments of the said General Turnpike Road Act, and of any local act relating to the road on which the tramways are laid down, shall be applicable to the tramways, in the same manner and to the same effect as such enactments are applicable to such roads.

Expense of forming and maintaining tramways, how to be defrayed.

8. The expense of forming and laying down the tramways, and incidental thereto, shall be defrayed out of the tolls and revenues of the roads under the management of the trustees, or out of money to be borrowed on the credit of such tolls and revenues; and it shall be lawful for the trustees to borrow money for the purpose of defraying such expense, and to grant assignments of such tolls and revenues in security of the payment of the money so to be borrowed, in the manner provided by the said General Turnpike Road Act, any provision or restriction with respect to the power of borrowing money contained in any local act relating to such roads to the contrary notwithstanding; and the expense of maintaining, managing, and repairing the tramways shall be defrayed by the trustees out of the tolls and revenues of such roads: provided that it shall not be lawful for the trustees to apply any part of such tolls and revenues in defraying the expense of forming the tramways, or to borrow money for that purpose on the security of such tolls and revenues, without the consent in writing of the persons entitled to two-thirds of the money borrowed and remaining due on the credit of such tolls and revenues.

9. It shall be lawful for the trustees, with the powers and authorities and subject to the provisions and exemptions contained in the said General Turnpike Road Act, and in any local act relating to the roads on which the tramways are formed, to demand and take or cause to be demanded and taken, for and in respect of all carts, waggons and carriages using or passing over the tramways, the same tolls as are levied for the time being under the provisions of such acts for and in respect of carts, waggons and carriages using or passing over such roads; and the tolls levied and received on and in respect of the tramways shall be held and applied by the trustees for the same uses and purposes as the toll duties levied and received on and in respect of such roads: provided always, that any cart, waggon, or carriage using or passing over the tramways for any distance exceeding one hundred yards shall be liable to the same toll as if such cart, waggon, or carriage had passed through a toll gate on such roads; and the tolls payable for and in respect of carts, waggons, and carriages so using or passing over the tramways, and not passing through a toll gate, may be sued for and recovered in the same manner as toll duties may be sued for and recovered under the provisions of the said General Turnpike Road Act, which are hereby made applicable to the tolls payable for and in respect of the use of the tramways: provided also, that any cart, waggon, or carriage using or passing over the tramways or any part thereof, and thereafter passing through a toll gate on the road on which the tramways are formed, shall only be liable to pay a single toll, in the same manner as if such cart, waggon, or carriage had used or passed over such road.

10. It shall be lawful for the trustees to compound and agree, for any term not exceeding one year at any one time, with any person or company using the tramways or any part thereof exceeding one hundred yards in length, for the passing of his or their carts waggons, or carriages over the tramways: provided that such compositions and agreements shall be subject to all the provisions with respect to compositions for tolls contained in the fifty-third section of the said General Turnpike Road Act.

11. The trustees may make such regulations for and with respect to the use of the tramways as they think fit; and such regulations shall be published by printed copies thereof being affixed on boards to be set up at each end of the tramways or at the toll gates nearest thereto; and every person who commits any breach or contravention of such regulations shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for each offence; and such penalties may be sued for, imposed, and recovered in the manner provided by the said General Turnpike Road Act.

With respect to the formation of tramways on statute labour roads:

12. In the event of any application being made to the trustees of any statute labour road by any person or company desiring to form tramways on such road, the trustees may, at any general or special meeting convened under the provisions of the General Statute Labour Road Act for Scotland, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 41, or of any local act under which the trustees are appointed and acting, authorize such person or company to form the tramways; and on such authority being granted it shall be lawful for such person or company, at his or their own expense, to form and lay down the tramways to such extent, in such manner and on such terms as shall be agreed upon and approved by the trustees or their surveyor.

13. The tramways shall be laid down on the surface of the roads or on the sides thereof, and shall form part of the roads, and may be used by all carts, waggons and carriages passing over the roads; and, subject to the provisions of this act, all the enactments of the said General Statute Labour Road Act and of any local act relating to the roads on which the tramways are laid down shall be applicable to the tramways, in the same manner and to the same effect as such enactments are applicable to such roads; and the expense of maintaining, managing and repairing the tramways shall be defrayed by the trustees out of the funds and revenues under their management, or by the person or company by whom the same were laid down, or jointly by the trustees and such person or company, as may be agreed upon.

14. The trustees may make such regulations for and with respect to the use of the tramways as they think fit; and before taking effect such regulations shall be published by printed copies thereof being affixed on boards to be set up at each end of the tramways; and every person who commits any breach or contravention of such regulations shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for each offence; and such penalties may be sued for, imposed and recovered in the manner provided by the said General Statute Labour Road Act.

15. It shall be lawful for the person or company by whom the tramways on any statute labour road were laid down, or his or their heirs or successors, and they are hereby required, to take up and remove the same at such time as shall have been agreed on with the trustees: provided that on the tramways being so removed the road on which the same were laid down shall, to the satisfaction of the trustees or their surveyor, be restored by such person or company, or his or their heirs or successors, at his or their own expense, to the same state and condition, as nearly as may be, in which such road was at the time of laying down the tramways.

APPENDIX.

Tolls for use of tramways.

Trustees may compound for tolls on tramways.

Trustees may make regulations for use of tramways.

Tramways may be formed on statute labour roads.

Tramways to form part of roads.

Trustees may make regulations for use of tramways.

Tramways may be removed.

APPENDIX.

Tramways not to be laid down in burghs without consent of magistrates and council.

Tramways to be kept in constant good order, and trustees may acquire right to them when proposed to be removed.

16. Nothing in this act contained shall authorize the trustees to form or lay down tramways within the municipal or parliamentary boundaries of any royal or parliamentary burgh, without the consent in writing of the magistrates and council of such burgh first had and obtained.

17. The person or company by whom the tramways on any statute labour road shall have been laid down, and their heirs and successors, shall maintain such tramways, while unremoved, in constant good order for traffic at the sight and to the satisfaction of the surveyor; and when they shall propose to remove the same as aforesaid, the trustees shall be entitled to acquire all right therein belonging to such person or company, or their heirs and successors, on payment to them of such sum as the same may be valued at by valuers agreed on by the trustees and such person or company, or their heirs and successors, or, failing such agreement, by any valuator or valuers appointed by the sheriff of the county on the application of either party.

24 & 25 VICT. CAP. 102.

An Act to amend the Tramways (Ireland) Act, 1860. [6th August, 1861.]

23 & 24 Vict.
c. 152 (a).

Act recited and this act to be read together.

One approval by grand jury to be sufficient.

Applications at spring or summer assizes.

Notices to be given for spring assizes.

Approval of grand jury may be traversed.

Whereas an act was passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled "An Act to facilitate internal Communication (b) by means of Tramroads or Tramways:" And whereas some of the provisions of the said act have been found to cause unnecessary expense and delay, and it is expedient to amend the same: Be it therefore enacted by (&c. &c.), as follows; (that is to say,)

1. The said recited act shall be continued and be in full force except when the same shall be altered or amended by or be inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and the recited act and this act shall be read together as one act.

2. It shall not be necessary for the grand jury in future to pronounce a provisional approval of the undertaking, but the grand jury in proceeding under the fifth section of the said recited act shall definitively approve or disapprove of the said undertaking at the first assizes at which the same shall be brought before them, and it shall not be necessary to obtain any further or other approval from the grand jury at any subsequent assizes.

3. The application to the grand jury for their approval may be made either at the spring or summer assizes.

4. In case the application is made at the spring assizes, the advertisements required by the first section of the said act shall be published in the months of November or December or either of them immediately preceding, and the deposits required by the second and fourth sections of the said act shall be made on or before the first and twelfth day of December respectively, and the notices required by the third section shall be given on or before the second day of December.

5. Any person entitled to appear on the inquiry before the grand jury may, in the case of their approval of the undertaking, traverse such approval, subject to and under the following regulations:

Such traverse shall be entered with the clerk of the crown not later than twelve o'clock on the day following the approval of the grand jury;

It shall be on either of the following grounds:—

First. That the preliminaries required by law for the application to the grand jury have not been complied with;

Second. That the construction of the undertaking according to the plan approved of by the grand jury would not be beneficial to the public;

In case of a traverse on the first ground, same shall be disposed of by the judges of assize, or one of them, after hearing such evidence as may be adduced;

In case of a traverse on the second ground, same shall be tried in all respects as issues joined in the superior courts of common law are or may be triable by law at such assizes;

The judges of assize, or one of them, may, if it shall appear fit, direct such traverse to be tried by a special jury;

In case more persons than one shall enter a traverse on the second ground, there shall be one trial of all such traverses, and the judge shall make such order as may seem fit for the conducting of such trial, and the appearance and intervention of the several traversers thereat;

Every traverse under this act shall be determined or tried at the same assizes at which it is entered, and in case the judge shall rule or the jury find in favour of such traverse, as the case may be, the approval of the grand jury shall be void and of no effect;

(a) Ante, p. 149.

(b) Sic.

APPENDIX.

Every traverse on the first ground shall be confined to the specific points mentioned by the traverser in his memorial lodged with the secretary of the grand jury, and the particular points of non-compliance complained of shall be also stated in such traverse.

6. The inquiry by the Board of Works directed by the ninth section of the said act shall take place before any application is made to the grand jury, in order that their report shall be submitted to the grand jury at the first application, and the Board of Works shall institute such inquiry upon the request of the promoters, and upon having deposited with them a reasonable sum, not in any case exceeding one hundred pounds, to cover the expenses of such inquiry.

Inquiry by Board of Works in the first instance.

7. The inquiry to be made by the Board of Works, and the report to be made thereon, shall extend only to the merits of the undertaking in an engineering point of view, and to any modification of the same in that respect which may be advantageously made.

To be confined to engineering questions.

8. Instead of constituting a new company under the fifteenth section of the said act, the lord lieutenant in council may, if he shall so think fit, and if so desired by the promoters, empower any existing company incorporated by act of Parliament, or charter, or constituted by any statute regulating joint stock companies, to execute such undertaking, if it shall appear that such company have power to provide the necessary capital and to apply the same to the purposes of such undertaking; but no such order shall be deemed or taken to authorize or sanction the employment by the said company for the purposes of such undertaking or of the application for the same of any funds which independently of such order they would not have power so to apply.

Existing company may be empowered to execute work.

9. In any case in which the undertaking shall be approved of by the grand jury, and no petition of appeal shall be presented against such approval to the lord lieutenant in council by any of the parties entitled under such act to appeal, the order in council shall immediately take effect without any act of Parliament confirming the same; but in any case in which such petition of appeal is presented before the order in council is made, such order shall have no effect until confirmed by act of Parliament, even although no person shall appear to sustain such appeal; and when any order shall be made after the presentation of such appeal the fact of such appeal having been presented shall be stated in such order.

Orders in council valid without confirmation by Parliament.

10. In any case in which persons constructing any tramway shall only seek under the provisions of the said act power to cross a highway, it shall be lawful for the grand jury, with the previous approbation of the presentment sessions held for the barony in which such proposed crossing is situate, to give permission for such crossing to be made, and thereupon and immediately upon such permission being given, and without any other approval, it shall be lawful for the persons constructing such tramway to lay down the same across any public road or roads for which permission shall have been so given; and it shall be lawful for the grand jury to annex to such permission any conditions or stipulations which to them shall seem fit; and in case such permission shall be used by the promoters, they shall be bound by such conditions and stipulations as if the same had been inserted in a special act of Parliament authorizing such crossing, and all persons interested in same may have the same rights and remedies; and it shall be further lawful for the grand jury, if they shall so think fit, before such permission is acted on, to require persons of sufficient substance, to be approved of as they may direct, to enter into a bond to the secretary of the grand jury, county treasurer or such other person as they may appoint, in such sum as they may name, conditioned for the observance of all such conditions and stipulations.

Grand jury may give permission for tramway to cross a highway.

11. This act may be cited as "The Tramways (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1861."

25 & 26 VICT. CAP. 89.

An Act for the Incorporation, Regulation and Winding-up of Trading Companies and other Associations. [7th August, 1862.]

Whereas it is expedient that the laws relating to the incorporation, regulation and winding-up of trading companies and other associations should be consolidated and amended: Be it therefore enacted by (&c. &c.), as follows:

Preliminary.

1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Companies Act, 1862."

Short title.

2. This act, with the exception of such temporary enactment as is hereinafter declared to come into operation immediately, shall not come into operation until the 2nd day of November, 1862, and the time at which it so comes into operation is hereinafter referred to as the commencement of this act.

Commencement of act.

3. For the purposes of this act a company that carries on the business of insurance in common with any other business or businesses shall be deemed to be an insurance company.

Definition of insurance company.

APPENDIX.

Prohibition of partnerships exceeding certain number.

4. No company, association or partnership consisting of more than ten persons shall be formed, after the commencement of this act, for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking, unless it is registered as a company under this act, or is formed in pursuance of some other act of Parliament, or of letters patent; and no company, association or partnership consisting of more than twenty persons shall be formed, after the commencement of this act, for the purpose of carrying on any other business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, unless it is registered as a company under this act, or is formed in pursuance of some other act of Parliament, or of letters patent, or is a company engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the stannaries.

Division of act.

5. This act is divided into Nine Parts, relating to the following subject matters:

The First Part,—to the constitution and incorporation of companies and associations under this act:

The Second Part,—to the distribution of the capital and liability of members of companies and associations under this act:

The Third Part,—to the management and administration of companies and associations under this act:

The Fourth Part,—to the winding-up of companies and associations under this act:

The Fifth Part,—to the registration office:

The Sixth Part,—to application of this act to companies registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts:

The Seventh Part,—to companies authorized to register under this act:

The Eighth Part,—to application of this act to unregistered companies:

The Ninth Part,—to repeal of acts, and temporary provisions.

PART I.

CONSTITUTION AND INCORPORATION OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS UNDER THIS ACT.

Memorandum of Association.

Mode of forming company.

6. Any seven or more persons associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association, and otherwise complying with the requisitions of this act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company, with or without limited liability.

Mode of limiting liability of members.

7. The liability of the members of a company formed under this act may, according to the memorandum of association, be limited either to the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares respectively held by them, or to such amount as the members may respectively undertake by the memorandum of association to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up.

Memorandum of association of a company limited by shares.

8. Where a company is formed on the principle of having the liability of its members limited to the amount unpaid on their shares, hereinafter referred to as a company limited by shares, the memorandum of association shall contain the following things; (that is to say,)

- (1.) The name of the proposed company, with the addition of the word "limited" as the last word in such name:
- (2.) The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is proposed to be situate:
- (3.) The objects for which the proposed company is to be established:
- (4.) A declaration that the liability of the members is limited:
- (5.) The amount of capital with which the company proposes to be registered divided into shares of a certain fixed amount:

Subject to the following regulations:

- (1.) That no subscriber shall take less than one share:
- (2.) That each subscriber of the memorandum of association shall write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes.

Memorandum of association of a company limited by guarantee.

9. Where a company is formed on the principle of having the liability of its members limited to such amount as the members respectively undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of the same being wound up, hereinafter referred to as a company limited by guarantee, the memorandum of association shall contain the following things; (that is to say,)

- (1.) The name of the proposed company, with the addition of the word "limited" as the last word in such name:
- (2.) The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is proposed to be situate:
- (3.) The objects for which the proposed company is to be established:
- (4.) A declaration that each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company, in the event of the same being wound up during the time that he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before the time at which he ceases to be a member, and of the costs, charges and expenses of winding up the company, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding a specified amount.

10. Where a company is formed on the principle of having no limit placed on the liability of its members, hereinafter referred to as an unlimited company, the memorandum of association shall contain the following things; (that is to say,)

APPENDIX.
Part I.

Memorandum of association of an unlimited company.

(1.) The name of the proposed company:

(2.) The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is proposed to be situate:

(3.) The objects for which the proposed company is to be established.

11. The memorandum of association shall bear the same stamp as if it were a deed, and shall be signed by each subscriber in the presence of, and be attested by, one witness at the least, and that attestation shall be a sufficient attestation in Scotland as well as in England and Ireland: it shall, when registered, bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if each member had subscribed his name and affixed his seal thereto, and there were in the memorandum contained, on the part of himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, a covenant to observe all the conditions of such memorandum, subject to the provisions of this act.

Stamp, signature, and effect of memorandum of association.

12. Any company limited by shares may so far modify the conditions contained in its memorandum of association, if authorized to do so by its regulations as originally framed, or as altered by special resolution in manner hereinafter mentioned, as to increase its capital, by the issue of new shares of such amount as it thinks expedient, or to consolidate and divide its capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares, or to convert its paid-up shares into stock, but save as aforesaid, and save as is hereinafter provided in the case of a change of name, no alteration shall be made by any company in the conditions contained in its memorandum of association.

Power of certain companies to alter memorandum of association.

13. Any company under this act, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company passed in manner hereinafter mentioned, and with the approval of the Board of Trade testified in writing under the hand of one of its secretaries or assistant secretaries, may change its name, and upon such change being made the registrar shall enter the new name on the register in the place of the former name, and shall issue a certificate of incorporation altered to meet the circumstances of the case; but no such alteration of name shall affect any rights or obligations of the company, or render defective any legal proceedings instituted or to be instituted by or against the company, and any legal proceedings may be continued or commenced against the company by its new name that might have been continued or commenced against the company by its former name.

Power of companies to change name (a).

Articles of Association.

14. The memorandum of association may, in the case of a company limited by shares, and shall, in the case of a company limited by guarantee or unlimited, be accompanied, when registered, by articles of association signed by the subscribers to the memorandum of association, and prescribing such regulations for the company as the subscribers to the memorandum of association deem expedient: the articles shall be expressed in separate paragraphs, numbered arithmetically: they may adopt all or any of the provisions contained in the table marked A. in the first schedule hereto: they shall, in the case of a company, whether limited by guarantee or unlimited, that has a capital divided into shares, state the amount of capital with which the company proposes to be registered; and in the case of a company, whether limited by guarantee or unlimited, that has not a capital divided into shares, state the number of members with which the company proposes to be registered, for the purpose of enabling the registrar to determine the fees payable on registration: in a company limited by guarantee or unlimited, and having a capital divided into shares, each subscriber shall take one share at the least, and shall write opposite to his name in the memorandum of association the number of shares he takes.

Regulations to be prescribed by articles of association.

15. In the case of a company limited by shares, if the memorandum of association is not accompanied by articles of association, or in so far as the articles do not exclude or modify the regulations contained in the table marked A. in the first schedule hereto, the last-mentioned regulations shall, so far as the same are applicable, be deemed to be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if they had been inserted in articles of association, and the articles had been duly registered.

Application of Table A.

16. The articles of association shall be printed, they shall bear the same stamp as if they were contained in a deed, and shall be signed by each subscriber in the presence of, and be attested by, one witness at the least, and such attestation shall be a sufficient attestation in Scotland as well as in England and Ireland; when registered, they shall bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if each member had subscribed his name and affixed his seal thereto, and there were in such articles contained a covenant on the part of himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, to conform to Stamp, signature, and effect of articles of association.

(a) See also 26 & 27 Vict. c. 118, s. 36, et seq., post.

APPENDIX.

Part I.

Registration of memorandum of association and articles of association with fees as in Table B.

Effect of registration.

Copies of memorandum and articles to be given to members.

Prohibition against identity of names in companies.

Prohibition against certain companies holding land.

all the regulations contained in such articles, subject to the provisions of this act; and all monies payable by any member to the company, in pursuance of the conditions and regulations of the company, or any of such conditions or regulations, shall be deemed to be a debt due from such member to the company, and in England and Ireland to be in the nature of a specialty debt.

General Provisions.

17. The memorandum of association and the articles of association, if any, shall be delivered to the registrar of joint stock companies hereinafter mentioned, who shall retain and register the same: there shall be paid to the registrar by a company having a capital divided into shares, in respect of the several matters mentioned in the table marked B. in the first schedule hereto, the several fees therein specified, or such smaller fees as the Board of Trade may from time to time direct; and by a company not having a capital divided into shares, in respect of the several matters mentioned in the table marked C. in the first schedule hereto, the several fees therein specified, or such smaller fees as the Board of Trade may from time to time direct: all fees paid to the said registrar in pursuance of this act shall be paid into the receipt of her Majesty's exchequer, and be carried to the account of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

18. Upon the registration of the memorandum of association, and of the articles of association in cases where articles of association are required by this act or by the desire of the parties to be registered, the registrar shall certify under his hand that the company is incorporated, and in the case of a limited company that the company is limited: the subscribers of the memorandum of association, together with such other persons as may from time to time become members of the company, shall thereupon be a body corporate by the name contained in the memorandum of association, capable forthwith of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company, and having perpetual succession and a common seal, with power to hold lands, but with such liability on the part of the members to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of the same being wound up as is hereinafter mentioned: a certificate of the incorporation of any company given by the registrar shall be conclusive evidence that all the requisitions of this act in respect of registration have been complied with.

19. A copy of the memorandum of association, having annexed thereto the articles of association, if any, shall be forwarded to every member, at his request, on payment of the sum of one shilling or such less sum as may be prescribed by the company for each copy; and if any company makes default in forwarding a copy of the memorandum of association and articles of association, if any, to a member, in pursuance of this section, the company so making default shall for each offence incur a penalty not exceeding one pound.

20. No company shall be registered under a name identical with that by which a subsisting company is already registered, or so nearly resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive, except in a case where such subsisting company is in the course of being dissolved, and testifies its consent in such manner as the registrar requires; and if any company, through inadvertence or otherwise, is, without such consent as aforesaid, registered by a name identical with that by which a subsisting company is registered, or so nearly resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive, such first-mentioned company may, with the sanction of the registrar, change its name, and upon such change being made, the registrar shall enter the new name on the register in the place of the former name, and shall issue a certificate of incorporation altered to meet the circumstances of the case; but no such alteration of name shall affect any rights or obligations of the company, or render defective any legal proceedings instituted or to be instituted by or against the company, and any legal proceedings may be continued or commenced against the company by its new name that might have been continued or commenced against the company by its former name.

21. No company formed for the purpose of promoting art, science, religion, charity or any other like object, not involving the acquisition of gain by the company or by the individual members thereof, shall, without the sanction of the Board of Trade, hold more than two acres of land; but the Board of Trade may, by licence under the hand of one of their principal secretaries or assistant secretaries, empower any such company to hold lands in such quantity and subject to such conditions as they think fit.

PART II.

DISTRIBUTION OF CAPITAL AND LIABILITY OF MEMBERS OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS UNDER THIS ACT.

Distribution of Capital.

Nature of interest in company.

22. The shares or other interest of any member in a company under this act shall be personal estate, capable of being transferred in manner provided by the regulations of the company, and shall not be of the nature of real estate, and each share shall, in the case

APPENDIX.

Part II.

Definition of

of a company having a capital divided into shares, be distinguished by its appropriate number.

23. The subscribers of the memorandum of association of any company under this act shall be deemed to have agreed to become members of the company whose memorandum they have subscribed, and upon the registration of the company shall be entered as members on the register of members hereinafter mentioned; and every other person who has agreed to become a member of a company under this act, and whose name is entered on the register of members, shall be deemed to be a member of the company.

24. Any transfer of the share or other interest of a deceased member of a company under this act, made by his personal representative, shall, notwithstanding such personal representative may not himself be a member, be of the same validity as if he had been a member at the time of the execution of the instrument of transfer.

Transfer by personal representative.

25. Every company under this act shall cause to be kept in one or more books a register of its members, and there shall be entered therein the following particulars:

Register of members.

(1.) The names and addresses, and the occupations, if any, of the members of the company, with the addition, in the case of a company having a capital divided into shares, of a statement of the shares held by each member, distinguishing each share by its number: and of the amount paid or agreed to be considered as paid on the shares of each member:

(2.) The date at which the name of any person was entered in the register as a member:

(3.) The date at which any person ceased to be a member:

And any company acting in contravention of this section shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which its default in complying with the provisions of this section continues, and every director or manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such contravention shall incur the like penalty.

26. Every company under this act, and having a capital divided into shares, shall make, once at least in every year, a list of all persons who, on the fourteenth day succeeding the day on which the ordinary general meeting, or if there is more than one ordinary meeting in each year, the first of such ordinary general meetings is held, are members of the company; and such list shall state the names, addresses and occupations of all the members therein mentioned, and the number of shares held by each of them, and shall contain a summary specifying the following particulars:

Annual list of members.

(1.) The amount of the capital of the company, and the number of shares into which it is divided:

(2.) The number of shares taken from the commencement of the company up to the date of the summary:

(3.) The amount of calls made on each share:

(4.) The total amount of calls received:

(5.) The total amount of calls unpaid:

(6.) The total amount of shares forfeited:

(7.) The names, addresses and occupations of the persons who have ceased to be members since the last list was made, and the number of shares held by each of them.

The above list and summary shall be contained in a separate part of the register, and shall be completed within seven days after such fourteenth day as is mentioned in this section, and a copy shall forthwith be forwarded to the registrar of joint stock companies.

27. If any company under this act, and having a capital divided into shares, makes default in complying with the provisions of this act with respect to forwarding such list of members or summary as is hereinbefore mentioned to the registrar, such company shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such default continues, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such default shall incur the like penalty.

Penalty on company, &c., not keeping a proper register.

28. Every company under this act, having a capital divided into shares, that has consolidated and divided its capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares, or converted any portion of its capital into stock, shall give notice to the registrar of joint stock companies of such consolidation, division or conversion, specifying the shares so consolidated, divided or converted.

Company to give notice of consolidation or of conversion of capital into stock.

29. Where any company under this act, and having a capital divided into shares, has converted any portion of its capital into stock, and given notice of such conversion to the registrar, all the provisions of this act which are applicable to shares only shall cease as to so much of the capital as is converted into stock; and the register of members hereby required to be kept by the company, and the list of members to be forwarded to the registrar, shall show the amount of stock held by each member in the list instead of the amount of shares and the particulars relating to shares hereinbefore required.

Effect of conversion of shares into stock.

30. No notice of any trust, expressed, implied or constructive, shall be entered on the register, or be receivable by the registrar, in the case of companies under this act and registered in England or Ireland.

Entry of trusts on register.

31. A certificate, under the common seal of the company, specifying any share or Certificate of shares or stock.

APPENDIX.

Part II.

Inspection of register.

shares or stock held by any member of a company, shall be prima facie evidence of the title of the member to the share or shares or stock therein specified.

32. The register of members, commencing from the date of the registration of the company, shall be kept at the registered office of the company hereinafter mentioned: except when closed as hereinafter mentioned, it shall during business hours, but subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company in general meeting may impose, so that not less than two hours in each day be appointed for inspection, be open to the inspection of any member gratis, and to the inspection of any other person on the payment of one shilling, or such less sum as the company may prescribe, for each inspection; and every such member or other person may require a copy of such register, or of any part thereof, or of such list or summary of members as is hereinbefore mentioned, on payment of sixpence for every hundred words required to be copied: if such inspection or copy is refused, the company shall incur for each refusal a penalty not exceeding two pounds, and a further penalty not exceeding two pounds for every day during which such refusal continues, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly authorize or permit such refusal shall incur the like penalty; and in addition to the above penalty, as respects companies registered in England and Ireland, any judge sitting in chambers, or the vice-warden of the stannaries, in the case of companies subject to his jurisdiction, may by order compel an immediate inspection of the register.

Power to close register.

33. Any company under this act may, upon giving notice by advertisement in some newspaper circulating in the district in which the registered office of the company is situated, close the register of members for any time or times not exceeding in the whole thirty days in each year.

Notice of increase of capital and of members to be given to registrar.

34. Where a company has a capital divided into shares, whether such shares may or may not have been converted into stock, notice of any increase in such capital beyond the registered capital, and where a company has not a capital divided into shares, notice of any increase in the number of members beyond the registered number, shall be given to the registrar in the case of an increase of capital, within fifteen days from the date of the passing of the resolution by which such increase has been authorized, and in the case of an increase of members within fifteen days from the time at which such increase of members has been resolved on or has taken place, and the registrar shall forthwith record the amount of such increase of capital or members: if such notice is not given within the period aforesaid the company in default shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such neglect to give notice continues, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such default shall incur the like penalty.

Remedy for improper entry or omission of entry in register.

35. If the name of any person is, without sufficient cause, entered in or omitted from the register of members of any company under this act, or if default is made or unnecessary delay takes place in entering on the register the fact of any person having ceased to be a member of the company, the person or member aggrieved, or any member of the company, or the company itself, may, as respects companies registered in England or Ireland, by motion in any of her Majesty's superior courts of law or equity, or by application to a judge sitting in chambers, or to the vice-warden of the stannaries in the case of companies subject to his jurisdiction, and as respects companies registered in Scotland by summary petition to the court of session, or in such other manner as the said courts may direct, apply for an order of the court that the register may be rectified; and the court may either refuse such application, with or without costs, to be paid by the applicant, or it may, if satisfied of the justice of the case, make an order for the rectification of the register, and may direct the company to pay all the costs of such motion, application or petition, and any damages the party aggrieved may have sustained; the court may in any proceeding under this section decide on any question relating to the title of any person who is a party to such proceeding, to have his name entered in or omitted from the register, whether such question arises between two or more members or alleged members, or between any members or alleged members and the company, and generally the court may in any such proceeding decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide for the rectification of the register: provided that the court, if a court of common law, may direct an issue to be tried, in which any question of law may be raised, and a writ of error or appeal, in the manner directed by "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1854," shall lie.

Notice to registrar of rectification of register.

36. Whenever any order has been made rectifying the register, in the case of a company hereby required to send a list of its members to the registrar, the court shall, by its order, direct that due notice of such rectification be given to the registrar.

Register to be evidence.

37. The register of members shall be prima facie evidence of any matters by this act directed or authorized to be inserted therein.

Liability of Members.

Liability of present and past members of company.

38. In the event of a company formed under this act being wound up, every present and past member of such company shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company, and the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up, and for the payment of such sums as may be required for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, with the qualifications following; (that is to say,)

- (1.) No past member shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company if he has ceased to be a member for a period of one year or upwards prior to the commencement of the winding up:
- (2.) No past member shall be liable to contribute in respect of any debt or liability of the company contracted after the time at which he ceased to be a member:
- (3.) No past member shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company unless it appears to the court that the existing members are unable to satisfy the contributions required to be made by them in pursuance of this act:
- (4.) In the case of a company limited by shares, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is liable as a present or past member:
- (5.) In the case of a company limited by guarantee, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount of the undertaking entered into on his behalf by the memorandum of association:
- (6.) Nothing in this act contained shall invalidate any provision contained in any policy of insurance or other contract whereby the liability of individual members upon any such policy or contract is restricted, or whereby the funds of the company are alone made liable in respect of such policy or contract:
- (7.) No sum due to any member of a company, in his character of a member, by way of dividends, profits or otherwise, shall be deemed to be a debt of the company payable to such member in a case of competition between himself and any other creditor not being a member of the company; but any such sum may be taken into account, for the purposes of the final adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves.

PART III.

MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS UNDER THIS ACT.

Provisions for Protection of Creditors.

39. Every company under this Act shall have a registered office to which all communications and notices may be addressed; if any company under this act carries on business without having such an office, it shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which business is so carried on. Registered office of company.

40. Notice of the situation of such registered office, and of any change therein, shall be given to the registrar, and recorded by him; until such notice is given, the company shall not be deemed to have complied with the provisions of this act with respect to having a registered office. Notice of situation of registered office.

41. Every limited company under this act, whether limited by shares or by guarantee, shall paint or affix, and shall keep painted or affixed, its name on the outside of every office or place in which the business of the company is carried on, in a conspicuous position, in letters easily legible, and shall have its name engraven in legible characters on its seal, and shall have its name mentioned in legible characters in all notices, advertisements, and other official publications of such company, and in all bills of exchange, promissory notes, indorsements, cheques, and orders for money or goods purporting to be signed by or on behalf of such company, and in all bills of parcels, invoices, receipts, and letters of credit of the company. Publication of name by a limited company.

42. If any limited company under this act does not paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name in manner directed by this act, it shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for not so painting or affixing its name, and for every day during which such name is not so kept painted or affixed, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such default shall be liable to the like penalty; and if any director, manager, or officer of such company, or any person on its behalf, uses or authorizes the use of any seal purporting to be a seal of the company whereon its name is not so engraven as aforesaid, or issues or authorizes the issue of any notice, advertisement, or other official publication of such company, or signs or authorizes to be signed on behalf of such company any bill of exchange, promissory note, indorsement, cheque, order for money or goods, or issues or authorizes to be issued any bill of parcels, invoice, receipt, or letter of credit of the company, wherein its name is not mentioned in manner aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of fifty pounds, and shall further be personally liable to the holder of any such bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque, or order for money or goods, for the amount thereof, unless the same is duly paid by the company. Penalties on non-publication of name.

43. Every limited company under this act shall keep a register of all mortgages and charges specifically affecting property of the company, and shall enter in such register in respect of each mortgage or charge a short description of the property mortgaged or Register of mortgages.

APPENDIX.

Part III.

Certain companies to publish statement entered in schedule.

List of directors to be sent to registrar.

Penalty on company not keeping register of directors.

Promissory notes and bills of exchange.

Prohibition against carrying on business with less than seven members.

General meeting of company.

Power to alter regulations by special resolution.

Definition of special resolution.

charged, the amount of charge created, and the names of the mortgagees or persons entitled to such charge: if any property of the company is mortgaged or charged without such entry as aforesaid being made, every director, manager, or other officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the omission of such entry shall incur a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds: the register of mortgages required by this section shall be open to inspection by any creditor or member of the company at all reasonable times, and if such inspection is refused, any officer of the company refusing the same, and every director and manager of the company authorizing or knowingly and wilfully permitting such refusal, shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and a further penalty not exceeding two pounds for every day during which such refusal continues; and in addition to the above penalty, as respects companies registered in England and Ireland, any judge sitting in chambers, or the vice-warden of the stannaries in the case of companies subject to his jurisdiction, may by order compel an immediate inspection of the register.

44. Every limited banking company and every insurance company, and deposit, provident, or benefit society under this act shall, before it commences business, and also on the first Monday in February and the first Monday in August in every year during which it carries on business, make a statement in the form marked D. in the first schedule hereto, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit, and a copy of such statement shall be put up in a conspicuous place in the registered office of the company, and in every branch office or place where the business of the company is carried on, and if default is made in compliance with the provisions of this section the company shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such default continues, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such default shall incur the like penalty.

Every member and every creditor of any company mentioned in this section shall be entitled to a copy of the above-mentioned statement on payment of a sum not exceeding sixpence.

45. Every company under this act, and not having a capital divided into shares, shall keep at its registered office a register containing the names and addresses and the occupations of its directors or managers, and shall send to the registrar of joint stock companies a copy of such register, and shall from time to time notify to the registrar any change that takes place in such directors or managers.

46. If any company under this act, and not having a capital divided into shares, makes default in keeping a register of its directors or managers, or in sending a copy of such register to the registrar in compliance with the foregoing rules, or in notifying to the registrar any change that takes place in such directors or managers, such delinquent company shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such default continues, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such default shall incur the like penalty.

47. A promissory note or bill of exchange shall be deemed to have been made, accepted or indorsed on behalf of any company under this act, if made, accepted or indorsed in the name of the company by any person acting under the authority of the company, or if made, accepted or indorsed by or on behalf or on account of the company, by any person acting under the authority of the company.

48. If any company under this act carries on business when the number of its members is less than seven for a period of six months after the number has been so reduced, every person who is a member of such company during the time that it so carries on business after such period of six months, and is cognizant of the fact that it is so carrying on business with fewer than seven members, shall be severally liable for the payment of the whole debts of the company contracted during such time, and may be sued for the same, without the joinder in the action or suit of any other member.

Provisions for Protection of Members.

49. A general meeting of every company under this act shall be held once at the least in every year.

50. Subject to the provisions of this act, and to the conditions contained in the memorandum of association, any company formed under this act may, in general meeting, from time to time, by passing a special resolution in manner hereinafter mentioned, alter all or any of the regulations of the company contained in the articles of association or in the table marked A. in the first schedule, where such table is applicable to the company, or make new regulations to the exclusion of or in addition to all or any of the regulations of the company; and any regulations so made by special resolution shall be deemed to be regulations of the company of the same validity as if they had been originally contained in the articles of association, and shall be subject in like manner to be altered or modified by any subsequent special resolution.

51. A resolution passed by a company under this act shall be deemed to be special whenever a resolution has been passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members of the company for the time being entitled, according to the regulations of the company, to vote as may be present, in person or by proxy (in cases where by the regulations of the company proxies are allowed), at any general meeting of which notice specifying the intention to propose such resolution has been duly given, and such resolution has been confirmed by a majority of such members for the time being entitled, according to the regulations of the company, to vote as may be present, in person or by proxy, at a subsequent general meeting, of which notice has been duly given, and held at an interval of not less than fourteen days, nor more than one month from the date of the meeting at which such resolution was first passed: at any meeting mentioned in this section, unless a poll is demanded by at least five members, a declaration of the chairman that the resolution has been carried shall be deemed conclusive evidence of the fact, without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the same: notice of any meeting shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be duly given and the meeting to be duly held, whenever such notice is given and meeting held in manner prescribed by the regulations of the company: in computing the majority under this section, when a poll is demanded, reference shall be had to the number of votes to which each member is entitled by the regulations of the company.

52. In default of any regulations as to voting every member shall have one vote, and in default of any regulations as to summoning general meetings a meeting shall be held to be duly summoned of which seven days' notice in writing has been served on every member in manner in which notices are required to be served by the table marked A. in the first schedule hereto, and in default of any regulations as to the persons to summon meetings five members shall be competent to summon the same, and in default of any regulations as to who is to be chairman of such meeting, it shall be competent for any person elected by the members present to preside.

Provision where no regulations as to meetings.

53. A copy of any special resolution that is passed by any company under this act shall be printed and forwarded to the registrar of joint stock companies, and be recorded by him: if such copy is not so forwarded within fifteen days from the date of the confirmation of the resolution, the company shall incur a penalty not exceeding two pounds for every day after the expiration of such fifteen days during which such copy is omitted to be forwarded, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such default shall incur the like penalty.

Registry of special resolutions.

54. Where articles of association have been registered, a copy of every special resolution for the time being in force shall be annexed to or embodied in every copy of the articles of association that may be issued after the passing of such resolution: where no articles of association have been registered, a copy of any special resolution shall be forwarded in print to any member requesting the same on payment of one shilling, or such less sum as the company may direct: and if any company makes default in complying with the provisions of this section it shall incur a penalty not exceeding one pound for each copy in respect of which such default is made; and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorize or permit such default shall incur the like penalty.

Copies of special resolutions.

55. Any company under this act may, by instrument in writing under its common seal, empower any person, either generally or in respect of any specified matters, as its attorney, to execute deeds on its behalf in any place not situate in the United Kingdom; and every deed signed by such attorney, on behalf of the company, and under his seal, shall be binding on the company, and have the same effect as if it were under the common seal of the company.

Execution of deeds abroad (a).

56. The Board of Trade may appoint one or more competent inspectors to examine into the affairs of any company under this act, and to report thereon, in such manner as the board may direct, upon the applications following: (that is to say,)

Examination of affairs of company by inspectors.

- (1.) In the case of a banking company that has a capital divided into shares, upon the application of members holding not less than one third part of the whole shares of the company for the time being issued:
- (2.) In the case of any other company that has a capital divided into shares, upon the application of members holding not less than one fifth part of the whole shares of the company for the time being issued:
- (3.) In the case of any company not having a capital divided into shares, upon the application of members being in number not less than one fifth of the whole number of persons for the time being entered on the register of the company as members.

57. The application shall be supported by such evidence as the Board of Trade may require, for the purpose of showing that the applicants have good reason for requiring such investigation to be made, and that they are not actuated by malicious motives in instituting the same; the Board of Trade may also require the applicants to give security for payment of the costs of the inquiry before appointing any inspector or inspectors.

Application for inspection to be supported by evidence.

58. It shall be the duty of all officers and agents of the company to produce for the examination of the inspectors all books and documents in their custody or power: any inspector may examine upon oath the officers and agents of the company in relation to its business, and may administer such oath accordingly: if any officer or agent refuses to produce any book or document hereby directed to be produced, or to answer any question relating to the affairs of the company, he shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds in respect of each offence.

59. Upon the conclusion of the examination the inspectors shall report their opinion to the Board of Trade: such report shall be written or printed, as the Board of Trade directs: a copy shall be forwarded by the Board of Trade to the registered office of the company, and a further copy shall, at the request of the members upon whose application the inspection was made, be delivered to them or to any one or more of them: all expenses of and incidental to any such examination as aforesaid shall be defrayed by the members upon whose application the inspectors were appointed, unless the Board of Trade shall direct the same to be paid out of the assets of the company, which it is hereby authorized to do.

Power of company to appoint inspectors.

60. Any company under this act may by special resolution appoint inspectors for the purpose of examining into the affairs of the company: the inspectors so appointed shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as inspectors appointed by the Board of Trade, with this exception, that instead of making their report to the Board of Trade, they shall make the same in such manner and to such persons as the company in general meeting directs; and the officers and agents of the company shall incur the same penalties, in case of any refusal to produce any book or document hereby required to be produced to such inspectors, or to answer any question, as they would have incurred if such inspector had been appointed by the Board of Trade.

Report of inspectors to be evidence.

61. A copy of the report of any inspectors appointed under this act, authenticated by the seal of the company into whose affairs they have made inspection, shall be admissible in any legal proceeding, as evidence of the opinion of the inspectors in relation to any matter contained in such report.

Notices.

Service of notices on company.

62. Any summons, notice, order or other document required to be served upon the company may be served by leaving the same, or sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to the company, at their registered office.

Rules as to notices by letter.

63. Any document to be served by post on the company shall be posted in such time as to admit of its being delivered in the due course of delivery within the period (if any) prescribed for the service thereof; and in proving service of such document it shall be sufficient to prove that such document was properly directed, and that it was put as a prepaid letter into the post office.

Authentication of notices of company.

64. Any summons, notice, order or proceeding requiring authentication by the company, may be signed by any director, secretary or other authorized officer of the company, and need not be under the common seal of the company, and the same may be in writing or in print, or partly in writing and partly in print.

Legal Proceedings.

Recovery of penalties.

65. All offences under this act made punishable by any penalty may be prosecuted summarily before two or more justices, as to England, in manner directed by an act passed in the session holden in the 11th & 12th Vict. c. 43, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Performance of the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Sessions within England and Wales with respect to Summary Convictions and Orders," or any act amending the same; and as to Scotland, before two or more justices or the sheriff of the county, in manner directed by the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 17th & 18th Vict. c. 104, intituled "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to Merchant Shipping," or any act amending the same, as regards offences in Scotland against that act, not being offences by that act described as felonies or misdemeanors; and as to Ireland, in manner directed by the act passed in the session holden in the 14th & 15th Vict. c. 93, intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts regulating the Proceedings of Petty Sessions and the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Quarter Sessions in Ireland," or any act amending the same.

Application of penalties.

66. The justices or sheriff imposing any penalty under this act may direct the whole or any part thereof to be applied in or towards payment of the costs of the proceedings, or in or towards the rewarding the person upon whose information or at whose suit such penalty has been recovered; and, subject to such direction, all penalties shall be paid into the receipt of her Majesty's exchequer, in such manner as the treasury may direct, and shall be carried to and form part of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom.

Evidence of proceedings at meetings.

67. Every company under this act shall cause minutes of all resolutions and proceedings of general meetings of the company, and of the directors or managers of the company in cases where there are directors or managers, to be duly entered in books to be from time to time provided for the purpose; and any such minute as aforesaid, if purporting to be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which such resolutions were passed or proceedings had, or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting, shall be received as evidence in all legal proceedings; and until the contrary is proved, every general meeting of the company or meeting of directors or managers in respect of the proceedings of which minutes have been so made shall be deemed to have been duly held and convened, and all resolutions passed thereat or proceedings had, to have been duly passed and had, and all appointments of directors, managers or liquidators shall be deemed to be valid, and all acts done by such directors, managers or liquidators shall be valid, notwithstanding any defect that may afterwards be discovered in their appointments or qualifications.

68. In the case of companies under this act, and engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the stannaries, the court of the vice-warden of the stannaries shall have and exercise the like jurisdiction and powers, as well on the common law as on the equity side thereof, which it now possesses by custom, usage or statute in the case of unincorporated companies, but only so far as such jurisdiction or powers are consistent with the provisions of this act and with the constitution of companies as prescribed or required by this act; and for the purpose of giving fuller effect to such jurisdiction in all actions, suits or legal proceedings instituted in the said court, in causes or matters whereof the court has cognizance, all process issuing out of the same, and all orders, rules, demands, notices, warrants and summonses required or authorized by the practice of the court to be served on any company, whether registered or not registered, or any member or contributory thereof, or any officer, agent, director, manager or servant thereof, may be served in any part of England without any special order of the vice-warden for that purpose, or by such special order may be served in any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in the adjacent islands, parcel of the dominions of the crown, on such terms and conditions as the court shall think fit; and all decrees, orders and judgments of the said court made or pronounced in such causes or matters may be enforced in the same manner in which decrees, orders and judgments of the court may now by law be enforced, whether within or beyond the local limits of the stannaries; and the seal of the said court, and the signature of the registrar thereof, shall be judicially noticed by all other courts and judges in England, and shall require no other proof than the production thereof; the registrar of the said court, or the assistant registrar, in making sales under any decree or order of the court shall be entitled to the same privilege of selling by auction or competition without a licence, and without being liable to duty, as a judge of the Court of Chancery is entitled to in pursuance of the acts in that behalf.

69. Where a limited company is plaintiff or pursuer in any action, suit, or other legal proceeding, any judge having jurisdiction in the matter may, if it appears by any credible testimony that there is reason to believe that if the defendant be successful in his defence, the assets of the company will be insufficient to pay his costs, require sufficient security to be given for such costs, and may stay all proceedings until such security is given.

70. In any action or suit brought by the company against any member to recover any call or other monies due from such member in his character of member, it shall not be necessary to set forth the special matter, but it shall be sufficient to allege that the defendant is a member of the company, and is indebted to the company in respect of a call made or other monies due whereby an action or suit hath accrued to the company.

Alteration of Forms.

71. The forms set forth in the second schedule hereto, or forms as near thereto as circumstances admit, shall be used in all matters to which such forms refer; the Board of Trade may from time to time make such alterations in the tables and forms contained in the first schedule hereto, so that it does not increase the amount of fees payable to the registrar in the said schedule mentioned, and in the forms in the second schedule, or make such additions to the last-mentioned forms, as it deems requisite; any such table or form, when altered, shall be published in the London Gazette, and upon such publication being made, such table or form shall have the same force as if it were included in the schedule to this act, but no alteration made by the Board of Trade in the table marked A. contained in the first schedule shall affect any company registered prior to the date of such alteration, or repeal, as respects such company, any portion of such table.

Arbitrations.

72. Any company under this act may from time to time, by writing under its common seal, agree to refer and may refer to arbitration, in accordance with "The Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 1859" (m), any existing or future difference, question or other matter whatsoever in dispute between itself and any other company or person, and the companies parties to the arbitration may delegate to the person or persons to whom the reference is made power to settle any terms or to determine any matter capable of being lawfully settled or determined by the companies themselves, or by the directors or other managing body of such companies.

73. All the provisions of "The Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 1859," shall be deemed to apply to arbitrations between companies and persons in pursuance of this act; and in the construction of such provisions "the companies" shall be deemed to include companies authorized by this act to refer disputes to arbitration.

Part IV.

PART IV.

WINDING UP OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS UNDER THIS ACT.

Preliminary.

Meaning of contributory.

74. The term "contributory" shall mean every person liable to contribute to the assets of a company under this act, in the event of the same being wound up: it shall also, in all proceedings for determining the persons who are to be deemed contributories, and in all proceedings prior to the final determination of such persons, include any person alleged to be a contributory.

Nature of liability of contributory.

75. The liability of any person to contribute to the assets of a company under this act in the event of the same being wound up, shall be deemed to create a debt (in England and Ireland of the nature of a specialty) accruing due from such person at the time when his liability commenced, but payable at the time or respective times when calls are made as hereinafter mentioned for enforcing such liability; and it shall be lawful in the case of the bankruptcy of any contributory to prove against his estate the estimated value of his liability to future calls, as well as calls already made.

Contributories in case of death.

76. If any contributory dies either before or after he has been placed on the list of contributories hereinafter mentioned, his personal representatives, heirs and devisees shall be liable in a due course of administration to contribute to the assets of the company in discharge of the liability of such deceased contributory, and such personal representatives, heirs and devisees shall be deemed to be contributories accordingly.

Contributories in case of bankruptcy.

77. If any contributory becomes bankrupt, either before or after he has been placed on the list of contributories, his assignees shall be deemed to represent such bankrupt for all the purposes of the winding up, and shall be deemed to be contributories accordingly, and may be called upon to admit to proof against the estate of such bankrupt, or otherwise to allow to be paid out of his assets in due course of law, any monies due from such bankrupt in respect of his liability to contribute to the assets of the company being wound up; and for the purposes of this section any person who may have taken the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors before the eleventh day of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, shall be deemed to have become bankrupt.

Contributories in case of marriage.

78. If any female contributory marries, either before or after she has been placed on the list of contributories, her husband shall, during the continuance of the marriage, be liable to contribute to the assets of the company the same sum as she would have been liable to contribute if she had not married, and he shall be deemed to be a contributory accordingly.

Winding up by Court.

Circumstances under which company may be wound up by court.

79. A company under this act may be wound up by the court as hereinafter defined, under the following circumstances, (that is to say,)

- (1.) Whenever the company has passed a special resolution requiring the company to be wound up by the court:
- (2.) Whenever the company does not commence its business within a year from its incorporation, or suspends its business for the space of a whole year:
- (3.) Whenever the members are reduced in number to less than seven:
- (4.) Whenever the company is unable to pay its debts:
- (5.) Whenever the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up.

Company when deemed unable to pay its debts.

80. A company under this act shall be deemed to be unable to pay its debts,

- (1.) Whenever a creditor, by assignment or otherwise, to whom the company is indebted, at law or in equity, in a sum exceeding fifty pounds then due, has served on the company, by leaving the same at their registered office, a demand under his hand requiring the company to pay the sum so due, and the company has for the space of three weeks (n) succeeding the service of such demand neglected to pay such sum, or to secure or compound for the same to the reasonable satisfaction of the creditor:
- (2.) Whenever, in England and Ireland, execution or other process issued on a judgment, decree or order obtained in any court in favour of any creditor, at law or in equity, in any proceeding instituted by such creditor against the company, is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part:
- (3.) Whenever, in Scotland, the induciæ of a charge for payment on an extract decree, or an extract registered bond, or an extract registered protest have expired without payment being made:
- (4.) Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the company is unable to pay its debts.

Definition of "the court."

81. The expression "the court," as used in this part of this act, shall mean the following authorities, (that is to say,)

In the case of a company engaged in working any mine, within and subject to the jurisdiction of the stannaries, the court of the vice-warden of the stannaries, unless the vice-warden certifies that in his opinion the company would be more advantageously wound up in the High Court of Chancery, in which case "the court" shall mean the High Court of Chancery :

(n) See Re Catholic Publishing Co., 33 L. J. (Ch.) 325.

In the case of a company registered in England that is not engaged in working any such mine as aforesaid, the High Court of Chancery :

In the case of a company registered in Ireland, the Court of Chancery in Ireland :

In all cases of companies registered in Scotland, the Court of Session in either division thereof :

Provided, that where the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland makes an order for winding up a company under this act, it may, if it thinks fit, direct all subsequent proceedings for winding up the same to be had in the Court of Bankruptcy having jurisdiction in the place in which the registered office of the company is situate ; and thereupon such last-mentioned Court of Bankruptcy shall, for the purposes of winding up the company, be deemed to be "the court" within the meaning of the act, and shall have for the purposes of such winding up all the powers of the High Court of Chancery or of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, as the case may require.

82. Any application to the court for the winding up of a company under this act shall be by petition ; it may be presented by the company, or by any one or more creditor or creditors, contributory or contributories of the company, or by all or any of the above parties, together or separately ; and every order which may be made on any such petition shall operate in favour of all the creditors and all the contributories of the company in the same manner as if it had been made upon the joint petition of a creditor and a contributory.

Application for winding up to be made by petition.

83. Any judge of the High Court of Chancery may do in chambers any act which the court is hereby authorized to do ; and the vice-warden of the stannaries may direct that a petition for winding up a company be heard by him at such time and at such place within the jurisdiction of the stannaries, or within or near to the place where the registered office of the company is situated, as he may deem to be convenient to the parties concerned, or (with the consent of the parties concerned) at any place in England ; and all orders made thereupon shall have the same force and effect as if they had been made by the vice-warden sitting at Truro or elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the court, and all parties and persons summoned to attend at the hearing of any such petition shall be compellable to give their attendance before the vice-warden by like process and in like manner as at the hearing of any cause or matter at the usual sitting of the said court ; and the registrar of the court may, subject to exception or appeal to the vice-warden as heretofore used, do and exercise such and the like acts and powers in the matter of winding up as he is now used to do and exercise in a suit on the equity side of the said court.

Power of court.

84. A winding up of a company by the court shall be deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition for the winding up.

Commencement of winding up by court.

85. The court may, at any time after the presentation of a petition for winding up a company under this act, and before making an order for winding up the company, upon the application of the company, or of any creditor or contributory of the company, restrain further proceedings in any action, suit or proceeding against the company, upon such terms as the court thinks fit ; the court may also at any time after the presentation of such petition, and before the first appointment of liquidators, appoint provisionally an official liquidator of the estate and effects of the company.

Court may grant injunction.

86. Upon hearing the petition the court may dismiss the same with or without costs, may adjourn the hearing conditionally or unconditionally, and may make any interim order, or any other order that it deems just.

Course to be pursued by court on hearing petition.

87. When an order has been made for winding up a company under this act, no suit, action or other proceeding shall be proceeded with or commenced against the company except with the leave of the court, and subject to such terms as the court may impose.

Actions and suits to be stayed after order for winding up.

88. When an order has been made for winding up a company under this act, a copy of such order shall forthwith be forwarded by the company to the registrar of joint-stock companies, who shall make a minute thereof in his books relating to the company.

Copy of order to be forwarded to registrar.

89. The court may at any time after an order has been made for winding up a company, upon the application by motion of any creditor or contributory of the company, and upon proof to the satisfaction of the court that all proceedings in relation to such winding up ought to be stayed, make an order staying the same, either altogether or for a limited time, on such terms and subject to such conditions as it deems fit.

Power of court to stay proceedings.

90. When an order has been made for winding up a company limited by guarantee and having a capital divided into shares, any share capital that may not have been called up shall be deemed to be assets of the company, and to be a debt (in England and Ireland of the nature of a specialty) due to the company from each member to the extent of any sums that may be unpaid on any shares held by him, and payable at such time as may be appointed by the court.

Effect of order on share capital of company limited by guarantee.

91. The court may, as to all matters relating to the winding up, have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributories, as proved to it by any sufficient evidence, and may, if it thinks it expedient, direct meetings of the creditors or contributories to be summoned, held and conducted in such manner as the court directs, for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes, and may appoint a person to act as chairman of any such meeting, and to report the result of such meeting to the court: in the case of creditors, regard is to be had to the value of the debts due to each creditor, and in the case of contributories to the number of votes conferred on each contributory by the regulations of the company.

Official Liquidators.

Appointment of official liquidator.

92. For the purpose of conducting the proceedings in winding up a company, and assisting the court therein, there may be appointed a person or persons to be called an official liquidator or official liquidators; and the court having jurisdiction may appoint such person or persons, either provisionally or otherwise, as it thinks fit, to the office of official liquidator or official liquidators; in all cases if more persons than one are appointed to the office of official liquidator, the court shall declare whether any act hereby required or authorized to be done by the official liquidator is to be done by all or any one or more of such persons. The court may also determine whether any and what security is to be given by any official liquidator on his appointment; if no official liquidator is appointed, or during any vacancy in such appointment, all the property of the company shall be deemed to be in the custody of the court.

Resignations, removals, filling up vacancies, and compensation.

93. Any official liquidator may resign or be removed by the court on due cause shown: and any vacancy in the office of an official liquidator appointed by the court shall be filled by the court: there shall be paid to the official liquidator such salary or remuneration, by way of per-centage or otherwise, as the court may direct; and if more liquidators than one are appointed, such remuneration shall be distributed amongst them in such proportions as the court directs.

Style and duties
dator.

94. The official liquidator or liquidators shall be described by the style of the official liquidator or official liquidators of the particular company in respect of which he is or they are appointed, and not by his or their individual name or names; he or they shall take into his or their custody, or under his or their control, all the property, effects and things in action to which the company is or appears to be entitled, and shall perform such duties in reference to the winding up of the company as may be imposed by the court.

Powers of official liquidator.

95. The official liquidator shall have power, with the sanction of the court, to do the following things:

To bring or defend any action, suit or prosecution, or other legal proceeding, civil or criminal, in the name and on behalf of the company:

To carry on the business of the company, so far as may be necessary for the beneficial winding up of the same:

To sell the real and personal and heritable and moveable property, effects and things in action of the company by public auction or private contract, with power to transfer the whole thereof to any person or company, or to sell the same in parcels:

To do all acts and to execute, in the name and on behalf of the company, all deeds, receipts and other documents, and for that purpose to use, when necessary, the company's seal:

To prove, rank, claim and draw a dividend in the matter of the bankruptcy or insolvency or sequestration of any contributory, for any balance against the estate of such contributory, and to take and receive dividends in respect of such balance, in the matter of bankruptcy or insolvency or sequestration, as a separate debt due from such bankrupt or insolvent, and rateably with the other separate creditors:

To draw, accept, make and indorse any bill of exchange or promissory note in the name and on behalf of the company, also to raise upon the security of the assets of the company from time to time any requisite sum or sums of money; and the drawing, accepting, making or endorsing of every such bill of exchange or promissory note as aforesaid on behalf of the company shall have the same effect with respect to the liability of such company as if such bill or note had been drawn, accepted, made or endorsed by or on behalf of such company in the course of carrying on the business thereof:

To take out, if necessary, in his official name, letters of administration to any deceased contributory, and to do in his official name any other act that may be necessary for obtaining payment of any monies due from a contributory or from his estate, and which act cannot be conveniently done in the name of the company; and in all cases where he takes out letters of administration, or otherwise uses his official name for obtaining payment of any monies due from a contributory, such money shall, for the purpose of enabling him to take out such letters or recover such monies, be deemed to be due to the official liquidator himself:

To do and execute all such other things as may be necessary for winding up the affairs of the company and distributing its assets.

Discretion of official liqui-
dator.

96. The court may provide by any order that the official liquidator may exercise any of the above powers without the sanction or intervention of the court, and where an official liquidator is provisionally appointed may limit and restrict his powers by the order appointing him.

97. The official liquidator may, with the sanction of the court, appoint a solicitor or law agent to assist him in the performance of his duties.

Ordinary Powers of Court.

98. As soon as may be after making an order for winding up the company, the court shall settle a list of contributories, with power to rectify the register of members in all cases where such rectification is required in pursuance of this act, and shall cause the assets of the company to be collected and applied in discharge of its liabilities.

99. In settling the list of contributories the court shall distinguish between persons who are contributories in their own right, and persons who are contributories as being representatives of or being liable to the debts of others; it shall not be necessary, where the personal representative of any deceased contributory is placed on the list, to add the heirs or devisees of such contributory, nevertheless such heirs or devisees may be added as and when the court thinks fit.

100. The court may, at any time after making an order for winding up a company, require any contributory for the time being settled on the list of contributories, trustee, receiver, banker or agent or officer of the company to pay, deliver, convey, surrender or transfer forthwith, or within such time as the court directs, to or into the hands of the official liquidator, any sum or balance, books, papers, estate or effects which happen to be in his hands for the time being, and to which the company is prima facie entitled.

101. The court may, at any time after making an order for winding up the company, make an order on any contributory for the time being settled on the list of contributories, directing payment to be made, in manner in the said order mentioned, of any monies due from him or from the estate of the person whom he represents to the company, exclusive of any monies which he or the estate of the person whom he represents may be liable to contribute by virtue of any call made or to be made by the court in pursuance of this part of this act; and it may, in making such order, when the company is not limited, allow to such contributory by way of set-off any monies due to him or the estate which he represents from the company on any independent dealing or contract with the company, but not any monies due to him as a member of the company in respect of any dividend or profit:

Provided that when all the creditors of any company whether limited or unlimited are paid in full, any monies due on any account whatever to any contributory from the company may be allowed to him by way of set-off against any subsequent call or calls.

102. The court may, at any time after making an order for winding up a company, and either before or after it has ascertained the sufficiency of the assets of the company, make calls on and order payment thereof by all or any of the contributories for the time being settled on the list of contributories, to the extent of their liability, for payment of all or any sums it deems necessary to satisfy the debts and liabilities of the company, and the costs, charges and expenses of winding it up, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, and it may, in making a call, take into consideration the probability that some of the contributories upon whom the same is made may partly or wholly fail to pay their respective portions of the same.

103. The court may order any contributory, purchaser or other person from whom money is due to the company to pay the same into the Bank of England or any branch thereof to the account of the official liquidator instead of to the official liquidator, and such order may be enforced in the same manner as if it had directed payment to the official liquidator.

104. All monies, bills, notes and other securities paid and delivered into the Bank of England or any branch thereof, in the event of a company being wound up by the court, shall be subject to such order and regulation for the keeping of the account of such monies and other effects, and for the payment and delivery in, or investment and payment and delivery out, of the same as the court may direct.

105. If any person made a contributory as personal representative of a deceased contributory makes a default in paying any sum ordered to be paid by him, proceedings may be taken for administering the personal and real estates of such deceased contributory, or either of such estates, and of compelling payment thereof of the monies due.

106. Any order made by the court in pursuance of this act upon any contributory shall, subject to the provisions herein contained for appealing against such order, be conclusive evidence that the monies, if any, thereby appearing to be due or ordered to be paid are due, and all other pertinent matters stated in such order are to be taken to be truly stated as against all persons, and in all proceedings whatsoever, with the exception of proceedings taken against the real estate of any deceased contributory, in which case such order shall only be prima facie evidence for the purpose of charging his real estate, unless his heirs or devisees were on the list of contributories at the time of the order being made.

107. The court may fix a certain day or certain days on or within which creditors of the company are to prove their debts or claims, or to be excluded from the benefit of any distribution made before such debts are proved.

Order conclusive evidence.

Court may exclude creditors not proving within certain time.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

Proceedings in the court of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries on proof of debts.

Court to adjust rights of contributories.

Court to order costs.

Dissolution of company.

Registrar to make minute of dissolution of company.

Penalty on not reporting dissolution of company.

Petition to be lis pendens.

Power of court to summon persons before it suspected of having property of company.

Special provisions as to court of Vice-Warden of the Stannaries.

108. If in the course of proving the debts and claims of creditors in the court of the vice-warden of the stannaries any debt or claim is disputed by the official liquidator or by any creditor or contributory, or appears to the court to be open to question, the court shall have power, subject to appeal as hereinafter provided, to adjudicate upon it, and for that purpose the said court shall have and exercise all needful powers of inquiry touching the same by affidavit or by oral examination of witnesses or of parties, whether voluntarily offering themselves for examination or summoned to attend by compulsory process of the court, or to produce documents before the court; and the court shall also have power, incidentally, to decide on the validity and extent of any lien or charge claimed by any creditor on any property of the company in respect of such debt, and to make declarations of right, binding on all persons interested; and for the more satisfactory determination of any question of fact, or mixed question of law and fact, arising on such inquiry, the vice-warden shall have power, if he thinks fit, to direct and settle any action or issue to be tried either on the common law side of his court, or by a common or special jury, before the justices of assize in and for the counties of Cornwall or Devon, or at any sitting of one of the superior courts in London or Middlesex, which action or issue shall accordingly be tried in due course of law, and without other or further consent of parties; and the finding of the jury in such action or issue shall be conclusive of the facts found, unless the judge who tried it makes known to the vice-warden that he was not satisfied with the finding, or unless it appears to the vice-warden that, in consequence of miscarriage, accident, or the subsequent discovery of fresh material evidence, such finding ought not to be conclusive.

109. The court shall adjust the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, and distribute any surplus that may remain amongst the parties entitled thereto.

110. The court may, in the event of the assets being insufficient to satisfy the liabilities, make an order as to the payment out of the estate of the company of the costs, charges and expenses incurred in winding up any company in such order of priority as the court thinks just.

111. When the affairs of the company have been completely wound up, the court shall make an order that the company be dissolved from the date of such order, and the company shall be dissolved accordingly.

112. Any order so made shall be reported by the official liquidator to the registrar, who shall make a minute accordingly in his books of the dissolution of such company.

113. If the official liquidator makes default in reporting to the registrar, in the case of a company being wound up by the court, the order that the company be dissolved, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which he is so in default.

114. Any petition for winding up a company by the court under this act, shall constitute a lis pendens within the terms of the act passed in the session holden in the second and third years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter eleven, and intituled "An Act for the better Protection of Purchasers against Judgments, Crown Debts, Lis pendens, and Fiats in Bankruptcy," provided the same is duly registered in manner required by such act concerning suits in equity.

Extraordinary Powers of Court.

115. The court may, after it has made an order for winding up the company, summon before it any officer of the company or person known or suspected to have in his possession any of the estate or effects of the company, or supposed to be indebted to the company, or any person whom the court may deem capable of giving information concerning the trade, dealings, estate or effects of the company; and the court may require any such officer or person to produce any books, papers, deeds, writings or other documents in his custody or power relating to the company; and if any person so summoned, after being tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, refuses to come before the court at the time appointed, having no lawful impediment (made known to the court at the time of its sitting, and allowed by it), the court may cause such person to be apprehended and brought before the court for examination; nevertheless, in cases where any person claims any lien on papers, deeds or writings or documents produced by him, such production shall be without prejudice to such lien, and the court shall have jurisdiction in the winding up to determine all questions relating to such lien.

116. If, after an order for winding up in the court of the vice-warden of the stannaries, it appears that any person claims property in, or any lien, legal or equitable, upon any of the machinery, materials, ores or effects on the mine or on premises occupied by the company in connexion with the mine, or to which the company was, at the time of the order, prima facie entitled, it shall be lawful for the vice-warden or the registrar to adjudicate upon such claim on interpleader in the manner provided by section eleven of the act passed in the eighteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter thirty-two; and any action or issue directed upon such interpleader may, if the vice-warden think fit, be tried in his court or at the assizes or the sittings in London or Middlesex, before a judge of one of the superior courts, in the manner and on the terms and conditions hereinbefore provided in the case of disputed debts and claims of creditors.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

117. The court may examine upon oath, either by word of mouth or upon written interrogatories, any person appearing or brought before them in manner aforesaid concerning the affairs, dealings, estate or effects of the company, and may reduce into writing the answers of every such person, and require him to subscribe the same.

118. The court may, at any time before or after it has made an order for winding up a company, upon proof being given that there is probable cause for believing that any contributory to such company is about to quit the United Kingdom, or otherwise abscond, or to remove or conceal any of his goods or chattels, for the purpose of evading payment of calls, or for avoiding examination in respect of the affairs of the company, cause such contributory to be arrested, and his books, papers, monies, securities for monies, goods and chattels to be seized, and him and them to be safely kept until such time as the court may order.

119. Any powers by this act conferred on the court shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in restriction of any other powers subsisting, either at law or in equity, of instituting proceedings against any contributory, or the estate of any contributory, or against any debtor of the company for the recovery of any call or other sums due from such contributory or debtor, or his estate, and such proceedings may be instituted accordingly.

Examination of parties by court.

Power to arrest contributory about to abscond, or to remove or conceal any of his property.

Powers of court cumulative.

Enforcement of and Appeal from Orders.

120. All orders made by the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, under this act may be enforced in the same manner in which orders of such Court of Chancery made in any suit pending therein may be enforced, and for the purposes of this part of this act the court of the vice-warden of the stannaries shall, in addition to its ordinary powers, have the same power of enforcing any orders made by it as the Court of Chancery in England has in relation to matters within the jurisdiction of such court, and for the last-mentioned purposes the jurisdiction of the vice-warden of the stannaries shall be deemed to be co-extensive in local limits with the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in England.

Power to enforce orders.

121. Where an order, interlocutor, or decree has been made in Scotland for winding up a company by the court, it shall be competent to the court in Scotland during session, and to the lord ordinary on the bills during vacation, on production by the liquidators of a list certified by them of the names of the contributories liable in payment of any calls which they may wish to enforce, and of the amount due by each contributory respectively, and of the date when the same became due, to pronounce forthwith a decree against such contributories for payment of the sums so certified to be due by each of them respectively, with interest from the said date till payment, at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum, in the same way and to the same effect as if they had severally consented to registration for execution, on a charge of six days, of a legal obligation to pay such calls and interest; and such decree may be extracted immediately, and no suspension thereof shall be competent, except on caution or consignment, unless with special leave of the court or lord ordinary.

Power to order contributories in Scotland to pay calls.

122. Any order made by the court in England for or in the course of the winding up of a company under this act shall be enforced in Scotland and Ireland in the courts that would respectively have had jurisdiction in respect of such company if the registered office of the company had been situate in Scotland or Ireland, and in the same manner in all respects as if such order had been made by the courts that are hereby required to enforce the same; and in like manner orders, interlocutors, and decrees made by the court in Scotland for or in the course of the winding up of a company shall be enforced in England and Ireland, and orders made by the court in Ireland for or in the course of winding up a company shall be enforced in England and Scotland by the courts which would respectively have had jurisdiction in the matter of such company if the registered office of the company were situate in the division of the United Kingdom where the order is required to be enforced, and in the same manner in all respects as if such order had been made by the court required to enforce the same in the case of a company within its own jurisdiction.

Order made in England to be enforced in Ireland and Scotland.

123. Where any order, interlocutor, or decree made by one court is required to be enforced by another court, as hereinbefore provided, an office copy of the order, interlocutor, or decree so made shall be produced to the proper officer of the court required to enforce the same, and the production of such office copy shall be sufficient evidence of such order, interlocutor, or decree having been made, and thereupon such last-mentioned court shall take such steps in the matter as may be requisite for enforcing such order, interlocutor, or decree, in the same manner as if it were the order, interlocutor, or decree of the court enforcing the same.

Mode of dealing with orders to be enforced by other courts.

124. Rehearings of and appeals from any order or decision made or given in the matter of the winding up of a company by any court having jurisdiction under this act, may be had in the same manner and subject to the same conditions in and subject to which appeals may be had from any order or decision of the same court in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction; subject to this restriction, that no such rehearing or appeal shall be heard unless notice of the same is given within three weeks after any order complained of has been made, in manner in which notices of appeal are ordinarily given, according to the Appeals from orders.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

Judicial notice to be taken of signature of officers.

Special commissioners for receiving evidence.

Court may order the examination of persons in Scotland.

Affidavits, &c. may be sworn in Ireland, Scotland, or the colonies before any competent court or person.

practice of the court appealed from, unless such time is extended by the court of appeal: provided that it shall be lawful for the lord warden of the stannaries, by a special or general order, to remit at once any appeal allowed and regularly lodged with him against any order or decision of the vice-warden made in the matter of a winding up to the court of appeal in Chancery, which court shall thereupon hear and determine such appeal, and have power to require all such certificates of the vice-warden, records of proceedings below, documents, and papers, as the lord warden would or might have required upon the hearing of such appeal, and to exercise all other the jurisdiction and powers of the lord warden specified in the act of Parliament passed in the eighteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter thirty-two, and any order so made by the court of appeal in Chancery shall be final, without any further appeal.

125. In all proceedings under this part of this act, all courts, judges, and persons judicially acting, and all other officers, judicial or ministerial, of any court, or employed in enforcing the process of any court, shall take judicial notice of the signature of any officer of the Courts of Chancery or Bankruptcy in England or in Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland, or of the registrar of the court of the vice-warden of the stannaries, and also of the official seal or stamp of the several offices of the Courts of Chancery or Bankruptcy in England or Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland, or of the court of the vice-warden of the stannaries, when such seal or stamp is appended to or impressed on any document made, issued, or signed under the provisions of this part of the act, or any official copy thereof.

126. The commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy and the judges of the County Courts in England who sit at places more than twenty miles from the general post office, and the commissioners of bankrupt and the assistant barristers and recorders in Ireland, and the sheriffs of counties in Scotland, shall be commissioners for the purpose of taking evidence under this act in cases where any company is wound up in any part of the United Kingdom, and it shall be lawful for the court to refer the whole or any part of the examination of any witnesses under this act to any person hereby appointed commissioner, although such commissioner is out of the jurisdiction of the court that made the order or decree for winding up the company; and every such commissioner shall, in addition to any power of summoning and examining witnesses, and requiring the production or delivery of documents, and certifying or punishing defaults by witnesses, which he might lawfully exercise as a commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, judge of a County Court, commissioner of bankrupt, assistant barrister or recorder, or as a sheriff of a county, have in the matter so referred to him all the same powers of summoning and examining witnesses, and requiring the production or delivery of documents, and punishing defaults by witnesses, and allowing costs and charges and expenses to witnesses, as the court which made the order for winding up the company has; and the examination so taken shall be returned or reported to such last-mentioned court in such manner as it directs.

127. The court may direct the examination in Scotland of any person for the time being in Scotland, whether a contributory of the company or not, in regard to the estate, dealings, or affairs of any company in the course of being wound up, or in regard to the estate, dealings, or affairs of any person being a contributory of the company, so far as the company may be interested therein by reason of his being such contributory, and the order or commission to take such examination shall be directed to the sheriff of the county in which the person to be examined is residing or happens to be for the time, and the sheriff shall summon such person to appear before him at a time and place to be specified in the summons for examination upon oath as a witness or as a haver, and to produce any books, papers, deeds, or documents called for which may be in his possession or power, and the sheriff may take such examination either orally or upon written interrogatories, and shall report the same in writing in the usual form to the court, and shall transmit with such report the books, papers, deeds, or documents produced, if the originals thereof are required and specified by the order, or otherwise such copies thereof or extracts therefrom, authenticated by the sheriff, as may be necessary; and in case any person so summoned fails to appear at the time and place specified, or appearing refuses to be examined or to make the production required, the sheriff shall proceed against such person as a witness or haver duly cited, and failing to appear or refusing to give evidence or make production may be proceeded against by the law of Scotland; and the sheriff shall be entitled to such and the like fees, and the witness shall be entitled to such and the like allowances, as sheriffs when acting as commissioners under appointment from the Court of Session and as witnesses and havers are entitled to in the like cases according to the law and practice of Scotland: if any objection is stated to the sheriff by the witness, either on the ground of his incompetency as a witness, or as to the production required to be made, or on any other ground whatever, the sheriff may, if he thinks fit, report such objection to the court, and suspend the examination of such witness until such objection has been disposed of by the court.

128. Any affidavit, affirmation, or declaration required to be sworn or made, under the provisions or for the purposes of this part of this act, may be lawfully sworn or made in Great Britain or Ireland, or in any colony, island, plantation, or place under the dominion of her Majesty in foreign parts, before any court, judge, or person lawfully authorized to take and receive affidavits, affirmations, or declarations, or before any of her Majesty's consuls or vice-consuls, in any foreign parts out of her Majesty's dominions, and all courts, judges, justices, commissioners, and persons acting judicially shall take judicial notice of the seal or stamp or signature (as the case may be) of any such court, judge, person, consul, or vice-consul attached, appended, or subscribed to any such affidavit, affirmation, or declaration, or to any other document to be used for the purposes of this part of this act.

APPENDIX.
Part IV.

Voluntary Winding up of Company.

129. A company under this act may be wound up voluntarily,

- (1.) Whenever the period, if any, fixed for the duration of the company by the articles of association expires, or whenever the event, if any, occurs, upon the occurrence of which it is provided by the articles of association that the company is to be dissolved, and the company in general meeting has passed a resolution requiring the company to be wound up voluntarily :
- (2.) Whenever the company has passed a special resolution requiring the company to be wound up voluntarily :
- (3.) Whenever the company has passed an extraordinary resolution to the effect that it has been proved to their satisfaction that the company cannot by reason of its liabilities continue its business, and that it is advisable to wind up the same :

For the purposes of this act any resolution shall be deemed to be extraordinary which is passed in such manner as would, if it had been confirmed, by a subsequent meeting, have constituted a special resolution, as hereinbefore defined.

130. A voluntary winding up shall be deemed to commence at the time of the passing of the resolution authorizing such winding up.

131. Whenever a company is wound up voluntarily the company shall, from the date of the commencement of such winding up, cease to carry on its business, except in so far as may be required for the beneficial winding up thereof, and all transfers of shares, except transfers made to or with the sanction of the liquidators, or alteration in the status of the members of the company taking place after the commencement of such winding up shall be void, but its corporate state and all its corporate powers shall, notwithstanding it is otherwise provided by its regulations, continue until the affairs of the company are wound up.

132. Notice of any special resolution or extraordinary resolution passed for winding up a company voluntarily shall be given by advertisement as respects companies registered in England in the London Gazette, as respects companies registered in Scotland in the Edinburgh Gazette, and as respects companies registered in Ireland in the Dublin Gazette.

133. The following consequences shall ensue upon the voluntary winding up of a company :

- (1.) The property of the company shall be applied in satisfaction of its liabilities pari passu, and, subject thereto, shall, unless it be otherwise provided by the regulations of the company, be distributed amongst the members according to their rights and interests in the company :
- (2.) Liquidators shall be appointed for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the company and distributing the property :
- (3.) The company in general meeting shall appoint such persons or person as it thinks fit to be liquidators or a liquidator, and may fix the remuneration to be paid to them or him :
- (4.) If one person only is appointed, all the provisions herein contained in reference to several liquidators shall apply to him :
- (5.) Upon the appointment of liquidators all the power of the directors shall cease, except in so far as the company in general meeting or the liquidators may sanction the continuance of such powers :
- (6.) When several liquidators are appointed, every power hereby given may be exercised by such one or more of them, as may be determined at the time of their appointment, or in default of such determination by any number not less than two :
- (7.) The liquidators may, without the sanction of the court, exercise all powers by this act given to the official liquidator :
- (8.) The liquidators may exercise the powers hereinbefore given to the court of settling the list of contributories of the company, and any list so settled shall be prima facie evidence of the liability of the persons named therein to be contributories :
- (9.) The liquidators may at any time after the passing of the resolution for winding up the company, and before they have ascertained the sufficiency of the assets of the company, call on all or any of the contributories for the time being settled on the list of contributories to the extent of their liability to pay all or any sums they deem necessary to satisfy the debts and liabilities of the company, and the costs, charges, and expenses of winding it up, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, and the liquidators may in making a call take into consideration the probability that some of the contributories upon whom the same is made may partly or wholly fail to pay their respective portions of the same :
- (10.) The liquidators shall pay the debts of the company, and adjust the rights of the contributories amongst themselves.

Circumstances under which company may be wound up voluntarily.

Commencement of voluntary winding up.

Effect of voluntary winding up on status of company.

Notice of resolution to wind up voluntarily.

Consequences of voluntary winding up.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

Effect of winding up on share capital of company limited by guarantee.

Power of company to delegate authority to appoint liquidators.

Arrangement when binding on creditors.

Power of creditor or contributory to appeal.

Power for liquidators or contributories in voluntary winding up to apply to court.

Power of liquidators to call general meeting.

Power to fill up vacancy in liquidators.

Power of court to appoint liquidators.

Liquidators on conclusion of winding up to make up an account.

Liquidators to report meeting to registrar.

134. Where a company limited by guarantee, and having a capital divided into shares, is being wound up voluntarily, any share capital that may not have been called up shall be deemed to be assets of the company, and to be a specialty debt due from each member to the company to the extent of any sums that may be unpaid on any shares held by him, and payable at such time as may be appointed by the liquidators.

135. A company about to be wound up voluntarily, or in the course of being wound up voluntarily, may, by an extraordinary resolution, delegate to its creditors, or to any committee of its creditors, the power of appointing liquidators or any of them, and supplying any vacancies in the appointment of liquidators, or may by a like resolution enter into any arrangement with respect to the powers to be exercised by the liquidators, and the manner in which they are to be exercised; and any act done by the creditors in pursuance of such delegated power shall have the same effect as if it had been done by the company.

136. Any arrangement entered into between a company about to be wound up voluntarily, or in the course of being wound up voluntarily, and its creditors, shall be binding on the company if sanctioned by an extraordinary resolution, and on the creditors if acceded to by three-fourths in number and value of the creditors, subject to such right of appeal as is hereinafter mentioned.

137. Any creditor or contributory of a company that has in manner aforesaid entered into any arrangement with its creditors may, within three weeks from the date of the completion of such arrangement, appeal to the court against such arrangement, and the court may thereupon, as it thinks just, amend, vary or confirm the same.

138. Where a company is being wound up voluntarily the liquidators or any contributory of the company may apply to the court in England, Ireland or Scotland, or to the lord ordinary on the bills in Scotland in time of vacation to determine any question arising in the matter of such winding up, or to exercise, as respects the enforcing of calls, or in respect of any other matter, all or any of the powers which the court might exercise if the company were being wound up by the court; and the court or lord ordinary in the case aforesaid, if satisfied that the determination of such question, or the required exercise of power, will be just and beneficial, may accede, wholly or partially, to such application, on such terms and subject to such conditions as the court thinks fit, or it may make such other order, interlocutor or decree on such application as the court thinks just.

139. Where a company is being wound up voluntarily the liquidators may, from time to time, during the continuance of such winding up, summon general meetings of the company for the purpose of obtaining the sanction of the company by special resolution or extraordinary resolution, or for any other purposes they think fit; and in the event of the winding up continuing for more than one year, the liquidators shall summon a general meeting of the company at the end of the first year, and of each succeeding year from the commencement of the winding up, or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, and shall lay before such meeting an account showing their acts and dealings, and the manner in which the winding up has been conducted during the preceding year.

140. If any vacancy occurs in the office of liquidators appointed by the company, by death, resignation or otherwise, the company in general meeting may, subject to any arrangement they may have entered into with their creditors, fill up such vacancy, and a general meeting for the purpose of filling up such vacancy may be convened by the continuing liquidators, if any, or by any contributory of the company, and shall be deemed to have been duly held if held in manner prescribed by the regulations of the company, or in such other manner as may, on application by the continuing liquidator, if any, or by any contributory of the company, be determined by the court.

141. If from any cause whatever there is no liquidator acting in the case of a voluntary winding up, the court may, on the application of a contributory, appoint a liquidator or liquidators: the court may also, on due cause shown, remove any liquidator, and appoint another liquidator to act in the matter of a voluntary winding up.

142. As soon as the affairs of the company are fully wound up, the liquidators shall make up an account showing the manner in which such winding up has been conducted, and the property of the company disposed of; and thereupon they shall call a general meeting of the company for the purpose of having the account laid before them and hearing any explanation that may be given by the liquidators: the meeting shall be called by advertisement, specifying the time, place and object of such meeting; and such advertisement shall be published one month at least previously to the meeting, as respects companies registered in England in the London Gazette, and as respects companies registered in Scotland in the Edinburgh Gazette, and as respects companies registered in Ireland in the Dublin Gazette.

143. The liquidators shall make a return to the registrar of such meeting having been held, and of the date at which the same was held, and on the expiration of three months from the date of the registration of such return the company shall be deemed to be dissolved: if the liquidators make default in making such return to the registrar they shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such default continues.

144. All costs, charges and expenses properly incurred in the voluntary winding up of a company, including the remuneration of the liquidators, shall be payable out of the assets of the company in priority to all other claims.

145. The voluntary winding up of a company shall not be a bar to the right of any creditor of such company to have the same wound up by the court, if the court is of opinion that the rights of such creditor will be prejudiced by a voluntary winding up.

146. Where a company is in course of being wound up voluntarily, and proceedings are taken for the purpose of having the same wound up by the court, the court may, if it thinks fit, notwithstanding that it makes an order directing the company to be wound up by the court, provide in such order or in any other order for the adoption of all or any of the proceedings taken in the course of the voluntary winding up.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

Costs of voluntary liquidation.

Saving of rights of creditors.

Power of court to adopt proceedings of voluntary winding up.

Winding up subject to the Supervision of the Court.

147. When a resolution has been passed by a company to wind up voluntarily, the court may make an order directing that the voluntary winding up should continue, but subject to such supervision of the court, and with such liberty for creditors, contributories or others to apply to the court, and generally upon such terms and subject to such conditions as the court thinks just.

148. A petition, praying wholly or in part that a voluntary winding up should continue, but subject to the supervision of the court, and which winding up is hereinafter referred to as a winding up subject to the supervision of the court, shall, for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the court over suits and actions, be deemed to be a petition for winding up the company by the court.

149. The court may, in determining whether a company is to be wound up altogether by the court or subject to the supervision of the court, in the appointment of liquidator or liquidators, and in all other matters relating to the winding up subject to supervision, have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributories as proved to it by any sufficient evidence, and may direct meetings of the creditors or contributories to be summoned, held and regulated in such manner as the court directs for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes, and may appoint a person to act as chairman of any such meeting, and to report the result of such meeting to the court: in the case of creditors, regard shall be had to the value of the debts due to each creditor, and in the case of contributories to the number of votes conferred on each contributory by the regulations of the company.

150. Where any order is made by the court for a winding up subject to the supervision of the court, the court may, in such order or in any subsequent order, appoint any additional liquidator or liquidators; and any liquidators so appointed by the court shall have the same powers, be subject to the same obligations, and in all respects stand in the same position as if they had been appointed by the company: the court may from time to time remove any liquidators so appointed by the court, and fill up any vacancy occasioned by such removal, or by death or resignation.

151. Where an order is made for a winding up subject to the supervision of the court, the liquidators appointed to conduct such winding up may, subject to any restrictions imposed by the court, exercise all their powers, without the sanction or intervention of the court, in the same manner as if the company were being wound up altogether voluntarily; but, save as aforesaid, any order made by the court for a winding up, subject to the supervision of the court, shall for all purposes, including the staying of actions, suits, and other proceedings, be deemed to be an order of the court for winding up the company by the court, and shall confer full authority on the court to make calls, or to enforce calls made by the liquidators, and to exercise all other powers which it might have exercised if an order had been made for winding up the company altogether by the court; and in the construction of the provisions whereby the court is empowered to direct any act or thing to be done to or in favour of the official liquidators, the expression official liquidators shall be deemed to mean the liquidators conducting the winding up, subject to the supervision of the court.

152. Where an order has been made for the winding up of a company subject to the supervision of the court, and such order is afterwards superseded by an order directing the company to be wound up compulsorily, the court may in such last-mentioned order, or in any subsequent order, appoint the voluntary liquidators or any of them, either provisionally or permanently, and either with or without the addition of any other persons, to be official liquidators.

Supplemental Provisions.

153. Where any company is being wound up by the court, or subject to the supervision of the court, all dispositions of the property, effects and things in action of the company, and every transfer of shares, or alteration in the status of the members of the company made between the commencement of the winding up and the order for winding up, shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be void.

Power of court, on application, to direct winding up, subject to supervision.

Petition for winding up, subject to supervision.

Court may have regard to wishes of creditors.

Power to court to appoint additional liquidators in winding up, subject to supervision.

Effect of order of court for winding up subject to supervision.

Appointment in certain cases of voluntary liquidators to office of official liquidators.

Dispositions after the commencement of the winding up avoided.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

The books of the company to be evidence.

As to disposal of books, accounts, and documents of the company.

Inspection of books.

Power of assignee to sue.

Debts of all descriptions to be proved.

General scheme of liquidation may be sanctioned.

Power to compromise.

Power for liquidators to accept shares, &c., as a consideration for sale of property of company.

154. Where any company is being wound up, all books, accounts and documents of the company and of the liquidators shall, as between the contributories of the company, be prima facie evidence of the truth of all matters purporting to be therein recorded.

155. Where any company has been wound up under this act and is about to be dissolved, the books, accounts and documents of the company and of the liquidators may be disposed of in the following way; (that is to say,) where the company has been wound up by or subject to the supervision of the court, in such way as the court directs, and where the company has been wound up voluntarily in such way as the company by an extraordinary resolution directs; but after the lapse of five years from the date of such dissolution, no responsibility shall rest on the company, or the liquidators, or any one to whom the custody of such books, accounts and documents has been committed, by reason that the same, or any of them, cannot be made forthcoming to any party or parties claiming to be interested therein.

156. Where an order has been made for winding up a company by the court, or subject to the supervision of the court, the court may make such order for the inspection by the creditors and contributories of the company of its books and papers as the court thinks just, and any books and papers in the possession of the company may be inspected by creditors or contributories, in conformity with the order of the court, but not further or otherwise.

157. Any person to whom any thing in action belonging to the company is assigned, in pursuance of this act, may bring or defend any action or suit relating to such thing in action in his own name.

158. In the event of any company being wound up under this act, all debts payable on a contingency, and all claims against the company, present or future, certain or contingent, ascertained or sounding only in damages, shall be admissible to proof against the company, a just estimate being made, so far as is possible, of the value of all such debts or claims as may be subject to any contingency or sound only in damages, or for some other reason do not bear a certain value.

159. The liquidators may, with the sanction of the court, where the company is being wound up by the court or subject to the supervision of the court, and with the sanction of an extraordinary resolution of the company where the company is being wound up altogether voluntarily, pay any classes of creditors in full, or make such compromise or other arrangement as the liquidators may deem expedient with creditors or persons claiming to be creditors, or persons having or alleging themselves to have any claim, present or future, certain or contingent, ascertained or sounding only in damages, against the company, or whereby the company may be rendered liable.

160. The liquidators may, with the sanction of the court, where the company is being wound up by the court or subject to the supervision of the court, and with the sanction of an extraordinary resolution of the company where the company is being wound up altogether voluntarily, compromise all calls and liabilities to calls, debts, and liabilities capable of resulting in debts, and all claims, whether present or future, certain or contingent, ascertained or sounding only in damages, subsisting or supposed to subsist between the company and any contributory or alleged contributory, or other debtor or person apprehending liability to the company, and all questions in any way relating to or affecting the assets of the company or the winding up of the company, upon the receipt of such sums, payable at such times, and generally upon such terms, as may be agreed upon, with power for the liquidators to take any security for the discharge of such debts or liabilities, and to give complete discharges in respect of all or any such calls, debts, or liabilities.

161. Where any company is proposed to be or is in the course of being wound up altogether voluntarily, and the whole or a portion of its business or property is proposed to be transferred or sold to another company, the liquidators of the first-mentioned company may, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company by whom they were appointed, conferring either a general authority on the liquidators, or an authority in respect of any particular arrangement, receive in compensation or part compensation for such transfer or sale, shares, policies, or other like interests in such other company, for the purpose of distribution amongst the members of the company being wound up, or may enter into any other arrangement whereby the members of the company being wound up may, in lieu of receiving cash, shares, policies, or other like interests, or in addition thereto, participate in the profits of or receive any other benefit from the purchasing company; and any sale made or arrangement entered into by the liquidators in pursuance of this section shall be binding on the members of the company being wound up; subject to this proviso, that if any member of the company being wound up who has not voted in favour of the special resolution passed by the company of which he is a member at either of the meetings held for passing the same expresses his dissent from any such special resolution in writing addressed to the liquidators or one of them, and left at the registered office of the company not later than seven days after the date of the meeting at which such special resolution was passed, such dissentient member may require the liquidators to do one of the following things as the liquidators may prefer; that is to say, either to abstain from carrying such resolution into effect, or to purchase the interest held by such dissentient member at a price to be determined in manner hereinafter mentioned, such purchase money to be paid before the company is dissolved, and to be raised by the liquidators in such manner as may be determined by special resolution; no special resolution shall be deemed invalid for the purposes of this section by reason that it is passed antecedently to or concurrently with any resolution for winding up the company, or for appointing liquidators; but if an order be made within a year for winding up the company by or subject to the supervision of the court, such resolution shall not be of any validity unless it is sanctioned by the court.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

162. The price to be paid for the purchase of the interest of any dissentient member may be determined by agreement, but if the parties dispute about the same, such dispute shall be settled by arbitration, and for the purposes of such arbitration the provisions of "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration (a), shall be incorporated with this act; and in the construction of such provisions this act shall be deemed to be the special act, and "the company" shall mean the company that is being wound up, and any appointment by the said incorporated provisions directed to be made under the hand of the secretary, or any two of the directors, may be made under the hand of the liquidator, if only one, or any two or more of the liquidators if more than one.

Mode of determining price.

163. Where any company is being wound up by the court or subject to the supervision of the court, any attachment, sequestration, distress, or execution put in force (b) against the estate or effects of the company after the commencement of the winding up shall be void to all intents.

Certain attachments, sequestrations, and executions to be void.

164. Any such conveyance, mortgage, delivery of goods, payment, execution, or other act relating to property as would, if made or done by or against any individual trader, be deemed in the event of his bankruptcy to have been made or done by way of undue or fraudulent preference of the creditors of such trader, shall, if made or done by or against any company, be deemed, in the event of such company being wound up under this act, to have been made or done by way of undue or fraudulent preference of the creditors of such company, and shall be invalid accordingly; and for the purposes of this section the presentation of a petition for winding up a company shall in the case of a company being wound up by the court or subject to the supervision of the court, and a resolution for winding up the company shall in the case of a voluntary winding up, be deemed to correspond with the act of bankruptcy in the case of an individual trader; and any conveyance or assignment made by any company formed under this act of all its estate and effects to trustees for the benefit of all its creditors shall be void to all intents.

Fraudulent preference.

165. Where, in the course of the winding up of any company under this act, it appears that any past or present director, manager, official or other liquidator, or any officer of such company, has misapplied or retained in his own hands or become liable or accountable for any monies of the company or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company, the court may, on the application of any liquidator, or of any creditor or contributory of the company, notwithstanding that the offence is one for which the offender is criminally responsible, examine into the conduct of such director, manager, or other officer, and compel him to repay any monies so misapplied or retained, or for which he has become liable or accountable, together with interest after such rate as the court thinks just, or to contribute such sums of money to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of such misapplication, retainer, misfeasance, or breach of trust, as the court thinks just.

Power of court to assess damages against delinquent directors and officers.

166. If any director, officer, or contributory of any company wound up under this act destroys, mutilates, alters, or falsifies any books, papers, writings, or securities, or makes or is privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any register, book of account, or other document belonging to the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person, every person so offending shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon being convicted shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Penalty on falsification of books.

167. Where any order is made for winding up a company by the court or subject to the supervision of the court, if it appear in the course of such winding up that any past or present director, manager, officer, or member of such company has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally responsible, the court may, on the application of any person interested in such winding up, or of its own motion, direct the official liquidators, or the liquidators, (as the case may be,) to institute and conduct a prosecution or prosecutions for such offence, and may order the costs and expenses to be paid out of the assets of the company.

Prosecution of delinquent directors in the case of winding up by court.

168. Where a company is being wound up altogether voluntarily, if it appear to the liquidators conducting such winding up that any past or present director, manager, officer, or member of such company has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally responsible, it shall be lawful for the liquidators, with the previous sanction of the court, to prosecute such offender; and all expenses properly incurred by them in such prosecution shall be payable out of the assets of the company in priority to all other liabilities.

Prosecution of delinquent directors, &c., in case of voluntary winding up.

APPENDIX.

Part IV.

Penalty of perjury.

169. If any person, upon any examination upon oath or affirmation authorized under this act, or in any affidavit, deposition or solemn affirmation in or about the winding up of any company under this act, or otherwise in or about any matter arising under this act, wilfully and corruptly gives false evidence, he shall, upon conviction, be liable to the penalties of wilful perjury.

Power of Courts to make Rules.

Power of lord chancellor of Great Britain to make rules.

170. In England the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls, and any one of the Vice-Chancellors for the time being, or with the advice and consent of any two of the Vice-Chancellors, may, as often as circumstances require, make such rules (c) concerning the mode of proceeding to be had for winding up a company in the Court of Chancery as may from time to time seem necessary; but until such rules are made the general practice of the Court of Chancery, including the practice hitherto in use in winding up companies, shall, so far as the same is applicable and not inconsistent with this act, apply to all proceedings for winding up a company.

Power of Court of Session in Scotland to make rules.

171. In Scotland the court of session may make such rules concerning the mode of winding up as may be necessary by act of sederunt; but, until such rules are made, the general practice of the court of session in suits pending in such court shall, so far as the same is applicable and not inconsistent with this act, apply to all proceedings for winding up a company, and official liquidators shall in all respects be considered as possessing the same powers as any trustee on a bankrupt estate.

Power to make rules in Stannaries Court.

172. The vice-warden of the stannaries may from time to time, with the consent provided for by section twenty-three of the act of eighteenth of Victoria, chapter thirty-two, make rules for carrying into effect the powers conferred by this act upon the court of the vice-warden, but, subject to such rules, the general practice of the said court and of the registrar's office in the said court, including the present practice of the said court in winding up companies, may be applied to all proceedings under this act; the said vice-warden may likewise, with the same consent, make from time to time rules for specifying the fees to be taken in his said court in proceedings under this act; and any rules so made shall be of the same force as if they had been enacted in the body of this act; and the fees paid in respect of proceedings taken under this act, including fees taken under "The Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856," in the matter of winding up companies, shall be applied exclusively towards payment of such additional officers, or such increase of the salaries of existing officers, or pensions to retired officers, or such other needful expenses of the court, as the lord warden of the stannaries shall from time to time, on the application of the vice-warden or otherwise, think fit to direct, sanction, or assign, and meanwhile shall be kept as a separate fund apart from the ordinary fees of the court arising from other business, to await such direction and order of the lord warden herein, and to accumulate by investment in government securities until the whole shall have been so appropriated.

Power of lord chancellor of Ireland to make rules.

173. In Ireland the Lord Chancellor of Ireland may, as respects the winding up of companies in Ireland, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls in Ireland, exercise the same power of making rules as is by this act hereinbefore given to the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain; but until such rules are made the general practice of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, including the practice hitherto in use in Ireland in winding up companies, shall, so far as the same is applicable and not inconsistent with this act, apply to all proceedings for winding up a company.

PART V.

REGISTRATION OFFICE.

Constitution of registration office.

174. The registration of companies under this act shall be conducted as follows; (that is to say,)

- (1.) The Board of Trade may from time to time appoint such registrars, assistant registrars, clerks and servants as they may think necessary for the registration of companies under this act, and remove them at pleasure:
- (2.) The Board of Trade may make such regulations as they think fit with respect to the duties to be performed by any such registrars, assistant registrars, clerks and servants as aforesaid:
- (3.) The Board of Trade may from time to time determine the places at which offices for the registration of companies are to be established, so that there be at all times maintained in each of the three parts of the United Kingdom at least one such office, and that no company shall be registered except at an office within that part of the United Kingdom in which by the memorandum of association the registered office of the company is declared to be established; and the board may require that the registrar's office of the court of the vice-warden of the stan-

(c) See the rules made Nov. 11, 1862, 32 L. J. (Ch.).

naries shall be one of the offices for the registration of companies formed for working mines within the jurisdiction of the court :

- (4.) The Board of Trade may from time to time direct a seal or seals to be prepared for the authentication of any documents required for or connected with the registration of companies :
- (5.) Every person may inspect the documents kept by the registrar of joint stock companies ; and there shall be paid for such inspection such fees as may be appointed by the Board of Trade, not exceeding one shilling for each inspection ; and any person may require a certificate of the incorporation of any company, or a copy or extract of any other document or any part of any other document, to be certified by the registrar ; and there shall be paid for such certificate of incorporation, certified copy or extract such fees as the Board of Trade may appoint, not exceeding five shillings for the certificate of incorporation, and not exceeding sixpence for each folio of such copy or extract, or in Scotland for each sheet of two hundred words :
- (6.) The existing registrar, assistant registrars, clerks and other officers, and servants in the office for the registration of joint stock companies shall, during the pleasure of the Board of Trade, hold the offices and receive the salaries hitherto held and received by them, but they shall in the execution of their duties conform to any regulations that may be issued by the Board of Trade :
- (7.) There shall be paid to any registrar, assistant registrar, clerk or servant that may hereafter be employed in the registration of joint stock companies such salary as the Board of Trade may, with the sanction of the commissioners of the Treasury, direct :
- (8.) Whenever any act is herein directed to be done to or by the registrar of joint stock companies, such act shall, until the Board of Trade otherwise directs, be done in England to or by the existing registrar of joint stock companies, or in his absence to or by such person as the Board of Trade may for the time being authorize ; in Scotland to or by the existing registrar of joint stock companies in Scotland ; and in Ireland to or by the existing assistant registrar of joint stock companies for Ireland, or by such person as the Board of Trade may for the time being authorize in Scotland or Ireland in the absence of the registrar ; but in the event of the Board of Trade altering the constitution of the existing registry office, such act shall be done to or by such officer or officers and at such place or places with reference to the local situation of the registered offices of the companies to be registered as the Board of Trade may appoint.

PART VI.

APPLICATION OF ACT TO COMPANIES REGISTERED UNDER THE JOINT STOCK COMPANIES ACTS.

175. The expression "Joint Stock Companies Acts" as used in this act shall mean "The Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856," "The Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857," "The Joint Stock Banking Companies Act, 1857," and "The Act to enable Joint Stock Banking Companies to be formed on the Principle of Limited Liability," or any one or more of such acts, as the case may require ; but shall not include the act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and ten, and intituled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies."

Definition of joint stock companies acts.

176. Subject as hereinafter mentioned, this act, with the exception of table A. in the first schedule, shall apply to companies formed and registered under the said joint stock companies acts, or any of them, in the same manner in the case of a limited company as if such company had been formed and registered under this act as a company limited by shares, and in the case of a company other than a limited company as if such company had been formed and registered as an unlimited company under this act, with this qualification, that wherever reference is made expressly or impliedly to the date of registration, such date shall be deemed to refer to the date at which such companies were respectively registered under the said joint stock companies acts or any of them, and the power of altering regulations by special resolution given by this act shall, in the case of any company formed and registered under the said joint stock companies acts or any of them, extend to altering any provisions contained in the table marked B. annexed to "The Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856," and shall also in the case of an unlimited company formed and registered as last aforesaid extend to altering any regulations relating to the amount of capital or its distribution into shares, notwithstanding such regulations are contained in the memorandum of association.

Application of act to companies formed under joint stock companies acts.

177. This act shall apply to companies registered but not formed under the said joint stock companies acts or any of them in the same manner as it is hereinafter declared to apply to companies registered but not formed under this act, with this qualification, that Application of act to companies registered under joint stock companies acts.

APPENDIX.

Part VI.

Mode of transferring shares.

wherever reference is made expressly or impliedly to the date of registration, such date shall be deemed to refer to the date at which such companies were respectively registered under the said joint stock companies acts or any of them.

178. Any company registered under the said joint stock companies acts or any of them may cause its shares to be transferred in manner hitherto in use, or in such other manner as the company may direct.

PART VII.

COMPANIES AUTHORIZED TO REGISTER UNDER THIS ACT.

Regulations as to registration of existing companies.

179. The following regulations shall be observed with respect to the registration of companies under this part of this act; (that is to say,)

- (1.) No company having the liability of its members limited by act of Parliament or letters patent, and not being a joint stock company as hereinafter defined, shall register under this act in pursuance of this part thereof:
- (2.) No company having the liability of its members limited by act of Parliament or by letters patent shall register under this act in pursuance of this part thereof as an unlimited company, or as a company limited by guarantee:
- (3.) No company that is not a joint stock company as hereinafter defined, shall in pursuance of this part of this act register under this act as a company limited by shares:
- (4.) No company shall register under this act in pursuance of this part thereof unless an assent to its so registering is given by a majority of such of its members as may be present, personally or by proxy, in cases where proxies are allowed by the regulations of the company, at some general meeting summoned for the purpose:
- (5.) Where a company not having the liability of its members limited by act of Parliament or letters patent is about to register as a limited company, the majority required to assent as aforesaid shall consist of not less than three-fourths of the members present, personally or by proxy, at such last-mentioned general meeting:
- (6.) Where a company is about to register as a company limited by guarantee the assent to its being so registered shall be accompanied by a resolution declaring that each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company, in the event of the same being wound up, during the time that he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before the time at which he ceased to be a member, and of the costs, charges and expenses of winding up the company, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding a specified amount:

In computing any majority under this section when a poll is demanded regard shall be had to the number of votes to which each member is entitled according to the regulations of the company of which he is a member.

Companies capable of being registered.

180. With the above exceptions, and subject to the foregoing regulations, every company existing at the time of the commencement of this act, including any company registered under the said joint stock companies acts, consisting of seven or more members, and any company hereafter formed in pursuance of any act of Parliament other than this act, or of letters patent, or being a company engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the stannaries, or being otherwise duly constituted by law, and consisting of seven or more members, may at any time hereafter register itself under this act as an unlimited company, or a company limited by shares, or a company limited by guarantee; and no such registration shall be invalid by reason that it has taken place with a view to the company being wound up.

Definition of joint stock company.

181. For the purposes of this part of this act, so far as the same relates to the description of companies empowered to register as companies limited by shares, a joint stock company shall be deemed to be a company having a permanent paid-up or nominal capital of fixed amount, divided into shares, also of fixed amount, or held and transferable as stock, or divided and held partly in one way and partly in the other, and formed on the principle of having for its members the holders of shares in such capital, or the holders of such stock, and no other persons; and such company when registered with limited liability under this act shall be deemed to be a company limited by shares.

Proviso as to banking company.

182. No banking company claiming to issue notes in the United Kingdom shall be entitled to limited liability in respect of such issue, but shall continue subject to unlimited liability in respect thereof, and, if necessary, the assets shall be marshalled for the benefit of the general creditors, and the members shall be liable for the whole amount of the issue, in addition to the sum for which they would be liable as members of a limited company.

183. Previously to the registration in pursuance of this part of this act of any joint stock company, there shall be delivered to the registrar the following documents; (that is to say,)

APPENDIX.

Part VII.

Requisitions for registration by companies.

- (1.) A list showing the names, addresses and occupations of all persons who on a day named in such list, and not being more than six clear days before the day of registration, were members of such company, with the addition of the shares held by such persons respectively, distinguishing, in cases where such shares are numbered, each share by its number :
- (2.) A copy of any act of Parliament, royal charter, letters patent, deed of settlement, contract of copartnery, cost book regulations, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company :
- (3.) If any such joint stock company is intended to be registered as a limited company, the above list and copy shall be accompanied by a statement specifying the following particulars ; (that is to say,)

The nominal capital of the company and the number of shares into which it is divided :

The number of shares taken and the amount paid on each share :

The name of the company, with the addition of the word "limited" as the last word thereof :

With the addition, in the case of a company intended to be registered as a company limited by guarantee, of the resolution declaring the amount of the guarantee.

184. Previously to the registration in pursuance of this part of this act of any company not being a joint stock company there shall be delivered to the registrar a list showing the names, addresses and occupations of the directors or other managers (if any) of the company, also a copy of any act of Parliament, letters patent, deed of settlement, contract of copartnery, cost book regulations, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company, with the addition, in the case of a company intended to be registered as a company limited by guarantee, of the resolution declaring the amount of guarantee.

Requisitions for registration by existing company not being a joint stock company.

185. Where a joint stock company authorized to register under this act has had the whole or any portion of its capital converted into stock, such company shall, as to the capital so converted, instead of delivering to the registrar a statement of shares, deliver to the registrar a statement of the amount of stock belonging to the company, and the names of the persons who were holders of such stock, on some day to be named in the statement, not more than six clear days before the day of registration.

Power for existing company to register amount of stock instead of shares.

186. The lists of members and directors and any other particulars relating to the company hereby required to be delivered to the registrar, shall be verified by a declaration of the directors of the company delivering the same, or any two of them, or of any two other principal officers of the company, made in pursuance of the act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late majesty king William the fourth, chapter sixty-two.

Authentication of statements of existing companies.

187. The registrar may require such evidence as he thinks necessary for the purpose of satisfying himself whether an existing company is or not a joint stock company as hereinbefore defined.

Registrar may require evidence as to nature of company.

188. Every banking company existing at the date of the passing of this act which registers itself as a limited company shall, at least thirty days previous to obtaining a certificate of registration with limited liability, give notice that it is intended so to register the same to every person and partnership firm who have a banking account with the company, and such notice shall be given either by delivering the same to such person or firm, or leaving the same or putting the same into the post addressed to him or them at such address as shall have been last communicated or otherwise become known as his or their address to or by the company ; and in case the company omits to give any such notice as is hereinbefore required to be given, then as between the company and the person or persons only who are for the time being interested in the account in respect of which such notice ought to have been given, and so far as respects such account and all variations thereof down to the time at which such notice shall be given, but not further or otherwise, the certificate of registration with limited liability shall have no operation.

On registration of banking company with limited liability, notice to be given to customers.

189. No fees shall be charged in respect of the registration in pursuance of this part of this act of any company in cases where such company is not registered as a limited company, or where previously to its being registered as a limited company the liability of the shareholders was limited by some other act of Parliament or by letters patent.

Exemption of certain companies from payment of fees.

190. Any company authorized by this part of this act to register with limited liability shall, for the purpose of obtaining registration with limited liability, change its name, by adding thereto the word "limited."

Power to company to change name.

191. Upon compliance with the requisitions in this part of this act contained with respect to registration, and on payment of such fees, if any, as are payable under the tables marked B. and C. in the first schedule hereto, the registrar shall certify under his hand that the company so applying for registration is incorporated as a company under this act, and, in the case of a limited company, that it is limited, and thereupon such company shall be incorporated, and shall have perpetual succession and a common seal, with power to hold lands ; and any banking company in Scotland so incorporated shall be deemed and taken to be a bank incorporated, constituted or established by or under act of Parliament.

192. A certificate of incorporation given at any time to any company registered in pursuance of this part of this act, shall be conclusive evidence that all the requisitions herein contained in respect of registration under this act have been complied with, and that the company is authorized to be registered under this act as a limited or unlimited company, as the case may be, and the date of incorporation mentioned in such certificate shall be deemed to be the date at which the company is incorporated under this act.

193. All such property, real and personal, including all interests and rights in, to and out of property, real and personal, and including obligations and things in action, as may belong to or be vested in the company at the date of its registration under this act, shall, on registration, pass to and vest in the company as incorporated under this act for all the estate and interest of the company therein.

194. The registration in pursuance of this part of this act of any company shall not affect or prejudice the liability of such company to have enforced against it, or its right to enforce, any debt or obligation incurred, or any contract entered into, by, to, with or on behalf of such company previously to such registration.

195. All such actions, suits and other legal proceedings as may at the time of the registration of any company registered in pursuance of this part of this act, have been commenced by or against such company, or the public officer or any member thereof, may be continued in the same manner as if such registration had not taken place; nevertheless, execution shall not issue against the effects of any individual member of such company upon any judgment, decree or order obtained in any action, suit or proceeding so commenced as aforesaid; but in the event of the property and effects of the company being insufficient to satisfy such judgment, decree or order, an order may be obtained for winding up the company.

196. When a company is registered under this act in pursuance of this part thereof, all provisions contained in any act of Parliament, deed of settlement, contract of copartnership, cost book regulations, letters patent or other instrument constituting or regulating the company, including, in the case of a company registered as a company limited by guarantee, the resolution declaring the amount of the guarantee, shall be deemed to be conditions and regulations of the company, in the same manner and with the same incidents as if they were contained in a registered memorandum of association and articles of association; and all the provisions of this act shall apply to such company and the members, contributories and creditors thereof, in the same manner in all respects as if it had been formed under this act, subject to the provisions following; (that is to say,)

- (1.) That table A. in the first schedule to this act shall not, unless adopted by special resolution, apply to any company registered under this act in pursuance of this part thereof:
- (2.) That the provisions of this act relating to the numbering of shares shall not apply to any joint stock company whose shares are not numbered:
- (3.) That no company shall have power to alter any provision contained in any act of Parliament relating to the company:
- (4.) That no company shall have power, without the sanction of the Board of Trade, to alter any provision contained in any letters patent relating to the company:
- (5.) That in the event of the company being wound up, every person shall be a contributory, in respect of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted prior to registration, who is liable, at law or in equity, to pay or contribute to the payment of any debt or liability of the company contracted prior to registration, or to pay or contribute to the payment of any sum for the adjustment of the rights of the members amongst themselves in respect of any such debt or liability; or to pay or contribute to the payment of the costs, charges and expenses of winding up the company, so far as relates to such debts or liabilities as aforesaid; and every such contributory shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company, in the course of the winding up, all sums due from him in respect of any such liability as aforesaid; and in the event of the death, bankruptcy or insolvency of any such contributory as last aforesaid, or marriage of any such contributory being a female, the provisions hereinbefore contained with respect to the representatives, heirs and devisees of deceased contributories, and with reference to the assignees of bankrupt or insolvent contributories, and to the husbands of married contributories, shall apply:
- (6.) That nothing herein contained shall authorize any company to alter any such provisions contained in any deed of settlement, contract of copartnership, cost book regulations, letters patent or other instrument constituting or regulating the company, as would, if such company had originally been formed under this act, have been contained in the memorandum of association, and are not authorized to be altered by this act:

But nothing herein contained shall derogate from any power of altering its constitution or regulations which may be vested in any company registering under this act in pursuance of this part thereof by virtue of any act of Parliament, deed of settlement, contract of copartnership, letters patent or other instrument constituting or regulating the company.

197. The court may, at any time after the presentation of a petition for winding up a company registered in pursuance of this part of this act, and before making an order for winding up the company, upon the application by motion of any creditor of the company, restrain further proceedings in any action, suit or legal proceeding against any contributory of the company as well as against the company as hereinbefore provided, upon such terms as the court thinks fit.

198. Where an order has been made for winding up a company registered in pursuance of this part of the act, in addition to the provisions hereinbefore contained, it is hereby further provided that no suit, action or other legal proceeding shall be commenced or proceeded with against any contributory of the company in respect of any debt of the company, except with the leave of the court, and subject to such terms as the court may impose.

PART VIII.

APPLICATION OF ACT TO UNREGISTERED COMPANIES.

199. Subject as hereinafter mentioned, any partnership, association or company, except railway companies incorporated by act of Parliament, consisting of more than seven members, and not registered under this act, and hereinafter included under the term unregistered company, may be wound up under this act, and all the provisions of this act with respect to winding up shall apply to such company, with the following exceptions and additions:

Winding up of unregistered companies.

- (1.) An unregistered company shall, for the purpose of determining the court having jurisdiction in the matter of the winding up, be deemed to be registered in that part of the United Kingdom where its principal place of business is situate; or, if it has a principal place of business situate in more than one part of the United Kingdom, then in each part of the United Kingdom where it has a principal place of business; moreover the principal place of business of an unregistered company, or (where it has a principal place of business situate in more than one part of the United Kingdom) such one of its principal places of business as is situate in that part of the United Kingdom in which proceedings are being instituted, shall for all the purposes of the winding up of such company be deemed to be the registered office of the company:
- (2.) No unregistered company shall be wound up under this act voluntarily or subject to the supervision of the court:
- (3.) The circumstances under which an unregistered company may be wound up are as follows; (that is to say,)
 - (a.) Whenever the company is dissolved, or has ceased to carry on business, or is carrying on business only for the purpose of winding up its affairs;
 - (b.) Whenever the company is unable to pay its debts;
 - (c.) Whenever the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up:
- (4.) An unregistered company shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to be unable to pay its debts,
 - (a.) Whenever a creditor to whom the company is indebted, at law or in equity, by assignment or otherwise, in a sum exceeding fifty pounds then due, has served on the company, by leaving the same at the principal place of business of the company, or by delivering to the secretary or some director or principal officer of the company, or by otherwise serving the same in such manner as the court may approve or direct, a demand under his hand requiring the company to pay the sum so due, and the company has for the space of three weeks succeeding the service of such demand neglected to pay such sum, or to secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor;
 - (b.) Whenever any action, suit or other proceeding has been instituted against any member of the company for any debt or demand due, or claimed to be due, from the company, or from him in his character of member of the company, and notice in writing of the institution of such action, suit or other legal proceeding having been served upon the company by leaving the same at the principal place of business of the company, or by delivering it to the secretary, or some director, manager, or principal officer of the company, or by otherwise serving the same in such manner as the court may approve or direct, the company has not, within ten days after service of such notice, paid, secured, or compounded for such debt or demand, or procured such action, suit or other legal proceeding to be stayed, or indemnified the defendant to his reasonable satisfaction against such action, suit or other legal proceeding, and against all costs, damages and expenses to be incurred by him by reason of the same;
 - (c.) Whenever, in England or Ireland, execution or other process issued on a judgment, decree or order obtained in any court in favour of any creditor in any proceeding at law or in equity instituted by such creditor against the company, or any member thereof as such, or against any person authorized to be sued as nominal defendant on behalf of the company, is returned unsatisfied;

(d.) Whenever, in the case of an unregistered company engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the stannaries, a customary decree or order absolute for the sale of the machinery, materials and effects of such mine has been made in a creditor's suit in the court of the vice-warden;

(e.) Whenever, in Scotland, the induciæ of a charge for payment on an extract decree, or an extract registered bond, or an extract registered protest, have expired without payment being made;

(f.) Whenever it is otherwise proved to the satisfaction of the court that the company is unable to pay its debts.

200. In the event of an unregistered company being wound up every person shall be deemed to be a contributory who is liable, at law or in equity, to pay or contribute to the payment of any debt or liability of the company, or to pay or contribute to the payment of any sum for the adjustment of the rights of the members amongst themselves, or to pay or contribute to the payment of the costs, charges and expenses of winding up the company, and every such contributory shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company in the course of the winding up all sums due from him in respect of any such liability as aforesaid; but in the event of the death, bankruptcy or insolvency of any contributory, or marriage of any female contributory, the provisions hereinbefore contained with respect to the personal representatives, heirs and devisees of a deceased contributory, and to the assignees of a bankrupt or insolvent contributory, and to the husband of married contributories, shall apply.

201. The court may, at any time after the presentation of a petition for winding up an unregistered company, and before making an order for winding up the company, upon the application of any creditor of the company, restrain further proceedings in any action, suit or proceeding against any contributory of the company, or against the company as hereinbefore provided, upon such terms as the court thinks fit.

202. Where an order has been made for winding up an unregistered company, in addition to the provisions hereinbefore contained in the case of companies formed under this act, it is hereby further provided that no suit, action or other legal proceeding shall be commenced or proceeded with against any contributory of the company in respect of any debt of the company, except with the leave of the court, and subject to such terms as the court may impose.

203. If any unregistered company has no power to sue and be sued in a common name, or if for any reason it appears expedient, the court may by the order made for winding up such company, or by any subsequent order, direct that all such property, real and personal, including all interest, claims and rights into and out of property, real and personal, and including things in action, as may belong to or be vested in the company, or to or in any person or persons on trust for or on behalf of the company, or any part of such property, is to vest in the official liquidator or official liquidators by his or their official name or names, and thereupon the same or such part thereof as may be specified in the order shall vest accordingly; and the official liquidator or official liquidators may, in his or their official name or names, or in such name or names, and after giving such indemnity as the court directs, bring or defend any actions, suits or other legal proceeding relating to any property vested in him or them, or any actions, suits or other legal proceedings necessary to be brought or defended for the purposes of effectually winding up the company and recovering the property thereof.

204. The provisions made by this part of the act with respect to unregistered companies shall be deemed to be made in addition to and not in restriction of any provisions hereinbefore contained with respect to winding up companies by the court, and the court or official liquidator may, in addition to anything contained in this part of the act, exercise any powers or do any act in the case of unregistered companies which might be exercised or done by it or him in winding up companies formed under this act; but an unregistered company shall not, except in the event of its being wound up, be deemed to be a company under this act, and then only to the extent provided by this part of this act.

PART IX.

REPEAL OF ACTS, AND TEMPORARY PROVISIONS.

Repeal of acts.

205. After the commencement of this act there shall be repealed the several acts specified in the first part of the third schedule hereto, with this qualification, that so much of the said acts as is set forth in the second part of the said third schedule shall be hereby re-enacted and continue in force as if unrepealed.

Saving clause as to repeal.

206. No repeal hereby enacted shall affect,

(1.) Anything duly done under any acts hereby repealed:

(a) Cox's case, 33 L. J. (Ch.) 145.

(b) Ex parte Parry, 33 L. J. (Ch.) 245.

- (2.) The incorporation of any company registered under any act hereby repealed :
- (3.) Any right or privilege acquired or liability incurred under any act hereby repealed :
- (4.) Any penalty, forfeiture or other punishment incurred in respect of any offence against any act hereby repealed :
- (5.) Table B. in the schedule annexed to the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856, or any part thereof, so far as the same applies to any company existing at the time of the commencement of this act.

207. Where previously to the commencement of this act an order has been made for winding up a company under any acts or act hereby repealed, or a resolution has been passed for winding up a company voluntarily, such company shall be wound up in the same manner and with the same incidents as if this act were not passed, and for the purposes of such winding up such repealed acts or act shall be deemed to remain in full force.

Saving of existing proceedings for winding up.

208. Where previously to the commencement of this act any conveyance, mortgage or other deed has been made in pursuance of any act hereby repealed, such deed shall be of the same force as if this act had not passed, and for the purposes of such deed such repealed act shall be deemed to remain in full force.

Saving of conveyance deeds.

209. Every insurance company completely registered under the act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and ten, intituled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies," shall on or before the second day of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and every other company required by any act hereby repealed to register under the said Joint Stock Companies Acts, or one of such acts, and which has not so registered, shall, on or before the expiration of the thirty-first day from the commencement of this act, register itself as a company under this act, in manner and subject to the regulations hereinbefore contained, with this exception, that no company completely registered under the said act of the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, shall be required to deliver to the registrar a copy of its deed of settlement; and for the purpose of enabling such insurance companies as are mentioned in this section to register under this act, this act shall be deemed to come into operation immediately on the passing thereof; nevertheless the registration of such companies shall not have any effect until the time of the commencement of this act. No fees shall be charged in respect of the registration of any company required to register by this section.

Compulsory registration of certain companies.

210. If any company required by the last section to register under this act makes default in complying with the provisions thereof, then, from and after the day upon which such company is required to register under this act, until the day on which such company is registered under this act (which it is empowered to do at any time), the following consequences shall ensue; (that is to say,)

Penalty on company not registering.

21 Vict. c. 14, s. 28.

(1.) The company shall be incapable of suing either at law or in equity, but shall not be incapable of being made a defendant to a suit either at law or in equity :

(2.) No dividend shall be payable to any shareholder in such company :

(3.) Each director or manager of the company shall for each day during which the company so being in default carries on business incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and such penalty may be recovered by any person, whether a shareholder or not in the company, and be applied by him to his own use :

Nevertheless, such default shall not render the company so being in default illegal, nor subject it to any penalty or disability, other than as specified in this section; and registration under this act shall cancel any penalty or forfeiture, and put an end to any disability which any company may have incurred under any act hereby repealed by reason of its not having registered under the said Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, or one of them.

211. Upon the application of the directors of any company registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts as hereinbefore defined, or any of them, made within one year after the date of the commencement of this act, sanctioned by a resolution passed at an extraordinary general meeting, but subject to the restrictions hereinafter mentioned, the Board of Trade shall have authority by their certificate in writing to change the registered office of any such company from any one part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to any other part thereof, and the registrar of joint stock companies with whom the memorandum of registration of such company has been registered shall, upon receipt of such certificate, note in writing upon the margin or at the foot of the said memorandum the name of the place to which such registered office is to be transferred, and the day upon which such transfer is, pursuant to such certificate, to take place, and shall attach the certificate to the memorandum, and the said registrar shall thereupon transmit to the registrar of joint stock companies for that part of the United Kingdom to which the registered office is to be so transferred copies of the said certificate and of the said memorandum of registration so noted certified by him; and the said registrar for the said last-mentioned part of the United Kingdom shall, upon receipt of such copies of certificate and memorandum, retain and register the same in like manner, and on payment of the like fees to him as provided in the case of the registration of an original memorandum of registration, and thereupon the place of the registered office shall, from the said last-mentioned registration and the said day mentioned in the said certificate, be the place mentioned as such on the said certificate: Provided, however, that such change shall in nowise alter or affect anything theretofore done by the said company, or any of their rights or liabilities in respect thereof.

212. The Board of Trade shall not issue their certificate in pursuance of the foregoing section until they are satisfied that an advertisement of the intention of the company to apply to the Board of Trade for a certificate, with a declaration that all parties objecting thereto are forthwith to apply to the Board of Trade, has been published once at the least in each of four successive weeks in the newspapers following; (that is to say,) in some newspaper circulating in the district where the registered office of the company is situate, and also if the company is registered in England in the London Gazette, if in Ireland in the Dublin Gazette, if in Scotland in the Edinburgh Gazette, nor until the said board are satisfied that the objections, if any, that may be urged against the issue of such certificate are groundless.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

TABLE A.

REGULATIONS FOR MANAGEMENT OF A COMPANY LIMITED BY SHARES.

Shares.

- (1.) If several persons are registered as joint holders of any share, any one of such persons may give effectual receipts for any dividend payable in respect of such share.
- (2.) Every member shall, on payment of one shilling, or such less sum as the company in general meeting may prescribe, be entitled to a certificate, under the common seal of the company, specifying the share or shares held by him, and the amount paid up thereon.
- (3.) If such certificate is worn out or lost, it may be renewed, on payment of one shilling, or such less sum as the company in general meeting may prescribe.

Calls on Shares.

- (4.) The directors may from time to time make such calls upon the members in respect of all monies unpaid on their shares as they think fit, provided that twenty-one days' notice at least is given of each call, and each member shall be liable to pay the amount of calls so made to the persons and at the times and places appointed by the directors.
- (5.) A call shall be deemed to have been made at the time when the resolution of the directors authorizing such call was passed (a).
- (6.) If the call payable in respect of any share is not paid before or on the day appointed for payment thereof, the holder for the time being of such share shall be liable to pay interest for the same at the rate of five pounds per cent. per annum from the day appointed for the payment thereof to the time of the actual payment.
- (7.) The directors may, if they think fit, receive from any member willing to advance the same, all or any part of the monies due upon the shares held by him beyond the sums actually called for; and upon the monies so paid in advance, or so much thereof as from time to time exceeds the amount of the calls then made upon the shares in respect of which such advance has been made, the company may pay interest at such rate as the member paying such sum in advance and the directors agree upon.

Transfers of Shares.

- (8.) The instrument of transfer of any share in the company shall be executed both by the transferor and transferee, and the transferor shall be deemed to remain a holder of such share until the name of the transferee is entered in the register book in respect thereof.
- (9.) Shares in the company shall be transferred in the following form:—
I, A. B., of _____ in consideration of the sum of _____ pounds paid to me by C. D., of _____ do hereby transfer to the said C. D. the share [or shares] numbered _____ standing in my name in the books of the company, to hold unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators and assigns, subject to the several conditions on which I held the same at the time of the execution hereof; and I the said C. D. do hereby agree to take the said share [or shares] subject to the same conditions. As witness our hands the day of _____
- (10.) The company may decline to register any transfer of shares made by a member who is indebted to them.

(a) R. v. Inns of Court Hotel Co., 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 309.

- (11.) The transfer books shall be closed during the fourteen days immediately preceding the ordinary general meeting in each year.

Transmission of Shares.

- (12.) The executors or administrators of a deceased member shall be the only persons recognized by the company as having any title to his share.
- (13.) Any person becoming entitled to a share in consequence of the death, bankruptcy or insolvency of any member, or in consequence of the marriage of any female member, may be registered as a member upon such evidence being produced as may from time to time be required by the company.
- (14.) Any person who has become entitled to a share in consequence of the death, bankruptcy or insolvency of any member, or in consequence of the marriage of any female member, may, instead of being registered himself, elect to have some person to be named by him registered as a transferee of such share.
- (15.) The person so becoming entitled shall testify such election by executing to his nominee an instrument of transfer of such share.
- (16.) The instrument of transfer shall be presented to the company, accompanied with such evidence as the directors may require to prove the title of the transferor, and thereupon the company shall register the transferee as a member.

Forfeiture of Shares.

- (17.) If any member fails to pay any call on the day appointed for payment thereof, the directors may, at any time thereafter, during such time as the call remains unpaid, serve a notice on him, requiring him to pay such call, together with interest and any expenses that may have accrued by reason of such nonpayment.
- (18.) The notice shall name a further day, on or before which such call, and all interest and expenses that have accrued by reason of such nonpayment, are to be paid. It shall also name the place where payment is to be made (the place so named being either the registered office of the company or some other place at which calls of the company are usually made payable). The notice shall also state that in the event of nonpayment at or before the time and at the place appointed the shares in respect of which such call was made will be liable to be forfeited.
- (19.) If the requisitions of any such notice as aforesaid are not complied with, any share in respect of which such notice has been given may at any time thereafter, before payment of all calls, interest and expenses due in respect thereof has been made, be forfeited, by a resolution of the directors to that effect.
- (20.) Any share so forfeited shall be deemed to be the property of the company, and may be disposed of in such manner as the company in general meeting thinks fit.
- (21.) Any member whose shares have been forfeited shall notwithstanding be liable to pay to the company all calls owing upon such shares at the time of the forfeiture.
- (22.) A statutory declaration in writing, that the call in respect of a share was made and notice thereof given, and that default in payment of the call was made, and that the forfeiture of the share was made by a resolution of the directors to that effect, shall be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated, as against all persons entitled to such share, and such declaration and the receipt of the company for the price of such share shall constitute a good title to such share, and a certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to a purchaser, and thereupon he shall be deemed the holder of such share discharged from all calls due prior to such purchase, and he shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase-money, nor shall his title to such share be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale.

Conversion of Shares into Stock.

- (23.) The directors may, with the sanction of the company previously given in general meeting, convert any paid-up shares into stock.
- (24.) When any shares have been converted into stock, the several holders of such stock may thenceforth transfer their respective interests therein, or any part of such interests, in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as and subject to which any shares in the capital of the company may be transferred, or as near thereto as circumstances admit.
- (25.) The several holders of stock shall be entitled to participate in the dividends and profits of the company according to the amount of their respective interests in such stock; and such interests shall, in proportion to the amount thereof, confer on the holders thereof respectively the same privileges and advantages for the purpose of voting at meetings of the company, and for other purposes, as would have been conferred by shares of equal amount in the capital of the company; but so that none of such privileges or advantages, except the participation in the dividends and profits of the company, shall be conferred by any such aliquot part of consolidated stock as would not, if existing in shares, have conferred such privileges or advantages.

Increase in Capital.

- (26.) The directors may, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company previously given in general meeting, increase its capital by the issue of new shares, such aggregate increase to be of such amount, and to be divided into shares of such respective amounts, as the company in general meeting directs, or, if no direction is given, as the directors think expedient.
- (27.) Subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the meeting that sanctions the increase of capital, all new shares shall be offered to the members in proportion to the existing shares held by them, and such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the member is entitled, and limiting a time within which the offer, if not accepted, will be deemed to be declined, and after the expiration of such time, or on the receipt of an intimation from the member to whom such notice is given that he declines to accept the shares offered, the directors may dispose of the same in such manner as they think most beneficial to the company.
- (28.) Any capital raised by the creation of new shares shall be considered as part of the original capital, and shall be subject to the same provisions with reference to the payment of calls, and the forfeiture of shares on non-payment of calls, or otherwise, as if it had been part of the original capital.

General Meetings.

- (29.) The first general meeting shall be held at such time, not being more than six months after the registration of the company, and at such place as the directors may determine.
- (30.) Subsequent general meetings shall be held at such time and place as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting; and if no other time or place is prescribed, a general meeting shall be held on the first Monday in February in every year, at such place as may be determined by the directors.
- (31.) The above mentioned general meetings shall be called ordinary meetings; all other general meetings shall be called extraordinary.
- (32.) The directors may, whenever they think fit, and they shall, upon a requisition made in writing by not less than one-fifth in number of the members of the company, convene an extraordinary general meeting.
- (33.) Any requisition made by the members shall express the object of the meeting proposed to be called, and shall be left at the registered office of the company.
- (34.) Upon the receipt of such requisition the directors shall forthwith proceed to convene an extraordinary general meeting. If they do not proceed to convene the same within twenty-one days from the date of the requisition, the requisitionists, or any other members amounting to the required number, may themselves convene an extraordinary general meeting.

Proceedings at General Meetings.

- (35.) Seven days' notice at the least, specifying the place, the day, and the hour of meeting, and in case of special business the general nature of such business, shall be given to the members in manner hereinafter mentioned, or in such other manner, if any, as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting; but the non-receipt of such notice by any member shall not invalidate the proceedings at any general meeting.
- (36.) All business shall be deemed special that is transacted at an extraordinary meeting, and all that is transacted at an ordinary meeting, with the exception of sanctioning a dividend and the consideration of the accounts, balance sheets, and the ordinary report of the directors.
- (37.) No business shall be transacted at any general meeting, except the declaration of a dividend, unless a quorum of members is present at the time when the meeting proceeds to business; and such quorum shall be ascertained as follows; that is to say, if the persons who have taken shares in the company at the time of the meeting do not exceed ten in number, the quorum shall be five; if they exceed ten there shall be added to the above quorum one for every five additional members up to fifty, and one for every ten additional members after fifty, with this limitation, that no quorum shall in any case exceed twenty.
- (38.) If within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting a quorum is not present, the meeting, if convened upon the requisition of members, shall be dissolved: in any other case it shall stand adjourned to the same day in the next week, at the same time and place; and if at such adjourned meeting a quorum is not present, it shall be adjourned sine die.
- (39.) The chairman (if any) of the board of directors shall preside as chairman at every general meeting of the company.

- (40.) If there is no such chairman, or if at any meeting he is not present within fifteen minutes after the time appointed for holding the meeting, the members present shall choose some one of their number to be chairman.
- (41.) The chairman may, with the consent of the meeting, adjourn any meeting from time to time and from place to place; but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place.
- (42.) At any general meeting, unless a poll is demanded by at least five members, a declaration by the chairman that a resolution has been carried, and an entry to that effect in the book of proceedings of the company, shall be sufficient evidence of the fact, without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against such resolution.
- (43.) If a poll is demanded by five or more members it shall be taken in such manner as the chairman directs, and the result of such poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the company in general meeting. In the case of an equality of votes at any general meeting the chairman shall be entitled to a second or casting vote.

Votes of Members.

- (44.) Every member shall have one vote for every share up to ten; he shall have an additional vote for every five shares beyond the first ten shares up to one hundred, and an additional vote for every ten shares beyond the first hundred shares.
- (45.) If any member is a lunatic or idiot he may vote by his committee, curator bonis, or other legal curator.
- (46.) If one or more persons are jointly entitled to a share or shares, the member whose name stands first in the register of members as one of the holders of such share or shares, and no other, shall be entitled to vote in respect of the same.
- (47.) No member shall be entitled to vote at any general meeting unless all calls due from him have been paid, and no member shall be entitled to vote in respect of any share that he has acquired by transfer at any meeting held after the expiration of three months from the registration of the company, unless he has been possessed of the share in respect of which he claims to vote for at least three months previously to the time of holding the meeting at which he proposes to vote.
- (48.) Votes may be given either personally or by proxy.
- (49.) The instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing, under the hand of the appointer, or if such appointer is a corporation, under their common seal, and shall be attested by one or more witness or witnesses: no person shall be appointed a proxy who is not a member of the company.
- (50.) The instrument appointing a proxy shall be deposited at the registered office of the company not less than seventy-two hours before the time for holding the meeting at which the person named in such instrument proposes to vote, but no instrument appointing a proxy shall be valid after the expiration of twelve months from the date of its execution.
- (51.) Any instrument appointing a proxy shall be in the following form:—

Company Limited.

I, of in the county of being a member of the company limited, and entitled to vote or votes, hereby appoint of as my proxy, to vote for me and on my behalf at the [ordinary or extraordinary, as the case may be] general meeting of the company to be held on the day of , and at any adjournment thereof [or, at any meeting of the company that may be held in the year].

As witness my hand, this day of .

Signed by the said in the presence of .

Directors.

- (52.) The number of the directors, and the names of the first directors, shall be determined by the subscribers of the memorandum of association.
- (53.) Until directors are appointed the subscribers of the memorandum of association shall be deemed to be directors.
- (54.) The future remuneration of the directors, and their remuneration for services performed previously to the first general meeting, shall be determined by the company in general meeting.

Powers of Directors.

- (55.) The business of the company shall be managed by the directors, who may pay all expenses incurred in getting up and registering the company, and may exercise all such powers of the company as are not by the foregoing act, or by these articles,

APPENDIX.
First Schedule.
Table A.

- required to be exercised by the company in general meeting, subject nevertheless to any regulations of these articles, to the provisions of the foregoing act, and to such regulations, being not inconsistent with the aforesaid regulations or provisions, as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting; but no regulation made by the company in general meeting shall invalidate any prior act of the directors which would have been valid if such regulation had not been made.
- (56.) The continuing directors may act notwithstanding any vacancy in their body.

Disqualification of Directors.

- (57.) The office of director shall be vacated,—
If he holds any other office or place of profit under the company;
If he becomes bankrupt or insolvent;
If he is concerned in or participates in the profits of any contract with the company:
But the above rules shall be subject to the following exceptions:
That no director shall vacate his office by reason of his being a member of any company which has entered into contracts with or done any work for the company of which he is director; nevertheless he shall not vote in respect of such contract or work; and if he does so vote, his vote shall not be counted.

Rotation of Directors.

- (58.) At the first ordinary meeting after the registration of the company the whole of the directors shall retire from office; and at the first ordinary meeting in every subsequent year, one-third of the directors for the time being, or if their number is not a multiple of three, then the number nearest to one-third shall retire from office.
- (59.) The one-third or other nearest number to retire during the first and second years ensuing the first ordinary meeting of the company shall, unless the directors agree among themselves, be determined by ballot: In every subsequent year the one-third or other nearest number who have been longest in office shall retire.
- (60.) A retiring director shall be re-eligible.
- (61.) The company at the general meeting at which any directors retire in manner aforesaid shall fill up the vacated offices by electing a like number of persons.
- (62.) If at any meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place, the places of the vacating directors are not filled up, the meeting shall stand adjourned till the same day in the next week, at the same time and place; and if at such adjourned meeting the places of the vacating directors are not filled up, the vacating directors, or such of them as have not had their places filled up, shall continue in office until the ordinary meeting in the next year, and so on from time to time until their places are filled up.
- (63.) The company may from time to time, in general meeting, increase or reduce the number of directors, and may also determine in what rotation such increased or reduced number is to go out of office.
- (64.) Any casual vacancy occurring in the board of directors may be filled up by the directors, but any person so chosen shall retain his office so long only as the vacating director would have retained the same if no vacancy had occurred.
- (65.) The company, in general meeting, may, by a special resolution, remove any director before the expiration of his period of office, and may by an ordinary resolution appoint another person in his stead: The person so appointed shall hold office during such time only as the director in whose place he is appointed would have held the same if he had not been removed.

Proceedings of Directors.

- (66.) The directors may meet together for the despatch of business, adjourn and otherwise regulate their meetings as they think fit, and determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business: Questions arising at any meeting shall be decided by a majority of votes: In case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote: A director may at any time summon a meeting of the directors.
- (67.) The directors may elect a chairman of their meetings, and determine the period for which he is to hold office; but if no such chairman is elected, or if at any meeting the chairman is not present at the time appointed for holding the same, the directors present shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.
- (68.) The directors may delegate any of their powers to committees consisting of such member or members of their body as they think fit: any committee so formed shall, in the exercise of the powers so delegated, conform to any regulations that may be imposed on them by the directors.
- (69.) A committee may elect a chairman of their meetings. If no such chairman is elected, or if he is not present at the time appointed for holding the same, the members present shall choose one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

- (70.) A committee may meet and adjourn as they think proper: questions arising at any meeting shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present; and in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote.
- (71.) All acts done by any meeting of the directors, or of a committee of directors, or by any person acting as a director, shall, notwithstanding that it be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such directors or persons acting as aforesaid, or that they or any of them were disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director.

Dividends.

- (72.) The directors may, with the sanction of the company in general meeting, declare a dividend to be paid to the members in proportion to their shares.
- (73.) No dividend shall be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the company.
- (74.) The directors may, before recommending any dividend, set aside out of the profits of the company such sum as they think proper as a reserved fund to meet contingencies, or for equalizing dividends, or for repairing or maintaining the works connected with the business of the company, or any part thereof; and the directors may invest the sum so set apart as a reserved fund upon such securities as they may select.
- (75.) The directors may deduct from the dividends payable to any member all such sums of money as may be due from him to the company on account of calls or otherwise.
- (76.) Notice of any dividend that may have been declared shall be given to each member in manner hereinafter mentioned; and all dividends unclaimed for three years, after having been declared, may be forfeited by the directors for the benefit of the company.
- (77.) No dividend shall bear interest as against the company.

Accounts.

- (78.) The directors shall cause true accounts to be kept,—
Of the stock-in-trade of the company;
Of the sums of money received and expended by the company, and the matter in respect of which such receipt and expenditure takes place; and
Of the credits and liabilities of the company:
The books of account shall be kept at the registered office of the company, and, subject to any reasonable restrictions as to the time and manner of inspecting the same that may be imposed by the company in general meeting, shall be open to the inspection of the members during the hours of business.
- (79.) Once at the least in every year the directors shall lay before the company in general meeting a statement of the income and expenditure for the past year, made up to a date not more than three months before such meeting.
- (80.) The statement so made shall show, arranged under the most convenient heads, the amount of gross income, distinguishing the several sources from which it has been derived, and the amount of gross expenditure, distinguishing the expense of the establishment, salaries and other like matters. Every item of expenditure fairly chargeable against the year's income shall be brought into account, so that a just balance of profit and loss may be laid before the meeting; and in cases where any item of expenditure which may in fairness be distributed over several years has been incurred in any one year the whole amount of such item shall be stated, with the addition of the reasons why only a portion of such expenditure is charged against the income of the year.
- (81.) A balance sheet shall be made out in every year, and laid before the company in general meeting, and such balance sheet shall contain a summary of the property and liabilities of the company arranged under the heads appearing in the form annexed to this table, or as near thereto as circumstances admit.
- (82.) A printed copy of such balance sheet shall, seven days previously to such meeting, be served on every member in the manner in which notices are hereinafter directed to be served.

Audit.

- (83.) Once at the least in every year the accounts of the company shall be examined, and the correctness of the balance sheet ascertained by one or more auditor or auditors.
- (84.) The first auditors shall be appointed by the directors. Subsequent auditors shall be appointed by the company in general meeting.

APPENDIX.

First Schedule.

Table A.

- (85.) If one auditor only is appointed, all the provisions herein contained relating to auditors shall apply to him.
- (86.) The auditors may be members of the company; but no person is eligible as an auditor who is interested otherwise than as a member in any transaction of the company; and no director or other officer of the company is eligible during his continuance in office.
- (87.) The election of auditors shall be made by the company at their ordinary meeting in each year.
- (88.) The remuneration of the first auditors shall be fixed by the directors; that of subsequent auditors shall be fixed by the company in general meeting.
- (89.) Any auditor shall be re-eligible on his quitting office.
- (90.) If any casual vacancy occurs in the office of any auditor appointed by the company, the directors shall forthwith call an extraordinary general meeting for the purpose of supplying the same.
- (91.) If no election of auditors is made in manner aforesaid the Board of Trade may, on the application of not less than five members of the company, appoint an auditor for the current year, and fix the remuneration to be paid to him by the company for his services.
- (92.) Every auditor shall be supplied with a copy of the balance sheet, and it shall be his duty to examine the same, with the accounts and vouchers relating thereto.
- (93.) Every auditor shall have a list delivered to him of all books kept by the company, and shall at all reasonable times have access to the books and accounts of the company. He may, at the expense of the company, employ accountants or other persons to assist him in investigating such accounts, and he may in relation to such accounts examine the directors or any other officer of the company.
- (94.) The auditors shall make a report to the members upon the balance sheet and accounts, and in every such report they shall state whether, in their opinion, the balance sheet is a full and fair balance sheet, containing the particulars required by these regulations, and properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs, and in case they have called for explanations or information from the directors, whether such explanations or information have been given by the directors, and whether they have been satisfactory; and such report shall be read, together with the report of the directors, at the ordinary meeting.

Notices.

- (95.) A notice may be served by the company upon any member, either personally or by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to such member at his registered place of abode.
- (96.) All notices directed to be given to the members shall, with respect to any share to which persons are jointly entitled, be given to whichever of such persons is named first in the register of members; and notice so given shall be sufficient notice to all the holders of such share.
- (97.) Any notice, if served by post, shall be deemed to have been served at the time when the letter containing the same would be delivered in the ordinary course of the post; and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that the letter containing the notices was properly addressed and put into the post office.

ARTICLES of ASSOCIATION to accompany preceding MEMORANDUM of ASSOCIATION.

- (1.) The company, for the purpose of registration, is declared to consist of five hundred members.
- (2.) The directors hereinafter mentioned may, whenever the business of the association requires it, register an increase of members.

Definition of Members.

- (3.) Every person shall be deemed to have agreed to become a member of the company who insures any ship or share in a ship in pursuance of the regulations hereinafter contained.

General Meetings.

- (4.) The first general meeting shall be held at such time, not being more than three months after the incorporation of the company, and at such place, as the directors may determine.
- (5.) Subsequent general meetings shall be held at such time and place as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting; and if no other time or place is prescribed, a general meeting shall be held on the first Monday in February in every year, at such place as may be confirmed by the directors.
- (6.) The above-mentioned general meetings shall be called ordinary meetings; all other general meetings shall be called extraordinary.
- (7.) The directors may, whenever they think fit, and they shall upon a requisition made in writing by any five or more members, convene an extraordinary general meeting.
- (8.) Any requisition made by the members shall express the object of the meeting proposed to be called, and shall be left at the registered office of the company.
- (9.) Upon the receipt of such requisition, the directors shall forthwith proceed to convene a general meeting: If they do not proceed to convene the same within twenty-one days from the date of the requisition, the requisitionists, or any other five members, may themselves convene a meeting.

Proceedings at General Meetings.

- (10.) Seven days' notice at the least, specifying the place, the day, and the hour of meeting, and in case of special business the general nature of such business, shall be given to the members in manner hereinafter mentioned, or in such other manner, if any, as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting; but the non-receipt of such notice by any member shall not invalidate the proceedings at any general meeting.
- (11.) All business shall be deemed special that is transacted at an extraordinary meeting, and all that is transacted at an ordinary meeting, with the exception of the consideration of the accounts, balance sheets, and the ordinary report of the directors.
- (12.) No business shall be transacted at any meeting except the declaration of a dividend, unless a quorum of members is present at the commencement of such business; and such quorum shall be ascertained as follows; that is to say, if the members of the company at the time of the meeting do not exceed ten in number, the quorum shall be five; if they exceed ten there shall be added to the above quorum one for every five additional members up to fifty, and one for every ten additional members after fifty, with this limitation, that no quorum shall in any case exceed thirty.
- (13.) If within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting a quorum of members is not present, the meeting, if convened upon the requisition of the members, shall be dissolved: In any other case it shall stand adjourned to the same day in - the following week at the same time and place; and if at such adjourned meeting a quorum of members is not present, it shall be adjourned sine die.

- (14.) The chairman (if any) of the directors shall preside as chairman at every general meeting of the company.
- (15.) If there is no such chairman, or if at any meeting he is not present at the time of holding the same, the members present shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.
- (16.) The chairman may, with the consent of the meeting, adjourn any meeting from time to time and from place to place, but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place.
- (17.) At any general meeting, unless a poll is demanded by at least five members, a declaration by the chairman that a resolution has been carried, and an entry to that effect in the book of proceedings of the company, shall be sufficient evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against such resolution.
- (18.) If a poll is demanded in manner aforesaid, the same shall be taken in such manner as the chairman directs, and the result of such poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the company in general meeting.

Votes of Members.

- (19.) Every member shall have one vote and no more.
- (20.) If any member is a lunatic or idiot he may vote by his committee, curator bonis, or other legal curator.
- (21.) No member shall be entitled to vote at any meeting unless all monies due from him to the company have been paid.
- (22.) Votes may be given either personally or by proxies: a proxy shall be appointed in writing under the hand of the appointor, or if such appointor is a corporation, under its common seal.
- (23.) No person shall be appointed a proxy who is not a member, and the instrument appointing him shall be deposited at the registered office of the company not less than forty-eight hours before the time of holding the meeting at which he proposes to vote.
- (24.) Any instrument appointing a proxy shall be in the following form:—

Company Limited.

I of in the county of being a member of the company limited, hereby appoint of as my proxy, to vote for me and on my behalf at the [ordinary or extraordinary, as the case may be] general meeting of the company to be held on the day of , and at any adjournment thereof to be held on the day of next [or, at any meeting of the company that may be held in the year].

As witness my hand, this day of .

Signed by the said in the presence of .

Directors.

- (25.) The number of the directors, and the names of the first directors, shall be determined by the subscribers of the memorandum of association.
- (26.) Until directors are appointed, the subscribers of the memorandum of association shall for all the purposes of this act be deemed to be directors.

Powers of Directors.

- (27.) The business of the company shall be managed by the directors, who may exercise all such powers of the company as are not hereby required to be exercised by the company in general meeting; but no regulation made by the company in general meeting shall invalidate any prior act of the directors which would have been valid if such regulation had not been made.

Election of Directors.

- (28.) The directors shall be elected annually by the company in general meeting.

Business of Company.

[Here insert rules as to mode in which business of insurance is to be conducted.]

Accounts.

- (29.) The accounts of the company shall be audited by a committee of five members, to be called the audit committee.

Form B.

- (30.) The first audit committee shall be nominated by the directors out of the body of members.
- (31.) Subsequent audit committees shall be nominated by the members at the ordinary general meeting in each year.
- (32.) The audit committee shall be supplied with a copy of the balance sheet, and it shall be their duty to examine the same with the accounts and vouchers relating thereto.
- (33.) The audit committee shall have a list delivered to them of all books kept by the company, and they shall at all reasonable times have access to the books and accounts of the company: they may, at the expense of the company, employ accountants or other persons to assist them in investigating such accounts, and they may in relation to such accounts examine the directors or any other officer of the company.
- (34.) The audit committee shall make a report to the members upon the balance sheet and accounts, and in every such report they shall state whether in their opinion the balance sheet is a full and fair balance sheet, containing the particulars required by these regulations of the company, and properly drawn up, so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs, and in case they have called for explanation or information from the directors, whether such explanations or information have been given by the directors, and whether they have been satisfactory, and such report shall be read together with the report of the directors at the ordinary meeting.

Notices.

- (35.) A notice may be served by the company upon any member either personally, or by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to such member at his registered place of abode.
- (36.) Any notice, if served by post, shall be deemed to have been served at the time when the letter containing the same would be delivered in the ordinary course of the post; and in proving such service, it shall be sufficient to prove that the letter containing the notice was properly addressed, and put into the post office.

Winding up.

- (37.) The company shall be wound up voluntarily whenever an extraordinary resolution, as defined by the Companies Act, 1862, is passed, requiring the company to be wound up voluntarily.

into or given or to be entered into or given with relation thereto, shall apply, continue and be in force as well with respect to any surety as to the principal in any such bond, and to the accounts to be kept and rendered at the time and in the manner by this act directed, and the duties payable in respect thereof.

14. The exemption from duty granted by the ninth section of the act passed in the seventh and eighth years of her Majesty's reign, chapter eighty-five (b), in respect of the conveyance of passengers by cheap trains, shall not extend to any railway train which shall not be a train running on at least six days of the week, or else a train running to or from a market town on a market day, and approved of by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations as a cheap train for the conveyance of passengers to or from market, or a train approved by the said Lords of the Committee of Privy Council as an ordinary train of the railway travelling on Sunday, and conveying third-class passengers at fares not exceeding one penny per mile.

26 & 27 VICT. CAP. 92.

An Act for consolidating in one Act certain Provisions frequently inserted in Acts relating to Railways. [28th July, 1863.]

8 & 9 Vict. c. 20.

Whereas "The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (c), and "The Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," respectively, were passed in order to comprise in one general act such provisions relating to railways in England or Ireland, or in Scotland, respectively, as were at the times of the passing of those acts usually introduced into acts of Parliament authorizing the construction of railways:

And whereas sundry provisions of the like nature, but not comprised in the said general acts respectively, are now frequently introduced into acts of Parliament relating to railways, and it is expedient to comprise such last-mentioned provisions also in one general act, such act to be applicable to England or Ireland, or to Scotland, as the case may require, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in special acts relating to railways, as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves:

Be it therefore enacted (&c. &c.) as follows:

1. This act may be cited as "The Railways Clauses Act, 1863."
2. This act shall be deemed to be divided into five parts, as follows:
 - Part I. relating to construction of a railway (sect. 3);
 - Part II. relating to extension of time (sect. 20);
 - Part III. relating to working agreements (sect. 22);
 - Part IV. relating to steam vessels (sect. 30);
 - Part V. relating to amalgamation (sect. 36).

Short title.

Division of act into parts.

PART I.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY.

Application of Part I., and interpretation of terms.

3. This part of this act shall apply to the railway authorized to be constructed by any special act hereafter passed and incorporating this part of this act.

In this part of this act—

All terms used have the same meanings as the same terms have when used in "The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (d), and "The Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," respectively:

The term "tidal river" means any part of a river within the flow and ebb of the tide at ordinary spring tides:

The term "tidal water" means any part of the sea or any part of a river within the flow and ebb of the tide at ordinary spring tides:

The term "tidal lands" means such parts of the bed, shore, or banks of a tidal water as are covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the tide at ordinary spring tides.

The provisions respecting the recovery of penalties contained in the said Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts respectively (e), as the case may require, shall be incorporated with this part of this act.

Alteration of Engineering Works.

Power to alter engineering works.

4. Notwithstanding anything in the said Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts respectively contained, the company, in the construction of the railway, may deviate from the line or level of any arch, tunnel, or viaduct, described on the deposited plans or sections

(b) Ante, p. 20.

(c) Ante, p. 73.

(d) 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 2, 3, ante, p. 73.

(e) Ibid. s. 140 et seq., ante, p. 98.

so as the deviation be made within the limits of deviation shown on those plans, and subject to the limitations contained in sections eleven, twelve, and fifteen of those acts respectively, and so as the nature of the work described be not altered, and may also substitute any engineering work not shown on the deposited plans or sections for an arch, tunnel or viaduct as shown thereon: provided that every such substitution be authorized by a certificate of the Board of Trade; and the Board of Trade may grant such certificate in case it appears to them, on due inquiry, that the company has acted in the matter with good faith, and that the owners, lessees and occupiers of lands in which the substitution is intended to be made consent thereto, and also that the safety and convenience of the public will not be diminished thereby.

Provided that nothing in the present section shall affect any power given to the company or to the Board of Trade by section eleven, twelve, fourteen, or fifteen of the last-mentioned acts respectively.

Level Crossings.

5. Where the company is authorized by the special act to carry the railway across a turnpike road or public carriage road on a level, it shall not be lawful for the company in shunting trains to pass any train over the level crossing, or at any time to allow any train, engine, carriage or truck to stand across the same. Trains not to be shunted over level crossings.

6. For the greater convenience and security of the public, the company shall erect and permanently maintain a lodge at the point where the railway crosses on the level the turnpike road or public carriage road: and the company shall be subject to and shall abide by all such regulations with regard to the crossing thereof on the level, or with regard to the speed at which trains may pass the level crossing, as may from time to time be made by the Board of Trade. Company to erect lodge at point of crossing.

If the company fails to erect, or to maintain, such lodge, or to appoint or keep a proper person to watch or superintend the level crossing, or to observe or abide by any such regulation as aforesaid, they shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, and also to a penalty of ten pounds for every day during which the offence continues after the penalty of twenty pounds is incurred.

7. The Board of Trade may, if it appears to them necessary for the public safety, at any time after the passing of the special act, require the company, within such time as the Board of Trade directs, and at the expense of the company, to carry the turnpike road or public carriage road either under or over the railway by means of a bridge or arch, instead of crossing the same on the level, or to execute such other works as, under the circumstances of the case, may appear to the Board of Trade best adapted for removing or diminishing the danger arising from the level crossing. Board of Trade may require bridge instead of level crossing.

Where the road is so carried either under or over the railway, it shall not be necessary for the company to erect or maintain a lodge at the point where the road is crossed, or to appoint a person to watch or superintend the crossing thereat, nor shall they be liable to any penalty for failure so to do.

8. If the Board of Trade certifies that the public safety requires that additional lands be taken by the company for the purpose of the work directed by the Board of Trade to be executed, the company may, subject to the provisions of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or "The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," as the case may require, enter upon, take, and use, all or any part of the lands specified in the certificate of the Board of Trade as being necessary for the purpose of the work; and the Board of Trade before issuing the certificate shall cause at least three months' notice to be given to any person who may be entitled to claim under the last-mentioned acts, or otherwise, compensation in respect of the taking of such lands or in respect of such work. Power to company to take additional land for such work.

Junctions.

9. Where the company is authorized by the special act to make a junction between the railway and any other railway, then and in every such case all interferences with the works of the other railway, necessary or convenient for effecting the junction, shall be made under the superintendence and to the reasonable satisfaction of the engineer for the time being of the company or person to whom the other railway belongs; and in case of any difference arising as the mode of effecting the junction, the same shall be determined by a referee to be appointed by the Board of Trade, on the application of either party, at the cost of the company making the junction. Communications with other railways to be made under the direction of the engineer of those railways.

10. With respect to any lands belonging to the company or persons to whom the other railway belongs, which the company are by the special act authorized to use, enter upon, or interfere with, for the purposes of the junction, the company shall not, except by agreement, or unless otherwise provided in the special act, purchase and take the same, but the company may purchase and take, and such other railway company or person may and shall sell and grant accordingly, an easement or right of using the same for the purposes of the junction. Company to acquire only easements in land of other railway company.

11. Nothing relative to the junction in this act contained shall be deemed to authorize the company for the purposes of the junction to take or enter upon any lands belonging to the company or person to whom the other railway belongs, or to alter or interfere with any railway, or any of the works thereof, further or otherwise than is necessary for making Not to take lands or interfere with works of other company further than necessary.

APPENDIX.

Part I.

As to expense of signals, watchmen, &c.

the junction and inter-communication between the railways, as shown on the deposited plans and sections of the railway to which the special act relates, without the previous consent in writing in every instance of such other railway company or such person.

12. The company or person with whose railway the junction is made may from time to time erect such signals and conveniences incident to the junction, either on their or his own lands or on the lands of the company making the junction, and may from time to time appoint and remove such watchmen, switchmen, or other persons as may be necessary for the prevention of danger to, or interference with, the traffic at and near the junction. The working and management of such signals and conveniences, wherever situate, shall be under the exclusive regulation of the company or person with whose railway the junction is made; and all the expenses of erecting and maintaining those signals and conveniences, and of employing those watchmen, switchmen, and other persons, and all incidental current expenses, shall, at the end of every half year, be repaid by the company making the junction, and in default thereof may be recovered from them in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Protection of Navigation.

Lights on works.

13. Where the company is authorized by the special act to construct, alter, or extend any work on, in, over, through, or across tidal lands or a tidal water, the company shall, on or near the work, during the whole time of the constructing, altering, or extending thereof, exhibit and keep burning at their own expense, every night from sunset to sunrise, such lights (if any) as the Board of Trade from time to time requires or approves; and (notwithstanding the enactments for the time being in force respecting lighthouses) shall also on or near the work, when completed, always maintain, exhibit, and keep burning, at their own expense, every night from sunset to sunrise, such lights (if any) for the guidance of ships as the Board of Trade from time to time requires or approves.

If the company fails to comply in any respect with the provisions of the present section, they shall for each night in which they so fail be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds.

Construction of bridges.

14. Where the company is authorized or required by the special act to construct a bridge over a navigable tidal water, and the special act does not make express provision respecting the span or spans thereof, then the company shall construct the same with a span or spans of such headway and waterway, and with such opening span or spans (if any), and according to such plan, as the Board of Trade directs or approves.

User of bridges.

15. Where the company constructs a bridge with an opening span, it shall not be lawful for the company to detain any vessel, barge, or boat at the bridge for a longer time than may be necessary for admitting a carriage or engine traversing the railway and approaching the bridge to cross the bridge, and for opening the bridge to admit the vessel, barge, or boat to pass; and the company shall be subject to and shall abide by such regulations with regard to the user of the bridge as may from time to time be made by the Board of Trade.

If the company detains a vessel, barge, or boat longer than the time aforesaid, or fails in any respect to abide by any such regulation as aforesaid, they shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, without prejudice to any remedy against them for any loss or damage sustained by any person.

Access to the shore under or across the railway.

16. Where the railway cuts off access between the land and a tidal water or tidal lands, then and in every such case the company shall, during the construction of the railway, and from time to time thereafter, make, and shall permanently maintain, and allow to be used by all persons, at all times, free of toll or other charge, all such footways and carriageways over, under, or across the railway, or on a level therewith, as the Board of Trade from time to time directs or approves: Provided always, as follows:

- (1.) The company shall not be obliged to make a footway or carriageway over lands for the use of an owner or occupier who has agreed to receive and has been paid compensation for the severance thereof from the tidal water or tidal lands:
- (2.) The company shall not be obliged to make or to allow to be made a footway or carriageway in such manner as would interfere with the working or using of the railway:
- (3.) The expense of the making and maintenance of a footway or carriageway required to be made after the construction of the railway shall be defrayed by the persons or body interested in the tidal water or tidal lands for whose benefit or convenience the same is required.

Where the footway or carriageway is made across the railway on the level, then the manner of the making and watching of the level crossing shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Trade; and where the level crossing is made after the construction of the railway, then all expenses attending the watching thereof shall be defrayed by the persons or body interested in the tidal water or tidal lands for whose benefit or convenience the same is required.

Prohibition of deviation of certain works without consent of Board of Trade.

17. Where the company is authorized by the special act to construct a railway skirting a public navigable tidal river or channel, the company shall not make any deviation of the railway from the continuous centre line thereof marked on the plan deposited by them at the Board of Trade, even within the limits of deviation shown on that plan, in such manner as to diminish the navigable space, without the previous consent of the Board of Trade, or otherwise than in such manner as is expressly authorized by the Board of Trade.

If any deviation is made in contravention of the present section, the Board of Trade may abate and remove the work in the construction whereof the deviation is made, or any part thereof, and restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the expense of the company: and the amount of such expense shall be a debt due from the company to the Crown, and be recoverable accordingly with costs, or the same may be recovered, with costs, as a penalty is recoverable from the company.

18. If a work constructed by the company on, in, over, through or across tidal lands or a tidal water is abandoned, or suffered to fall into decay, the Board of Trade may abate and remove the work, or any part of it, and restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the expense of the company; and the amount of such expense shall be a debt due from the company to the crown, and be recoverable accordingly, with costs, or the same may be recovered, with costs, as a penalty is recoverable from the company.

19. If at any time the Board of Trade deems it expedient, for the purposes of the special act or of this part of this act, to order a survey and examination of a work constructed by the company on, in, over, through or across tidal lands or tidal water, or of the intended site of any such work, the company shall defray the expense of the survey and examination; and the amount thereof shall be a debt due from the company to the crown, and be recoverable accordingly, with costs, or the same may be recovered, with costs, as a penalty is recoverable from the company.

PART II.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

20. Where a railway is authorized to be constructed by a special act passed either before or after the passing of this act, and the time limited by the special act for the exercise of powers of compulsory purchase of lands, or of powers for construction of the railway and works, is extended by a special act hereafter passed and incorporating this part of this act,—then and in every such case the justices, arbitrators, umpires or juries, as the case may be, who award or assess the compensation to be made by the company to the owners or occupiers of, or other persons interested in, lands taken or used for the purposes of the railway and works, or injuriously affected by the construction thereof, shall, in estimating the amount of such compensation, have regard to, and assess compensation for, the additional damage (if any) sustained by those owners, occupiers or other persons, by reason of the extension of time.

Parties aggrieved by extension of time may have compensation for additional damage.

21. The extension of time shall not affect any contract entered into or notice given by the company before the passing of the special act granting the extension, for purchasing, taking or using any lands which the company was entitled to purchase, take or use; but every such contract and notice shall be construed and take effect, and the same proceedings may be had thereunder, and all parties thereto shall be entitled to the same rights and remedies in respect thereof, at law and in equity, as if the extension had not been granted.

Existing contracts and notices to take lands not to be affected.

PART III.

WORKING AGREEMENTS(a).

22. Where two or more companies are authorized by a special act hereafter passed and incorporating this part of this act, to agree among themselves with respect to all or any of the following purposes (b); namely,—

Restrictions on agreements between companies.

The maintenance and management of the railways of the companies respectively, or any one or more of them, or any part thereof respectively, and of the works connected therewith respectively, or any of them;

The use and working of the railways or railway, or of any part thereof, and the conveyance of traffic thereon;

The fixing, collecting and apportionment of the tolls, rates, charges, receipts and revenues levied, taken or arising in respect of traffic;—

then and in every such case the authority so to agree, or the agreement when entered into, shall not in any manner affect any of the tolls, rates or charges which the companies parties thereto are from time to time respectively authorized to demand and receive from any person or from any other company; but all such persons and companies shall, notwithstanding the agreement, be entitled to the use and benefit of the railways of the several companies parties to the agreement, on the same terms and conditions, and on payment of the same tolls, rates and charges as they would be if such authority had not been given or the agreement had not been entered into.

23. The agreement shall not, save so far as its terms and conditions are authorized by "The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (c), or by "The Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," as the case may require, or by any other general statute or law from time to time in force with respect to the companies parties to the agreement, have any operation unless and until it is sanctioned by such proportion of the votes of the shareholders and stockholders entitled to vote in that behalf at meetings of the several companies parties thereto, present (personally or by proxy) at a general meeting of each company specially convened for the purpose (in manner hereinafter mentioned), as is prescribed in the special act, and if no proportion is prescribed, then by three-fifths of such votes.

Sanction of shareholders to agreements.

Every such meeting shall be convened by circular addressed to each such shareholder and stockholder, and served in the manner prescribed by "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (c), or "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," as the case may require, with respect to notices requiring to be served by the company upon the shareholders, and also by advertisement inserted once at least in each of two consecutive weeks in some newspaper published or circulating in the county prescribed in the special act, and if no county is prescribed, then in the county in which the head office of the company is situate, the last of such advertisements to be published not less than seven days before the meeting.

Public notice of intention to enter into such agreement.

24. Before the companies enter into the agreement notice of their intention to do so shall be given by them or one of them, in a form to be approved by the Board of Trade, inserted once at least in each of three successive weeks in some newspaper published or circulating in the county prescribed in the special act, and if no county is prescribed, then in the county or one of the counties in which each railway to the maintenance, management, use or working whereof the proposed agreement relates, or some portion of that railway, is situate; and the notice shall set forth within what time and in what manner any company or person aggrieved by the proposed agreement, and desiring to object thereto, may bring the objection before the Board of Trade.

Approval of Board of Trade.

25. The agreement shall not have any operation until it is approved by the Board of Trade, and the Board of Trade shall not approve the agreement without being satisfied of its having received such sanction of meetings of the respective companies as aforesaid.

Joint committee for purposes of agreements.

26. The companies parties to the agreement may, in accordance therewith and for the purposes thereof, appoint a joint committee, composed of such number of the directors of each company as the companies think proper, and from time to time may vary and renew the joint committee as occasion requires, and may regulate the proceedings of the joint committee, and may delegate to the joint committee all such of the powers of the companies as the companies think necessary for carrying into effect the purposes of the agreement; and the joint committee shall have and may exercise the powers so from time to time delegated to them in like manner as the same powers might be had and exercised by the companies respectively or their respective directors.

Agreements between companies may be modified by Board of Trade.

27. At the expiration of the first or any subsequent period of ten years after the making of the agreement, the Board of Trade may, if they are of opinion that the interests of the public are prejudicially affected thereby, cause the same to be revised; and the Board of Trade may require the companies parties thereto to publish such notices of any intended revision of the agreement as the Board of Trade may direct; and the Board of Trade may modify the agreement in such manner as may seem expedient for the protection of the interests of the public, and may declare the modification to be part of the agreement, and the same shall be read and take effect accordingly.

Working agreements between a company and an individual.

28. Where a company is authorized by a special act hereafter passed, and incorporating this part of this act, to agree with a person being the proprietor of a railway with respect to all or any of the purposes specified in this part of this act, then and in every such case the provisions of this part of this act shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to the company in relation to such authority and to the agreement entered into by virtue thereof.

Alteration of agreement.

29. For the purposes of this part of this act, any alteration of an agreement by the parties thereto shall be deemed an agreement.

PART IV.

STEAM VESSELS.

Provision for securing equality of treatment.

30. Where a railway company incorporated either before or after the passing of this act is authorized by a special act hereafter passed and incorporating this part of this act, to build, or buy or hire, and to use, maintain and work, or to enter into arrangements for using, maintaining, or working steam vessels for the purpose of carrying on a communication between any towns or ports, and to take tolls in respect of such steam vessels,—then and in every such case tolls shall be at all times charged to all persons equally, and after the same rate in respect of passengers conveyed in a like vessel passing between the same places under like circumstances; and no reduction or advance in the tolls shall be made in favour of or against any person using the steam vessels in consequence of his having travelled or being about to travel on the whole or any part of the company's railway, or not having travelled or not being about to travel on any part thereof; or in favour of or against any person using the railway in consequence of his having used or being about to use or his not having used or not being about to use the steam vessels; and where an aggregate sum is charged by the company for conveyance of a passenger by a steam vessel and on the railway, the ticket shall have the amount of toll charged for conveyance by the steam vessel distinguished from the amount charged for conveyance on the railway.

31. The provisions of "The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854" (f), so far as the same are applicable, shall extend to the steam vessels, and to the traffic carried on thereby.

32. The company may from time to time make byelaws in relation to passengers, animals and goods conveyed in or upon the steam vessels, and as to the embarkation and disembarkation thereof respectively, and may enforce the observance of the same by penalties, in the same manner as they may with respect to passengers, animals and goods conveyed upon their railways; such byelaws to be sanctioned and authenticated in the same manner as is required by any special or other act with respect to byelaws relating to the company's railway, and being published by being painted on boards, or printed on paper and pasted on boards, and hung up or affixed and continued on some conspicuous part of every steam vessel and landing-place of the company; and such byelaws, and all penalties in respect of the breach thereof, shall be enforced and recovered in the same manner as is provided with respect to byelaws relating to the company's railway, and to penalties in respect of the breach thereof.

33. All tolls and charges for the steam vessels due and payable to the company on any account whatsoever, and all costs, damages and expenses by the special act directed to be paid in respect of the steam vessels, may be levied by distress; and in England or Ireland any justice, and in Scotland the sheriff, may, on application by or on behalf of the company, issue his warrant accordingly.

The justice or sheriff who issues the warrant of distress may order that the costs of the proceedings for the recovery of the toll or sum shall be paid by the person liable to pay the toll or sum, and the costs shall be ascertained by the justice or sheriff, and shall be included in the warrant of distress for the recovery of the toll or sum.

34. Any number of names and sums may be included in any warrant of distress or notice obtained or given by the company for any of the purposes of this part of this act, or of the provisions of the special act with respect to the steam vessels, and may be stated either in the body of the warrant or notice, or in a schedule thereto.

35. In every seventh year after the passing of the special act, reckoned from the first day of January next after its passing, the Board of Trade, if they are of opinion that the interests of the public are prejudicially affected by the exercise of the powers of the company relative to steam vessels, may give to the company notice in writing thereof, and of the reasons on which that opinion is founded; and if the company does not before the beginning of the then next session of Parliament make provision to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade for protection of the interests of the public, or if the injury done to the interests of the public is in the opinion of the Board of Trade incapable of being remedied by the company, then the Board of Trade, at the beginning of the session of Parliament then next following, shall report to both houses of Parliament such their opinion, and the reasons on which that opinion is founded; and at the expiration of twelve calendar months after the presentation to the houses of Parliament of that report, the powers of the company relative to steam vessels, or such of them as are specified in the report, shall, unless Parliament in the meantime otherwise provides, cease to be exercised.

PART V.

AMALGAMATION (g).

36. This part of this act shall apply where two or more railway companies, respectively incorporated either before or after the passing of this act, are amalgamated by a special act hereafter passed and incorporating this part of this act.

37. For the purposes of this part of this act, companies shall be deemed amalgamated by a special act, in either of the following cases:

- (1.) Where by the special act two or more companies are dissolved, and the members thereof respectively are united into and incorporated as a new company:
- (2.) Where by the special act a company or companies is or are dissolved, and the undertaking or undertakings of the dissolved company or companies is or are transferred to another existing company, with or without a change in the name of that company:

And in this part of this act, such special act is referred to as the amalgamating act; the company incorporated or continued by or under the amalgamating act is referred to as the amalgamated company; and the time prescribed in the amalgamating act for the amalgamation taking effect, and if no time is prescribed, then the time of the passing of the amalgamating act, is referred to as the time of amalgamation.

38. In every case of amalgamation, the undertaking, railways, harbours, navigations, ferries, wharfs, canals, works, real and personal property, powers, authorities, privileges, exemptions, rights of action and suit, and all other the rights and interests of the dissolved company, shall, subject to the contracts, obligations, debts and liabilities of that company, become at the time of amalgamation, and by virtue of the amalgamating act, vested in the amalgamated company, and may and shall be held, used, exercised and enjoyed by the amalgamated company in the same manner and to the same extent as the same respectively at the time of amalgamation are, or if the amalgamating act were not passed might be, held, used, exercised and enjoyed by the dissolved company.

39. The special acts relating to or affecting the dissolved company or their undertaking in force at the passing of the amalgamating act, shall, except so far as they are thereby expressed to be varied or repealed, remain in full force; and all rights and powers thereby conferred on and vested in the dissolved company in relation to their undertaking may be enjoyed and exercised by the amalgamated company in relation to the dissolved undertaking; and all matters to be done, continued or completed, or which but for the amalgamation would, might or could be done, continued or completed, by the dissolved company, or their directors, officers or servants, under or by virtue of those acts, shall or may be done, continued or completed by the amalgamated company, and their directors, officers and servants, as the case may be; and every special act, so far as it relates to or affects the dissolved company or their undertaking, shall be read and construed as if the name of the amalgamated company had been used therein in relation to that undertaking instead of the name of the dissolved company.

40. Except as may be otherwise provided in the special act, all debts and money due from or to the dissolved company, or any persons on their behalf, shall be payable and paid by or to the amalgamated company; and all tolls, rates, duties and money due or payable by virtue of any act relating to the dissolved company from or to that company shall be due and payable from or to the amalgamated company, and shall be recoverable from or by the amalgamated company by the same ways and means, and subject to the same conditions, as the same would or might have been recoverable from or by the dissolved company if the amalgamating act had not been passed.

41. All deeds, conveyances, grants, assignments, leases, purchases, sales, mortgages, bonds, covenants, agreements, contracts and securities which before the amalgamation have been executed, made or entered into by, with, to or in relation to the dissolved company, or the directors thereof, and which are in force at the time of amalgamation, and all obligations and liabilities which before the amalgamation have been incurred by or to, or which but for the amalgamation might or would have arisen in relation to, the dissolved company or the directors thereof, shall be as valid and of as full force and effect in favour of, against or in relation to the amalgamated company as if the same had been executed, made or entered into by, with or to, or in relation to or had been incurred by or to or had arisen in relation to, the amalgamated company by name.

42. All causes and rights of action or suit accrued before the time of amalgamation, and then in any manner enforceable by, for or against the dissolved company shall be and remain as good, valid and effectual for or against the amalgamated company as they would or might have been for or against the dissolved company affected thereby, if the amalgamating act had not been passed.

43. Nothing in the amalgamating act or in this part of this act shall cause the abatement, discontinuance or determination of or in anywise prejudicially affect any action, suit or other proceeding at law or in equity commenced by or against the dissolved company, either solely or jointly with any other company or with any person, before the time of amalgamation, and then pending; but the same may be continued, prosecuted or enforced by or against the amalgamated company, either solely or, as the case may require, jointly with such other company or with such person; and all persons committing offences against any of the provisions of any special act relating to the dissolved company before the amalgamation may be prosecuted, and all penalties incurred by reason of such offences may be sued for and recovered, in like manner in all respects as if the amalgamating act had not been passed,—the amalgamated company being in respect of all such matters considered as identical with the dissolved company.

44. No submission to arbitration of any matter in dispute between the dissolved company and any other company or any person, under which any reference is pending and incomplete at the time of amalgamation, and no award theretofore made and then remaining in force, shall be revoked or prejudicially affected by anything in the amalgamating act or in this part of this act contained; but every such submission and award shall be as valid and effectual for or against the amalgamated company as it would have been for or against the dissolved company.

45. All works which the dissolved company is at the time of amalgamation authorized or bound to execute and complete, and which are not then executed or completed, may or shall (as the case may require) be executed or completed by the amalgamated company, and for that purpose the amalgamated company shall have and be subject to all the powers, rights and conditions which were conferred or imposed upon the dissolved company, and which but for the passing of the amalgamating act might have been exercised by or enforced against the dissolved company.

46. Where the dissolved company has under any special act entered into any contract for the purchase of or taken or used any lands, which at the time of amalgamation have not been effectually conveyed to the dissolved company, or the purchase money in respect of which has not been duly paid by the dissolved company,—then and in every such case the contract, if in force at the time of amalgamation, shall thereafter be completed by, and such lands shall be conveyed to, the amalgamated company, or as the amalgamated company directs, and the purchase money shall be paid and applied pursuant to the special acts relating to the dissolved company; and those acts shall, in relation to the completion of the contract and the purchase and conveyance of the lands, and the payment and application of the purchase money in respect thereof, be read and construed as if the amalgamated company were the company named in the acts and contract.

47. Where any money has, before the time of amalgamation, been paid by the dissolved company, or is thereafter paid by the amalgamated company under any special act relating to the dissolved company, into the Bank of England, or into one of the incorporated or chartered banks in Scotland, or into the Bank of Ireland, or to any trustee or trustees, on account of the purchase of any lands or any interest therein, or for any compensation or satisfaction, or on any other account, such money, or the stocks, funds or securities in or upon which the same then is or thereafter may be invested by order of any court or otherwise, and the interest, dividends, and annual produce thereof, shall be applied and disposed of pursuant to such special act; and that and every other act shall, in relation to such money, stocks, funds or securities, or the interest, dividends or annual produce thereof, be read and construed as if the amalgamated company were the company therein named with reference to the same money, stocks, funds, securities, interest, dividends or annual produce.

48. All officers and persons who, at the time of amalgamation, have in their possession or under their control any books, documents, papers or effects belonging to the dissolved company, or to which the dissolved company would but for such dissolution have been entitled, shall be liable to account for and deliver up the same to the amalgamated company, or to such persons as the amalgamated company may appoint to receive the same, in the same manner, and subject to the same consequences on refusal or neglect as if such officers and persons had been appointed by and become possessed of such books, documents, papers or effects for the amalgamated company.

49. All clerks, officers and servants who at the time of amalgamation are in the employment of the dissolved company shall thereupon become clerks, officers or servants, as the case may be, of the amalgamated company, with the same rights, and subject to the same obligations and incidents in respect of such employment as they would have had or been subject to as the clerks, officers or servants of the dissolved company, and shall so continue unless and until they respectively are duly removed from such employment by the amalgamated company, or until the terms of their employment are duly altered by the amalgamated company.

50. All books and documents which would have been evidence in respect of any matter for or against the dissolved company shall be admitted as evidence in respect of the same or the like matter for or against the amalgamated company.

51. All resolutions of any general meeting or board of directors of the dissolved company, or of any duly constituted and authorized committee thereof, so far as the same are applicable and remain in force, shall, notwithstanding the dissolution, continue to be operative, and shall apply to the amalgamated company, and to the directors, officers and servants of the amalgamated company, until duly revoked or altered by the amalgamated company or under their authority.

52. All calls made by the dissolved company, and not paid at the time of amalgamation, shall be payable to and may be enforced by the amalgamated company, as if such calls had been made by the amalgamated company.

53. All registers of shares, stock, mortgages and bonds of the dissolved company, and all registers of transfers thereof respectively, and all shareholders' and stockholders' address books, and all certificates of shares or stock of and in the dissolved company, which are valid and subsisting at the time of amalgamation, shall continue to be valid and subsisting, and shall have the same operation and effect as before the dissolution, unless and until new or altered registers, books and certificates respectively are substituted in their stead; and all transfers, sales or dispositions of stock or shares made before the dissolution and not then completed shall have the same operation and effect as if made after the dissolution.

54. All the byelaws, rules and regulations of the dissolved company relating to the management, use or control of their undertaking shall, notwithstanding the dissolution, continue to be in force and applicable to and in respect of the undertaking, and shall and may be enforced by and available to the amalgamated company in their own name, as well for the recovery of penalties as for all other purposes, as if the same respectively had been originally made by the amalgamated company, until the expiration of twelve months after the time of amalgamation, or until other byelaws, rules and regulations are duly made by the amalgamated company in their stead, whichever first happens.

55. Notwithstanding the dissolution of the dissolved company, and the amalgamation, everything before the time of amalgamation done, suffered and confirmed respectively, under or by virtue of any special act relating to the dissolved company, shall be as valid as if the amalgamating act had not been passed; and the dissolution and amalgamation, and the amalgamating act, and this part of this act, respectively, shall accordingly be subject and without prejudice to everything so done, suffered and confirmed respectively, and to all rights, liabilities, claims and demands, present or future, which if the dissolution and amalgamation had not taken place and the amalgamating act had not been passed, would be incident to or consequent on anything so done, suffered and confirmed respectively; and with respect to all things so done, suffered and confirmed respectively, and to all such rights, liabilities, claims and demands, the amalgamated company shall to all intents represent the dissolved company; and the generality of this present provision shall not be deemed to be restricted by any other of the provisions of this part of this act, or by any provision of the amalgamating act that does not expressly refer to this present provision, and expressly restrict the operation thereof.

26 & 27 VICT. CAP. 118.

An Act for consolidating in One Act certain Provisions frequently inserted in Acts relating to the Constitution and Management of Companies incorporated for carrying on Undertakings of a Public Nature. [28th July, 1863.]

8 & 9 Vict.
cc. 16 and 18.

Whereas "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (h), and "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," respectively, were passed in order to comprise in one general act such provisions relating to the constitution and management of joint stock companies incorporated for the purpose of carrying on undertakings of a public nature in England or Ireland, or in Scotland, respectively, as were at the times of the passing of those acts usually introduced into acts of parliament relating to such companies: And whereas sundry provisions of the like nature, but not comprised in the said general acts respectively, are now frequently introduced into acts of parliaments relating to such companies, and it is expedient to comprise such last mentioned provisions also in one general act, such act to be applicable to England or Ireland, or to Scotland, as the case may require, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in the acts relating to such undertakings, as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves: Be it therefore enacted, by (&c., &c.), as follows:—

Short title.

Division of act into parts.

1. This act may be cited as "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863."
2. This act shall be deemed to be divided into four parts, as follows:—
 - Part I. relating to cancellation and surrender of shares (Sect. 3);
 - Part II. relating to additional capital (Sect. 12);
 - Part III. relating to debenture stock (Sect. 22);
 - Part IV. relating to change of name (Sect. 36).

PART I.

CANCELLATION AND SURRENDER OF SHARES.

Application of Part I.

Power to company to cancel forfeited shares.

3. This part of this act shall apply to every company incorporated either before or after the passing of this act, which obtains a special act incorporating this part of this act.

4. Where any share of the capital of the company is after the passing of this act declared forfeited under and in pursuance of the provisions with respect to the forfeiture of shares for non-payment of calls contained in "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (i), and "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," respectively, and the forfeiture is confirmed by a meeting in accordance with the same provisions respectively, and notice of the forfeiture has been given,—then and in every such case, if the directors of the company are unable to sell the share for a sum equal to the arrears of calls and interest and expenses due in respect thereof, the company at any general meeting held not less than two months after such notice is given may, in case payment of the arrears of calls, interest and expenses due in respect thereof is not made by the registered holder of the share before the meeting is held, resolve that the share instead of being sold shall be cancelled, and the share shall thereupon be cancelled accordingly.

(h) Ante, p. 24.

(i) Ante, p. 28.

5. A declaration in writing made by some credible person, in England or Ireland before a justice, and in Scotland before any sheriff or justice, stating that a sum of money sufficient to pay the arrears of calls, interest and expenses due in respect of the share, could not at the time of the cancellation of the share be obtained for the same upon the stock exchange prescribed in the special act, and if no stock exchange is prescribed then upon the stock exchange, as to England, of the city of London, and as to Scotland of the city of Edinburgh, and as to Ireland of the city of Dublin, shall be sufficient evidence of the fact so declared.

6. Where it is so resolved that any share shall be cancelled, the holder thereof shall from and after the passing of the resolution be precluded from all right and interest therein and in respect thereof; but the cancellation shall not affect the liability of the last registered holder of the share to pay to the company all arrears of calls, interest and expenses due in respect of the share at the time of the cancellation, or the power of the company to enforce payment thereof by action or otherwise.

7. Provided always, that if the company enforces the payment of the arrears of calls, interest and expenses under the last preceding provision, the value of the share at the time of the cancellation thereof shall be deducted from the amount so then due; provided also, that if payment of all arrears of calls, interest and expenses is made before such meeting as aforesaid is held, the share shall revert to the person to whom it belonged at the time of forfeiture, and shall be re-entered on the company's register accordingly.

8. Where any share is declared forfeited, or where any sum payable on any share remains unpaid, the company, with the consent in writing of the registered holder of the share, and with the sanction of a general meeting, may resolve that the share shall be cancelled, and immediately thereupon the share shall be cancelled, and all liabilities and rights with respect to the share shall thereupon be absolutely extinguished.

9. The company may from time to time accept, on such terms as they think fit, surrenders of any shares which have not been fully paid up.

10. The company shall not pay or refund to any shareholder any sum of money for or in respect of the cancellation or surrender of any share.

11. The company may from time to time, in lieu of any shares that have been cancelled or surrendered, issue new shares of such amounts as will allow the same to be conveniently apportioned or disposed of according to the resolution of any ordinary or extraordinary meeting of the company, and may from time to time fix the amounts and times of payment of the calls on any such new shares, and dispose thereof on such terms and conditions as may be so resolved upon: Provided, that the aggregate nominal amount of the new shares shall not exceed the aggregate nominal amount of the shares in lieu of which the new shares are issued, after deducting the amount actually paid up in respect of the shares cancelled or surrendered.

PART II.

ADDITIONAL CAPITAL.

New Ordinary Shares or Stock.

12. Where any company, incorporated either before or after the passing of this act for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, is authorized by any special act hereafter passed, and incorporating this part of this act, to raise any additional sum or sums by the issue of new ordinary shares, or by the issue of new ordinary stock, or (at the option of the company) by either of those modes,—then and in every such case the company, with the sanction of such proportion of the votes of the shareholders and stockholders entitled to vote in that behalf at meetings of the company, present (personally or by proxy) at a meeting of the company specially convened for the purpose, as is prescribed in the special act, and if no proportion is prescribed, then of three-fifths of such votes, may, for the purpose of raising the additional sum or sums, from time to time create and issue (according as the authority given by the special act extends to shares only, or to stock only, or to both) such new ordinary shares, of such nominal amount, and subject to the payment of calls of such amounts and at such times, as the company thinks fit, or such new ordinary stock as the company thinks fit.

Preference Shares or Stock.

13. Where any such company is authorized by any special act hereafter passed and incorporating this part of this act to raise any additional sum or sums by the issue of new preference shares, or by the issue of new preference stock, or (at the option of the company) by either of those modes,—then and in every such case the company, with the like sanction as aforesaid, may for the purpose of raising such additional sum or sums from time to time create and issue (according as the authority given by the special act extends to shares only, or to stock only, or to both) such new shares or new stock, either ordinary or preference, and either of one class and with like privileges, or of several classes and with different privileges, and of the same or different amounts, and respectively with any fixed, fluctuating, contingent, preferential, perpetual, terminable, deferred or other dividend or interest not exceeding the rate prescribed in the special act, and if no rate is prescribed then not exceeding the rate of five pounds per centum per annum, and subject (as to any such new shares) to the payment of calls of such amounts and at such times, as the company from time to time thinks fit:

Provided always, that any preference assigned to any shares or stock so issued under the special act shall not affect any guarantee, or any preference or priority in the payment of dividend or interest, on any shares or stock, that may have been granted by the company under or confirmed by any previous act, or that may be otherwise lawfully subsisting.

14. The preference shares or preference stock so issued shall be entitled to the preferential dividend or interest assigned thereto, out of the profits of each year, in priority to the ordinary shares and ordinary stock of the company; but if in any year ending on the day prescribed in the special act, and if no day is prescribed, then on the thirty-first day of December, there are not profits available for the payment of the full amount of preferential dividend or interest for that year, no part of the deficiency shall be made good out of the profits of any subsequent year, or out of any other funds of the company.

15. The terms and conditions to which any preference share or preference stock is subject shall be clearly stated on the certificate of that preference share or portion of preference stock.

General Provisions as to new Shares or Stock.

16. If, after having created new shares or new stock, the company determines not to issue the whole of the new shares or new stock, they may cancel the unissued new shares or new stock.

17. If, at the time of the issue of new shares or new stock, the ordinary shares or ordinary stock of the company are or is at a premium, then, unless the company before the issue of the new shares or new stock otherwise determines, the new shares or new stock then issued shall be of such amount as will conveniently allow the same to be apportioned among the then holders of the ordinary stock and ordinary shares, respectively, in proportion, as nearly as conveniently may be, to the ordinary shares and ordinary stock held by them respectively, and shall be offered to them at par in that proportion: Provided, that it shall not be obligatory on the company so to apportion or offer any new shares or new stock unless the amount of every new share or portion of new stock to be so offered would if so apportioned be at least the sum prescribed in the special act, and if no sum is prescribed then at least ten pounds.

18. The offer of new shares or new stock shall be made by letter under the hand of the treasurer or secretary of the company given to every such shareholder or stockholder as aforesaid, or sent by post addressed to him according to his address in the shareholders or stockholders address book, or left for him at his usual or then last known place of abode in England, Scotland or Ireland (as the case may require); and every such offer made by letter sent by post shall be considered as made on the day on which the letter in due course of delivery ought to be delivered at the place to which it is addressed.

19. The new shares or portions of new stock so offered shall vest in and belong to the shareholders or stockholders who accept the same or their nominees.

20. If any shareholder or stockholder fails for the time prescribed in the special act, and if no time is prescribed then for one month, after the offer to him of new shares or new stock, to signify his acceptance of the same or any part thereof, then and in every such case at the expiration of that period he shall be deemed to have declined the offer of such new shares or new stock or such part thereof as aforesaid, and the same may be disposed of by the company as hereinafter provided:

Provided, that where a shareholder or stockholder, from absence abroad or other cause satisfactory to the directors of the company, omits to signify within the time aforesaid his acceptance of the new shares or new stock offered to him, the directors, if they think proper, may permit him to accept the same, notwithstanding that such time has elapsed.

21. Subject to the foregoing provisions, the company may from time to time dispose of new shares and new stock at such times, to such persons, on such terms and conditions, and in such manner as the directors think advantageous to the company, but so that not less than the full nominal amount of any share or portion of stock be payable or paid in respect thereof.

PART III.

DEBENTURE STOCK.

22. Where any company, incorporated either before or after the passing of this act for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, is authorized by any special act hereafter passed, and incorporating this part of this act, to create and issue debenture stock,—then and in every such case the company, with the sanction of such proportion of the votes of the shareholders and stockholders entitled to vote in that behalf at meetings of the company, present (personally or by proxy) at a meeting of the company specially convened

APPENDIX.
Part III.

for the purpose, as is prescribed in the special act, and if no proportion is prescribed, then of three-fifths of such votes, may from time to time raise all or any part of the money which for the time being they have raised, or are authorized to raise, on mortgage or bond, by the creation and issue, at such times, in such amounts and manner, on such terms, subject to such conditions, and with such rights and privileges, as the company thinks fit, of stock to be called debenture stock, instead of and to the same amount as the whole or any part of the money which may for the time being be owing by the company on mortgage or bond, or which they may from time to time have power to raise on mortgage or bond, and may attach to the stock so created such fixed and perpetual preferential interest not exceeding the rate prescribed in the special act, and if no rate is prescribed, then not exceeding the rate of four pounds per centum per annum, payable half-yearly or otherwise, and commencing at once, or at any future time or times, when and as the debenture stock is issued, or otherwise, as the company thinks fit.

23. Debenture stock, with the interest thereon, shall be a charge upon the undertaking of the company, prior to all shares or stock of the company, and shall be transmissible and transferable in the same manner and according to the same regulations and provisions as other stock of the company, and shall in all other respects have the incidents of personal estate.

Debenture stock to be a prior charge.

24. The interest on debenture stock shall have priority of payment over all dividends or interest on any shares or stock of the company, whether ordinary or preference or guaranteed, and shall rank next to the interest payable on the mortgages or bonds for the time being of the company legally granted before the creation of such stock; but the holders of debenture stock shall not, as among themselves, be entitled to any preference or priority.

Interest on debenture stock to be a primary charge.

25. If within thirty days after the interest on any such debenture stock is payable the same is not paid, any one or more of the holders of the debenture stock holding, individually or collectively, the sum in nominal amount thereof prescribed in the special act, and if no sum is prescribed, then a sum equal to one tenth of the aggregate amount which the company is for the time being authorized to raise by mortgage, by bond, and by debenture stock, or the sum of ten thousand pounds, whichever of the two last-mentioned sums is the smaller sum, may (without prejudice to the right to sue in any court of competent jurisdiction for the interest in arrear) require the appointment in England or Ireland of a receiver, and in Scotland of a judicial factor.

Payment of arrears may be enforced by appointment of receiver or judicial factor.

26. Every such application for a receiver shall be made to two justices, and every such application for a judicial factor shall be made to the court of session; and on any such application the justices or court (as the case may be), by order in writing, after hearing the parties, may appoint some person to receive the whole or a competent part of the tolls or sums liable to the payment of the interest, until all the arrears of interest then due on the debenture stock, with all costs, including the charges of receiving the tolls or sums, are fully paid; and upon such appointment being made all such tolls or sums shall be paid to and received by the person so appointed; and all money so received shall be deemed so much money received by or to the use of the several persons interested in the same, according to their several priorities.

Mode of appointing receiver or judicial factor.

The receiver or judicial factor shall distribute rateably and without priority, among all the proprietors of debenture stock to whom interest is in arrear, the money which so comes to his hands, after applying a sufficient part thereof in or towards satisfaction of the interest on the mortgages and bonds of the company.

As soon as the full amount of interest and costs has been so received, the power of the receiver or judicial factor shall cease, and he shall be bound to account to the company for his acts or intromissions or the sums received by him, and to pay over to the company any balance that may be in his hands.

27. If the interest on debenture stock is in arrear for thirty days next after any of the respective days whereon the same is payable, the holder for the time being thereof may (without prejudice to his power to apply for the appointment of a receiver or judicial factor) recover the arrears with costs by action or suit against the company in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Arrears may be recovered by action or suit.

28. The company shall cause entries of the debenture stock from time to time created to be made in a register to be kept for that purpose, wherein they shall enter the names and addresses of the several persons and corporations from time to time entitled to the debenture stock, with the respective amounts of the stock to which they are respectively entitled; and the register shall be accessible for inspection and perusal at all reasonable times to every mortgagee, bondholder, debenture stock holder, shareholder, and stockholder of the company, without the payment of any fee or charge.

Debenture stock to be registered.

29. The company shall deliver to every holder of debenture stock a certificate stating the amount of debenture stock held by him; and all regulations or provisions for the time being applicable to certificates of shares in the capital of the company shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to certificates of debenture stock.

Company to deliver certificate to holders of debenture stock.

30. Nothing herein or in the special act authorizing the issue of debenture stock contained shall in any way affect any mortgage or bond at any time legally granted by the company before the creation of such stock, or any power of the company to raise Mortgages not affected by this act.

Application of Part III. to mortgage preference stock, and funded debt.

money on mortgage or bond, but the holders of all such mortgages and bonds shall, during the continuance thereof respectively, be entitled to the same priorities, rights, and privileges in all respects as they would have been entitled to if the special act authorizing the issue of debenture stock had not been passed.

31. Debenture stock shall not entitle the holders thereof to be present or vote at any meeting of the company, or confer any qualification, but shall, in all respects not otherwise by or under this act or the special act provided for, be considered as entitling the holders to the rights and powers of mortgagees of the undertaking other than the right to require repayment of the principal money paid up in respect of the debenture stock.

32. Money raised by debenture stock shall be applied exclusively either in paying off money due by the company on mortgage or bond, or else for the purposes to which the same money would be applicable if it were raised on mortgage or bond instead of on debenture stock.

33. Separate and distinct accounts shall be kept by the company, showing how much money has been received for or on account of debenture stock, and how much money borrowed or owing on mortgage or bond, or which they have power so to borrow, has been paid off by debenture stock, or raised thereby, instead of being borrowed on mortgage or bond.

34. The powers of borrowing and re-borrowing by the company shall, to the extent of the money raised by the issue of debenture stock, be extinguished.

35. The provisions of this part of this act shall be deemed to apply to mortgage preference stock, and to funded debt, as the case may require, in all respects as if mortgage preference stock or funded debt were mentioned throughout this part of this act wherever debenture stock is mentioned therein.

PART IV.

CHANGE OF NAME.

Continuance of powers.

36. Where by any special act hereafter passed and incorporating this part of this act the name of any company incorporated either before or after the passing of this act for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking is changed,—then and in every such case from the passing of the special act the company by their new name shall have and may exercise the powers then vested in the company by their original name; and all acts relating to the company by their original name shall be read and interpreted as if throughout those acts, wherever the original name of the company or any reference to the company by their original name occurs, the new name of the company or a reference to the company by their new name were substituted.

Actions, &c. not to abate.

37. No action, suit, bill, process, writ, indictment, information, or other proceeding, whether civil or criminal, which at or immediately before the passing of the special act is commenced and is then pending,—either at the suit or instance of the company, by their original name, against any other corporation or any person, or at the suit or instance of any other corporation or any person against the company, by their original name,—shall abate, determine, or be otherwise impeached or affected for or by reason of the change of the name of the company; nor shall any notice, tender, requisition, warrant, summons, pleading, civil or criminal writ or other process, record, deed, contract, agreement, writing, or instrument then or thereafter to be made, issued, written, or commenced, be deemed to be vacated, discharged, invalidated, prejudiced, or affected by reason of the company or their undertaking being therein respectively called by the original name of the company or undertaking; and it shall not be necessary in any bill, suit, indictment, information, proceeding, notice, tender, requisition, warrant, summons, pleading, civil or criminal writ, or other process, or in any record, deed, contract, agreement, writing, or other instrument or matter, to aver that the company had been called or known for any period by the original name of the company, or that their undertaking had been called or known within that period by the original name of the undertaking, and that by the special act effecting the change the names of the company and their undertaking were changed, and that after the passing of that special act the company had been called or known by their new name and their undertaking by its new name; but it shall be deemed true, lawful, and sufficient therein to aver the style and describe the company by their new name, and their undertaking by its new name, in the same manner as if the company had been originally incorporated, called, or known by their new name, and as if their undertaking had been originally called or known by its new name.

General saving of rights.

38. Notwithstanding the change of the name of the company, everything before the passing of the special act effecting the change done, suffered, or confirmed under or by virtue of any other act shall be as valid as if the special act effecting the change were not passed; and the change of name and last-mentioned special act respectively shall accordingly be subject and without prejudice to everything so done, suffered, or confirmed before the passing of the last-mentioned special act, and to all rights, liabilities, claims and demands, then present or future, which, if the change of name had not happened and such last-mentioned special act had not been passed, would be incident to or consequent on anything so done, suffered or confirmed.

39. Notwithstanding the change of the name of the company, all deeds, instruments purchases, sales, securities and contracts before the passing of the special act effecting the change made under any other act, or with reference to the purposes thereof, shall be as effectual to all intents in favour of, against and with respect to the company as if the name of the company had remained unchanged.

An Act for amending and extending the Railways (Ireland) Act, 1851, and the Railways (Ireland) Act, 1860. [25th July, 1864.]

Whereas it is expedient that "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1851" (a), and "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1860" (b), should be amended, and the provisions thereof extended, as hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:

1. In all cases where the amount of money which the arbitrator appointed under the provisions of the said acts, or either of them, shall have awarded to be paid by the company to any person in respect of any estate or interest in lands shall exceed the sum of five hundred pounds it shall be lawful for the company, if dissatisfied with such award, upon giving to such person within ten days next after the date of such award notice in writing of their intention to appeal therefrom, to have a traverse entered by the company in the crown book in respect of such award, at the same time and in like manner in all respects as are provided by the aforesaid acts with respect to traverses taken by persons dissatisfied with any award, and the like proceedings shall be taken with respect to a traverse so taken by the company, and the verdict of the jury upon such traverse shall have the like effect as in the case of a traverse taken by a person so dissatisfied: provided always, that in all cases where a traverse shall be so taken by the company, if the verdict of the jury shall be for a sum less than that awarded by the arbitrator, the company shall nevertheless pay to the other party to such traverse such sum not exceeding twenty pounds for the costs of such traverse as the judge before whom the same is tried shall direct; and in case the verdict of the jury shall be for a sum equal to or exceeding the award of the arbitrator, then and in that case the company shall pay to the other party the costs of the traverse, such costs to be taxed and ascertained in the same manner as costs are by law ascertained on the trial of an issue from the Court of Queen's Bench.

The company, if dissatisfied with award, in cases exceeding 500*l.*, may traverse.

2. In all cases of traverse taken upon an award of the arbitrator, the company or person appellant shall be entitled to have the same tried by a special jury upon giving notice in writing to the respondent in such traverse of their or his intention that the same shall be so tried ten days previous to the assizes or term respectively (as the case may be), and the respondent in such traverse shall be so entitled upon giving the like notice six days before the said assizes or term: provided that any judge of any of the superior courts sitting in chamber or at nisi prius may at any time order that such traverse shall be tried by a special jury upon such terms as he may think fit.

Power to have special jury.

3. Where notice has been given to try by special jury either party may, six days before the first day of the assizes or of the term, as the case may be, give notice to the sheriff that such action is to be tried by a special jury; and in case no such notice has been given, or the notice has not been given in sufficient time, no special jury need be summoned to attend, and such traverse shall be tried before a common jury unless otherwise ordered by the judge before whom the same shall be tried.

Notice to be given to the sheriff of special jury.

4. Either party to such traverse shall be entitled to have the premises viewed by the jury, and for that purpose it shall be sufficient to obtain an order of any such judge as aforesaid directing a view to be had, and thereupon all such proceedings shall be had as are directed by "The Common Law Procedure Amendment Act (Ireland), 1853," section 116, with respect to view juries.

Either party to such traverse entitled to have the premises viewed by the jury.

5. In case either party shall be dissatisfied at the trial of such traverse with the ruling of the judge upon any matter of law, he shall be entitled to appeal from such ruling in the manner herein contained.

Either party may appeal from ruling of judge.

6. The party so objecting shall deliver to the judge at the time of such trial a note in writing, stating such objection and the grounds thereof, and shall and may prepare a case, stating the facts and matters appearing in evidence so far as may be necessary, and the ruling of the judge, and the objections to such ruling, and such case may be accompanied by an appendix containing copies of the material documents; and all proceedings shall be taken with respect to the settlement of such case, and within the same period, as are taken in Ireland with respect to bills of exceptions to the direction of a judge at nisi prius.

The party objecting shall deliver to the judge a note in writing, stating objection and grounds thereof.

7. Such special case and the appendix thereto, when settled and signed by the said judge, shall be filed in such one of the superior courts as the said judge shall direct, and such court shall proceed to adjudicate on the same in like manner as upon a special case

Special case, when settled and signed by the judge, to be filed.

(b) Ante, p. 146.

APPENDIX.

Court may direct an issue or other inquiry.

Judgment upon special case to be equivalent to judgment of court.

Costs of appeal to be paid by company where appellants.

As to compensation in respect of lands temporarily occupied.

Taxation of costs.

Construction of term "company."

If company do not take possession within a fortnight of final award, value of crop to be added.

Within five years after the opening of a railway, the company may be called upon to make certain accommodation works, and, if so, the matter shall be referred to an arbitrator.

Arbitrator shall have all the stated under the said Common Law Procedure Act, and the adjudication of such court shall be final.

8. It shall be lawful for such court, upon the hearing of such special case, to direct any issue to be tried, or any valuation or other inquiry to be made, or the said case to be amended in any way, or other act to be done, which such court may deem proper, in order finally to adjudicate upon and determine the rights of the parties.

9. The judgment or order of the said court upon such special case shall be equivalent to a judgment of the said court in a personal action between the parties.

10. In all cases where the company shall take any proceedings by way of appeal as aforesaid the costs thereof shall be ordered to be paid by them; but in cases where the company shall be respondent in such appeal the costs of such proceedings shall follow the event, and be included in the ultimate judgment of the court of appeal.

11. The amount of the purchase money or other compensation payable by the company in respect of lands temporarily occupied by them during the construction of the works, in case the parties shall differ about the same, shall be determined in manner following: The person claiming such purchase money or compensation shall deliver to the arbitrator a short statement in writing, setting forth the nature and amount of such claim, and shall also and at the same time deliver to the company a copy of the same; and the like proceedings in all respects shall be had with respect to such claim as are by the aforesaid acts or by this act directed to be taken with respect to a claim for compensation for lands taken or injuriously affected by the execution of the works: and the arbitrator shall have full jurisdiction to entertain such claim, and determine the amount payable in respect thereof, although the lands so temporarily occupied may not be contained in the maps and plans deposited with him; and the said arbitrator may include the amount so ascertained by him as last aforesaid in his general award, or may make a special award in relation to the same in case it shall be necessary or convenient so to do, such special award to be made in the like manner, and to be subject to the like provisions in all respects as such general award; and all the enactments expressly, or by reference or incorporation, contained in the said acts or in this act with respect to purchase money or compensation ascertained by the award of the arbitrator in respect of lands permanently taken by the company shall be applicable to the purchase money or compensation ascertained as aforesaid by the arbitrator in respect of lands so temporarily occupied as aforesaid.

12. In all cases where costs of conveyances shall be payable by the company such costs shall be taxed by one of the taxing masters of the Court of Chancery in Ireland upon the requisition of such company; and all the provisions of any act of Parliament, and all rules and regulations of the courts of law and equity in Ireland relating to the taxation of costs shall be deemed applicable to such costs so payable by the company in like manner in all respects as if the said company were directly chargeable therewith.

13. In the construction of "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1851," and of "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1860," and of this act, the expression "company" shall include any parties, whether company, undertakers, commissioners, drainage board, corporation, or private persons, empowered to execute any work or undertaking, and to take or use any lands, mills or other hereditaments compulsorily under the provisions of any general or special act of Parliament, already or hereafter incorporating the said recited acts and this act or any of such acts.

14. When any railway company shall not take possession of or pay for any land within one fortnight from the lodgement of the final award of the arbitrator with the clerk of the peace, the said company shall, before taking possession of the same, in addition to the sum awarded by the arbitrator, pay to the occupant of any land to be taken the value of any crop existing upon or in the land at the time of taking possession of same, and which has not been included in said award, such value to be determined by any three justices of the petty sessions district in which such lands may be situated, one to be named by the railway company, one by the occupant of such land, and the third by the two justices so named.

15. Every railway company in Ireland shall cause proper fences to be made and maintained for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining lands not taken, and shall also provide and maintain proper drains or other passages either over or under or by the sides of the railway to convey water from or to the lands lying near or affected by the railway, in the same manner and to the same extent as it was conveyed from or to the said lands before the making of the railway, or as near thereto as the case may be; and in case any owner or occupier of such land shall complain of the want of or insufficiency of any such fences, drains or passages, it shall be lawful for such owner or occupier, within five years after the completion of the works of any railway and the opening of the railway for public use, to present a memorial to the commissioners of public works in Ireland stating the ground of his complaint, and thereupon the commissioners shall inquire into the matter of such complaint, and, if they shall so think fit, the said commissioners shall appoint an arbitrator to hear and determine the matter of the said complaint.

16. The arbitrator so appointed shall have and exercise all the powers vested in any arbitrator appointed under "The Railways (Ireland) Acts, 1851 and 1860," and shall proceed to investigate the said complaint at some convenient place to be named by the said commissioners of public works, after giving ten days' notice of the time and place of meeting to the memorialists and to the railway company, and his award may be traversed in the same manner as any award made by an arbitrator appointed under "The Railways (Ireland) Acts, 1851 and 1860," and if not traversed shall be final; and the costs of the said arbitration and of the said arbitrator shall be paid in the same manner as the costs of an arbitration or arbitrator under "The Railways (Ireland) Acts, 1851 and 1860."

17. The company shall make all such fences, drains and passages as by the award of the said arbitrator they shall be directed to make; but no company shall be required to make the same in such a manner as will prevent or obstruct the working or using of the railway, nor shall they be required to make any fence, drain or passage in respect of which the owner and occupier, or any former owner and occupier, shall have agreed to receive and shall have been paid compensation in lieu of the making of the works themselves.

18. "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1851," and "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1860," and this act, shall be construed together as one act; and this act, together with the said acts, shall be held to be incorporated with those acts in any act already or hereafter incorporating those acts or any of them.

19. This act may be cited as "The Railways Act (Ireland), 1864."

27 & 28 VICT. CAP. 95.

An Act to amend the Act Ninth and Tenth Victoria, Chapter Ninety-three, for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accident. [29th July, 1864.]

Whereas by an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the ninth and tenth years of her Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accident," it is amongst other things provided, that every such action as therein mentioned shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent and child of the person whose death shall have been so caused as therein mentioned, and shall be brought by and in the name of the executor or administrator of the person deceased: And whereas it may happen by reason of the inability or default of any person to obtain probate of the will or letters of administration of the personal estate and effects of the person deceased, or by reason of the unwillingness or neglect of the executor or administrator of the person deceased to bring such action as aforesaid, that the person or persons entitled to the benefit of the said act may be deprived thereof; and it is expedient to amend and extend the said act as hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:

1. If and so often as it shall happen at any time or times hereafter in any of the cases intended and provided for by the said act that there shall be no executor or administrator of the person deceased, or that there being such executor or administrator no such action as in the said act mentioned shall within six calendar months after the death of such deceased person as therein mentioned have been brought by and in the name of his or her executor or administrator, then and in every such case such action may be brought by and in the name or names of all or any of the persons (if more than one) for whose benefit such action would have been, if it had been brought by and in the name of such executor or administrator; and every action so to be brought shall be for the benefit of the same person or persons, and shall be subject to the same regulations and procedure, as nearly as may be, as if it were brought by and in the name of such executor or administrator.

2. And whereas by the second section of the said act it is provided that the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and whose benefit such action shall be brought, and the amount so recovered, after deducting the costs not recovered from the defendant, shall be divided between the before-mentioned parties in such shares as the jury shall by their verdict direct: Be it enacted and declared, That it shall be sufficient, if the defendant is advised to pay money into court, that he pay it as a compensation in one sum to all persons entitled under the said act for his wrongful act, neglect or default, without specifying the shares into which it is to be divided by the jury; and if the said sum be not accepted, and an issue is taken by the plaintiff as to its sufficiency, and the jury shall think the same sufficient, the defendant shall be entitled to the verdict upon that issue.

3. This act and the said act shall be read together as one act.

9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, ante, p. 107.

Where no action brought within six months by executor of person killed, then action may be brought by persons beneficially interested in result of action.

Money paid into court may be paid in one sum, without regard to its division into shares.

If not accepted, defendant entitled to verdict on the issue.

This and recited act to be read as one.

and Ireland by drainage and otherwise; and it is desirable to amend and consolidate the law relating to the improvement of land by owners of limited interests, and to enable such owners to charge their lands with money subscribed for the construction of railways and navigable canals which will permanently increase the value of such lands: Be it enacted, by (&c. &c.), as follows:

1. [Repeals 12 & 13 Vict. c. 100.]

And with regard to the commissioners for the execution of this act, and other general matters, be it enacted as follows:

2. By "the commissioners" shall herein be meant, as regards lands in Great Britain, the inclosure commissioners for England and Wales, and as regards lands in Ireland, the commissioners of public works in Ireland under an act of the first and second years of his late Majesty king William the fourth, intituled "An Act for the Extension and Promotion of Public Works in Ireland," and an act of the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to promote Drainage of Lands, and Improvement of Navigation and Water Power in connexion with Drainage in Ireland," and the several acts amending the same respectively.

3. All the provisions of the act of the ninth and tenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to authorize the Advance of Public Money to a limited Amount to promote the Improvement of Land in Great Britain and Ireland by Works of Drainage," and of any and every other act for the time being in force relating to any of the aforesaid commissioners, so far as the same may concern or be auxiliary to the proceedings or inquiries of the commissioners under the authority of such acts or any of them, or the authentication of instruments, shall, except as in this act otherwise provided, extend and be applicable to their proceedings and inquiries, and the authentication of instruments, under this act.

4. Every assistant commissioner or inspector acting in any matter, inquiry or proceeding by the authority and in the execution of this act may receive declarations and statements, and examine upon declaration all such persons as may voluntarily attend before him in such matter, inquiry or proceeding.

5. If any person shall wilfully give false evidence in any matter, inquiry or proceeding under the provisions of this act, or shall make or subscribe a false statement or declaration for the purposes of this act, such person shall, in England or Ireland, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and shall be punished accordingly.

6. Any notice requiring to be served upon the commissioners may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post, directed to their office in London.

7. In all cases in which it shall be necessary under the provisions of this act to serve any notice upon any other person, it shall be sufficient to send such notice in a registered post letter, directed to such person at his then or last known place of residence or of business, unless the letter containing such notice shall be returned from the post office as undelivered; and if such person shall not have any place of residence or of business within Great Britain or Ireland, or if the place of business or of residence of such person cannot with due diligence be ascertained, then such notice may be served upon such other person as his representative, or be given in such other manner as the commissioners shall in such case direct or approve.

8. The word "landowner" shall mean herein, as to lands in England, the person who shall be in the actual possession or receipt of the rents or profits of any land, whether of freehold, copyhold, customary or other tenure, except where such person shall be a tenant for life or lives holding under a lease for life or lives not renewable, or shall be a tenant for years holding under a lease or an agreement for a lease for a term of years not renewable, whereof less than twenty-five years shall be unexpired at the time of making any application to the commissioners, without regard to the real amount of the interest of any person so excepted; and in the case where the person in the actual possession or receipt of the rents or profits of any land shall fall within the above exceptions, then the person who for the time being shall be in the actual receipt of the rent payable by the person so excepted, unless he shall also fall within the above exceptions, shall, jointly with the person who shall be liable to the payment thereof, be deemed for the purposes of this act to be the owner of such lands; and as to lands in Scotland, the word "landowner" shall denote and include every fiar, liferenter or heir of entail who shall be in the actual possession of the land, or in receipt of the rents payable on the tacks, leases or tenancies of the tenants in the actual possession thereof; and as to lands in Ireland, the word "landowner" shall mean such person as under the act passed in the first and second years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to abolish Compositions for Tithes in Ireland, and to substitute Rentcharges in lieu thereof," shall have the first estate of inheritance, or other estate or interest equivalent to a perpetual estate or interest therein, and also any tenant in dower or by the curtesy, or any person having under the limitations of any settlement by deed, will, act of Parliament or otherwise any estate for life, or other particular estate thereby created or limited out of or in any estate of inheritance, or by, out of or in any such estate or interest as by or under the last-mentioned act is to be deemed equivalent to a perpetual estate or interest; and as to lands in any part of the United Kingdom, the word "landowner" shall include a corporation and also such persons as are empowered by the twenty-third (a) section hereof.

9. By "the improvement of land" shall herein be meant all or any of the following matters:

APPENDIX.

Interpretation of "improvement of land."

6. The making of permanent farm roads and permanent tramways and railways and navigable canals for all purposes connected with the improvement of the estate:

11. The construction or improvement of jetties or landing places on the sea coast or on the banks of navigable rivers or lakes, for the transport of cattle, sheep and other agricultural stock and produce, and of lime, manure and other articles and things for agricultural purposes; provided that the commissioners shall be satisfied that such works will add to the permanent value of the lands to be charged to an extent equal to the expense thereof:

12. The execution of all such works as in the judgment of the commissioners may be necessary for carrying into effect any matter hereinbefore mentioned, or for deriving the full benefit thereof.

10. The word "person" shall in this act include companies and all other corporations.

And with regard to the Proceedings preliminary to the Sanction of any Improvements, be it enacted as follows:

Proceedings preliminary to Sanction of Improvements.

11. When any landowner shall be desirous of borrowing or advancing money under this act for the improvement of his land, he shall make an application to the commissioners to sanction the proposed improvements in such manner and form and stating such particulars as the commissioners shall from time to time direct; and until the proposed improvements shall have been sanctioned by the commissioners in manner hereinafter mentioned, the application may be withdrawn or altered or consolidated with any other application, at the pleasure of the applicant, but without prejudice to his liability as hereinafter mentioned for the expenses incurred by the commissioners or their officers in consequence of his application.

Application to commissioners to sanction improvements.

12. Any two or more landowners may, with the consent of the commissioners, join in an application to them to sanction the improvement of the lands of such landowners respectively, but the sum to be charged in pursuance of any such joint application shall be apportioned so that a separate and distinct sum may become charged on the land of each landowner.

Joint application by several landowners.

13. The commissioners may from time to time frame and circulate, as they shall see occasion, forms indicating the particulars of the information to be furnished to them by landowners for the purposes of this act, and such other forms as the commissioners may deem expedient for facilitating any proceedings under this act.

Commissioners
may issue forms;

14. The commissioners may require security to be given to them by the landowner, by bond, deposit or otherwise, in such form as they may think fit, for the payment to them of the expenses which they or their officers shall incur in respect of the investigation on any application, and, if they shall issue such provisional or other sanctioning order as hereinafter mentioned, of the expenses which they or their officers shall incur in inspecting and ascertaining the due execution of the works; but unless the commissioners shall issue such absolute order as hereinafter mentioned, such payment shall not be a charge on the land to which such application relates, but shall be a debt due by the person making such application to the commissioners, and shall be recoverable by them as in the nature of a crown debt.

for expenses;

15. If the commissioners shall think fit to entertain the application so made to them, they may cause the land to be inspected and examined by an assistant commissioner or an engineer or surveyor, who shall have regard to and examine the proposals and statements contained in such application, and shall report his opinion thereon, and who shall also report whether in his judgment the proposed improvements will effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the land exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon in respect of the improvements applied for; and the commissioners may by themselves or any assistant commissioner, engineer or surveyor, make such other inquiries in relation to any such application as they shall think fit: Provided that the above requisition as to increased annual value shall not apply to any outlay proposed to be made upon or in respect of planting only.

and require proposed improvements to be modified.

17. Before the commissioners shall sanction any improvements, notice shall be given of the application as well by advertisement inserted in two successive weeks in some newspaper published in the county in which the land to be improved lies, or in case there shall be no such newspaper published in such county then in some county adjoining thereto, as by a notice in writing given, where such lands are situate in England or

Ireland, to every person entitled to any estate in such land, or any part thereof, in reversion or remainder, up to and inclusive of the person entitled to the first vested estate of inheritance therein, and to every person entitled to any mortgage upon such land or any part thereof who by reasonable inquiry shall be known to be so interested, and given, where such lands are situate in Scotland, to the nearest heir or heirs of entail, not exceeding three, and to the holders of every heritable security on such lands appearing upon the records; and in such advertisements and notices respectively shall be stated the maximum amount which it is proposed to charge in respect of the improvements, and the greatest and least terms over which it is proposed that the rentcharge should be spread; and the commissioners shall not sanction the improvements until one month shall have elapsed from the publication of the second of such advertisements and the service of such notices (if any) respectively, of which publication, and of the service of all necessary notices as aforesaid, the landowner shall, if required by the commissioners, satisfy them by one or more statutory declarations made by him or on his behalf.

Power of dissent by persons interested, and protection of landowner's infant children.

18. In case any person having any estate in or charge or security on the land to be improved shall within the month named in the last preceding section signify in writing to the commissioners his dissent from such application, stating therein the nature of his estate in or charge or security on such land, the commissioners shall certify such dissent to the landowner by whom the application was made, and shall not make any provisional or other order sanctioning the improvements unless or until such dissent be withdrawn, or an order be made by the High Court of Chancery in England or Ireland respectively, or by the Court of Session in Scotland, in manner hereinafter provided, authorizing the commissioners to sanction the same; nor shall they make any provisional or other order sanctioning the improvement of any land in the case of which the landowner, or the husband of the landowner, shall be the father of the person or persons entitled either at law or in equity to any estate in such land, or any part thereof, in reversion or remainder, up to and inclusive of the person entitled to the first vested estate of inheritance, and such person or persons, or any of them, shall be an infant or infants, or a minor or minors, unless or until such an order as hereinbefore mentioned shall be made by such court as aforesaid.

The same in case of navigable rivers and canals.

19. If the commissioners shall consider that any proposed improvement would interfere with any navigable river or canal respectively vested in or under the management or control of any commissioners, trustees, conservators, undertakers, company or other body or individuals, or the banks or other works or conveniences thereof, or would occasion the flow or discharge into such river or canal of any drainage or other matter, the landowner shall give notice of the application in writing, together with a plan and section of the proposed improvement, to such commissioners, trustees, conservators, undertakers, company or other body or individuals; and in case they shall, within one month after the receipt of such notice, signify in writing to the commissioners their dissent from such application, and state the nature of their interest in or authority over such river or canal, the commissioners shall certify such dissent to the landowner by whom the application was made, and shall not sanction the improvement unless or until such dissent be withdrawn, or an order be made by the High Court of Chancery in England or Ireland respectively, or by the Court of Session in Scotland, in manner hereinafter provided, authorizing the commissioners to sanction the improvement.

Consents necessary in case of church lands.

20. When the land to which the application relates, or any part of such land, is held in right of any church, chapel, or other ecclesiastical benefice, the commissioners shall not sanction any improvement of such land, or of so much thereof as is so held, unless and until the patron of the benefice, and in England and Ireland the bishop of the diocese, and in Scotland the presbytery of the bounds, shall signify to the commissioners, by writing under their hands, their respective consents to such application.

In case of dissent, or when landowner's infant children are to be protected, Court of Chancery or Session may authorize commissioners to proceed.

21. If and when any dissent from any such application to the commissioners for their sanction of proposed improvements shall have been notified in writing to the commissioners, either by a party interested in the lands proposed to be improved (not being lands held in right of any church, chapel or other ecclesiastical benefice), or by the commissioners, trustees, company or other body or individuals interested in any river or canal which would or might be interfered with as hereinbefore mentioned, or if the landowner or the husband of the landowner shall be the father of the person or persons entitled either at law or in equity to any estate in the land to be improved or any part thereof, in reversion or remainder, up to and inclusive of the person entitled to the first vested estate of inheritance, and such person or persons, or any of them, shall be an infant or infants, or a minor or minors, the landowner desiring such improvements may apply to the High Court of Chancery in England or Ireland where such lands are situate in England or Ireland respectively, or to the Court of Session where such lands are situate in Scotland, for an order of such court authorizing the commissioners to entertain and proceed upon the application for such proposed improvements, notwithstanding such dissent or circumstance; and such application shall be made, as to lands in England, to the master of the rolls or any one of the vice-chancellors sitting at chambers, by summons, calling on the party dissenting to show cause why such order should not be made; as to lands in Ireland, to the master of the rolls, by summary petition or otherwise, as he shall by any general order direct; and as to lands in Scotland, to either division of the Court of Session in time of session, or to the lord ordinary sitting on bills in time of vacation, by summary petition; and the court or single judge, as the case may be, to whom such application shall be made, shall hear and determine such application, and for that purpose shall have power to make or direct to be made all such inquiries, and receive and entertain all such statements and evidence, on oath or by affidavit, as such court or judge may consider necessary or desirable, or as may be produced before them or him; and if upon a consideration of all the circumstances such court or judge shall be of opinion that the commissioners should entertain and proceed upon such application, an order shall be made authorizing and requiring them to proceed thereon, and to deal with the same according to the provisions of this act authorizing them in that behalf, notwithstanding such dissent or circumstance as aforesaid: Provided that if at any time after notification of such dissent, and before any such order shall have been applied for and made as aforesaid, such dissent shall be withdrawn by a like notification in writing, it shall not be necessary to make or proceed with such application or to obtain such order.

22. Where any party dissenting shall be out of the jurisdiction of the court, it shall be lawful for the court or judge to order service to be made in such manner as such court or judge may think fit, and upon proof to the satisfaction of such court or judge that such party has had actual notice within a reasonable time of such intended application, it shall be lawful for such court or judge thereupon to hear and determine such application.

Service of notice under preceding clause.

23. The costs of and incidental to every application under the twenty-first and twenty-second sections, and the mode in which such costs shall be settled or taxed, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge who shall hear such application, and if such court or judge shall so direct, the said costs shall be deemed to be part of the expenses of and incidental to the application for the proposed improvements.

And costs may be given by the court.

24. All husbands, guardians, tutors, committees, curators, feoffees, trustees, judicial factors, executors and administrators shall respectively have the same rights and powers of making applications and signifying dissents, and taking other proceedings under this act, as their respective wives, infants, minors, lunatics, idiots, and furious or fatuous persons would have had if free from disability, or as such feoffees, trustees, judicial factors, executors or administrators respectively would have had if the estates, charges or interests of which they shall be such feoffees, trustees or judicial factors, or which shall be vested in them as such executors or administrators, had been vested in them in their own right; but no guardian, tutor, committee, curator, feoffee, trustee, judicial factor, executor or administrator shall be in anywise compelled or obliged to signify a dissent from any application under this act, or be in anywise responsible for the consequences of such application, or of any charge made in pursuance thereof.

Representation of persons under disability for applications and dissents under preceding clauses.

And with regard to the Sanction of any Improvements, and the Rights arising thereunder, be it enacted as follows:

25. If the commissioners shall find that the proposed improvements or any part thereof, whether with or without any alterations by them required or sanctioned, would effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the lands proposed to be improved, or of any part thereof, exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon, they shall sanction such improvements or such part thereof as they shall think expedient, if under the preceding sections it shall be lawful for them so to do, by an order under their hands and seal; and they shall by the same order fix the rate of interest to be allowed on the cost of the sanctioned improvements, having regard to the market value of money at the time, but such interest shall never exceed five per cent. per annum.

Sanction of Improvements, and Rights thereunder.

Commissioners' order sanctioning improvements.

26. The commissioners shall from time to time prepare forms of orders for sanctioning improvements, and shall also, whenever required by the landowner so to do, frame and entitle their said orders under this act in such manner that they may also be and operate as provisional, sanctioning or other corresponding orders under the respective acts applying to any company with which he may have contracted relating to the loan or improvements in question: Provided that every order operating under this act to sanction any improvements shall name the landowner to whom it is issued; shall express the greatest sum to be charged in addition to any costs, charges and expenses under the fiftieth section hereof, and the rate of interest and term of years for the repayment thereof, the former not exceeding five per centum per annum, and the latter not exceeding twenty-five years; shall specify the lands on which such repayment is to be charged; and shall either express or refer to some contract or other document expressing the general scheme of the improvements to be executed.

Forms of orders sanctioning improvements to be prepared by commissioners; what they must contain.

27. Every order operating under this act alone to sanction any improvement may be in the form set forth in schedule (A.) hereto, and shall be called a provisional order, and shall, subject to the following section hereof, create in favour of the landowner named therein the title to an absolute charge on the completion of the sanctioned improvements, which title such landowner may assign, either absolutely or by way of security, to any person; and such assignment may be made by endorsement on the provisional order.

They may be called provisional orders, and may be assigned to parties agreeing to execute improvements.

28. In case of the death of any landowner, or the determination of his interest, between the date of the provisional order and the completion of the improvements sanctioned thereby, the right to complete such improvements, and to assign the title to an absolute charge, shall pass to the succeeding landowner; but if the succeeding landowner shall not within three calendar months after his succession proceed with the works, so as to complete the same in conformity with the provisional order, the preceding landowner, or in case of his decease his executors or administrators, may complete such improvements, and shall become entitled to have the absolute charge executed to him or them. If the succeeding landowner shall complete the improvements there shall be distinct absolute charges executed to such landowner, and the preceding landowner or his personal representatives, for the outlay made by the preceding and succeeding landowners respectively, and in case of difference the commissioners shall determine the proportions; provided that the succeeding landowner may, with the sanction of the inclosure commissioners, and after notice to the parties to whom notice was originally given, or such of them as may be living, and such other persons, if any, as the commissioners may direct, terminate the proceedings under the provisional order, on payment of the outlay and expenses made thereunder, and indemnifying the person to whom the title to the absolute charge may have been assigned. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, if the title to an absolute charge shall have been assigned by the preceding landowner, the assignee may complete the improvements if he shall proceed therewith within one calendar month from the time the preceding landowner ceased to be such landowner.

Provisional
modified.

29. The commissioners may from time to time, on application to be made by the landowner, and after such inquiry as they shall think fit, sanction any modifications or alterations either of the scheme of the improvements or of any other matter expressed or referred to in the provisional order: Provided that no such modification or alteration shall increase the sum to be charged in respect of the improvements, or extend or curtail the term of repayment, beyond the greatest amount which it was proposed so to charge, or the greatest or least term over which it was proposed that the rentcharge should be spread, as respectively stated in the advertisement and notices hereinbefore required: Provided also, that every such modification or alteration shall require the consent of every party who, by having contracted for the execution of the improvements, or by having taken an assignment of the title to an absolute charge or otherwise, may be interested therein; and the modifying order shall be in such form as the commissioners shall from time to time appoint, and shall be construed together with the original order as one order with respect to all rights arising thereunder after the date of the modifying order.

Execution of Improvements.

Detailed specifications to be delivered in advance;

And with regard to the Execution of any Improvements, be it enacted as follows:—

30. Before the commencement of any improvements sanctioned in manner aforesaid the landowner shall deliver to the commissioners a detailed specification thereof, and in the case of buildings, and also in any other case where the same shall be required by the commissioners, a detailed plan or drawing: Provided that when it is not intended to complete the improvements within one year from the date of the provisional or other sanctioning order, the specification and plan or drawing first delivered may comprise so much only as it is intended to complete within one year from the said date, so, however, that for the works of each successive year such specification and plan or drawing as aforesaid be always delivered in advance.

and approved
of works.

31. The specifications and plans or drawings aforesaid shall be examined, and, if necessary, the spot visited by an assistant commissioner, or an engineer or surveyor, who shall report whether in his judgment the improvements as proposed to be effected will be effected in a substantial and durable manner, and, in the case of farm buildings, whether the same or the improvements thereof or additions thereto, will be suitable to the locality; and no improvement shall be commenced or proceeded with until the specifications and plans or drawings aforesaid shall have been approved by the commissioners; but nothing herein contained shall render necessary the re-delivery, re-examination or re-approval of any detailed specifications, plans or drawings which may have been delivered in connexion with the application for the commissioners' sanction to the general scheme of the improvements, and may have been approved in connexion with that sanction.

Adjoining lands, or easements over them, may be sold for purpose of improvements, and conveniences over adjoining lands for the execution of improvements contracted for.

32. All persons interested in any lands adjoining or near to the land improved or proposed to be improved, and being, as to lands in England or Ireland by the provisions of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (a), and as to lands in Scotland by the provisions of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," enabled to sell and dispose of such lands so adjoining or near or any estate or interest therein, may, for the purpose of any improvements authorized by this act, sell and convey or grant to the landowner whose land has been or is proposed to be improved such lands so adjoining or near, or any part thereof, or any easement, authority or right in, through, over or affecting the same, and any such land, easement, authority or right so sold and conveyed or granted shall thereupon become appurtenant to or pertinent of the lands improved or proposed so to be, and with reference to the improvements whereof the same was purchased, and shall be held upon and subject to the same uses, trusts, charges and incidents; and all such persons as aforesaid may also make any agreement with the landowner, or with any person or company that shall have contracted for the actual execution of the improvements, or their respective agents, with reference to entering on, cutting through or into, or prejudicially affecting such lands so adjoining or near; and every such sale, conveyance, grant and agreement shall be valid and effectual accordingly, and the price or consideration shall be settled by two surveyors or a surveyor to be appointed by them in manner provided by the ninth section of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or, as the case may be, by the ninth section of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," and shall be deposited as directed by the same respective sections, and thenceforth become subject to the provisions of the same respective acts.

33. Whenever the commissioners shall think that it may be expedient, in order to obtain or improve an outfall for draining or warping any lands under this act, or otherwise with a view to the improvement of any lands under this act, to enter and execute any works upon any land adjoining or near to the land proposed to be improved, where, by reason of the objection or disability of any owner, lessee or occupier of such land, such works could not be otherwise executed, proceedings may be taken, if the said lands shall lie in England, either under the provisions of the act of the tenth and eleventh years of the reign of her present majesty, chapter thirty-eight, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Drainage of Lands in England and Wales," or under those of the third part of "The Land Drainage Act, 1861," and, if in Scotland, under the provisions of the act of the tenth and eleventh years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and thirteen, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Drainage of Lands in Scotland," but as though in such act the inclosure commissioners for England and Wales had everywhere been named in place of the sheriff; and if such proceedings shall have been taken before the sanction of the improvements in question by the commissioners under this act, the commissioners may, by their order sanctioning such improvements, declare the works in respect of which they shall have been taken to be expedient, and such works shall then be deemed to have been authorized by the commissioners or by the sheriff, as the case may be, and the provisions of the said respective acts shall apply to them accordingly.

Works necessary to be made on adjoining lands for execution of improvements may be made under certain acts.

34. Every provisional or modifying order shall be a full authority to the landowner or successive landowners and their representatives in the respective cases hereinbefore defined, and to all persons employed by or under contract with him or them respectively, to enter upon the lands to be improved, and any adjoining or neighbouring lands acquired or authorized to be entered under either of the two last preceding sections, and to execute in and on the same, without impeachment of waste by any remainderman or reversioner, all the improvements sanctioned by the same order according to the specifications and plans or drawings approved by the commissioners, and to do, execute, and use all such acts, works, and conveniences as may be proper for making, maintaining and using such improvements; and for the purpose of effecting any improvement under this or the recited acts it shall be lawful to get and work freestone, limestone, clay, sand and any other mineral or substance out of the land to be improved or charged, and to make tramroads and other ways, and to burn and make bricks, tiles and other things to be used in effecting such improvements, and also for the same purpose to cut down and use any timber or trees not planted or serving for shelter or ornament.

Provisional order to protect from impeachment of waste, and to authorize getting materials from land, &c.

35. [Saving rights of the crown.]

36. [Saving rights of the commissioners of her Majesty's works, &c.]

37. [Saving rights of duchy of Cornwall.]

38. [Saving rights of duchy of Lancaster.]

39. [Saving rights of the Admiralty and of the Board of Trade.]

40. [Plans to be deposited with Admiralty before commencing works below high-water mark.]

41. If at any time or times it shall be deemed expedient by the Admiralty or the Board of Trade, as the case may require, to order a local survey and examination of any embankment or work proposed to be constructed under the powers of this act in, over or affecting any tidal or navigable water or river, or of the intended site thereof, the landowner shall defray the costs of every such local survey and examination, and the amount thereof shall be a debt due to her Majesty from the landowner, and if not paid upon demand may be recovered as a debt due to the crown, with the costs of suit, or may be recovered, with costs, as a penalty is or may be recoverable from the landowner.

Landowner to pay expenses of survey ordered by Admiralty, or Board of Trade.

42. [Saving rights of her Majesty's principal secretary of state for war.]

43. [Rights of commissioners of sewers saved.]

44. [Works connected with Thames to be executed under direction of conservators of Thames.]

45. [Metropolitan Board of Works, &c. protected.]

46. [Water companies and commissioners protected.]

47. [Rivers, canals, &c. protected.]

48. The commissioners shall, if and as they see occasion, cause any improvements in progress under this act to be inspected by a commissioner or assistant commissioner, or an engineer or surveyor, to ascertain the due execution thereof.

Commissioners may inspect works.

And with regard to Charges for Improvements under this act, be it enacted as follows:

Charges for Improvements.

49. When the commissioners are satisfied that the improvements sanctioned by them, or some part thereof, have been properly executed, either according to the specifications and plans or drawings approved of by them, or with such deviations therefrom as in their judgment will not diminish the permanent benefit accruing from such improvements to the lands wherein they have been made, they shall execute a charge under their hands and seal upon the inheritance or fee of the lands comprised in the provisional or other sanctioning order, or some sufficient part thereof, for the sum by the same order expressed to be chargeable in respect of such improvements, if all the said improvements have been completed, or for a proportional part of such sum if a part only of the said improvements has been executed, together, in either case, with the interest by the same order expressed, and with the amount, if any, which shall have been paid in respect of the purchase of adjoining lands, or of any easement, authority or right in, through, over or affecting adjoining lands, with interest thereon at the like rate.

50. If the landowner is desirous that the inheritance or fee of the lands improved should be charged with the expenses of and incident to his application to the commissioners, or his contract with any company or person relating to the execution of the improvements, or to the advance of money for their execution, the commissioners may ascertain the amount of the costs, charges and expenses properly incurred preparatory or in relation to and consequent on such contract, and the application to the commissioners or either of them, and may include in the principal money charged on the inheritance or fee of such lands the amount of such costs, charges and expenses, and of the settled or taxed costs, if any, which a court or judge shall have ordered as aforesaid to be deemed and taken to be part of the expenses of and incident to the application for improvements, or such part thereof as the commissioners think fit; and the commissioners may also include in such principal money interest at a rate not exceeding five pounds per centum per annum on all payments forming part of the same principal money from the respective dates of such payments to that of the absolute order, but so that no interest shall be allowed on any such payment for more than six years; provided that the total amount of the principal money to be charged on the lands improved under the provisions of this act shall not in any case exceed that to which, in the opinion of the commissioners, the inheritance or fee of the lands improved will be durably benefited by the improvements.

51. Every charge under this act shall be created by way of rentcharge, payable half-yearly, extending over the term of years fixed by the provisional or other sanctioning order, and the first payment thereof to be made six months after the time when the works in respect of which the same was granted were executed to the satisfaction of the commissioners; and the payment for each half year shall be, and be expressed to be, as to part thereof a repayment of a certain amount of principal money, and as to the remainder thereof a payment of interest; and the charge shall be duly stamped for denoting payment of the proper ad valorem stamp duty which would be payable on a mortgage for securing the like amount as the principal money thereby charged, and shall be called an absolute order; and a copy of every such absolute order shall be authenticated by the seal of the commissioners, and shall be kept by them; and such copy, and any copy thereof authenticated by their seal, shall be evidence of the contents and purport of the same absolute order.

52. Charges under this act shall be made according to the form in the schedule (B.) hereto annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit.

53. Whenever, by assignment, under the twenty-sixth section hereof or otherwise, a company having power to execute or advance money for the improvement of land shall become entitled to the creation of any charge under either the forty-ninth or the seventy-eighth section hereof, the commissioners shall, if required, but subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, create such charge in the form of, and so that it may also operate as, an absolute or other corresponding order under the act or acts applying to such company.

54. Any company authorized by act of parliament to execute or advance money for the improvement of land, by giving notice to the commissioners of their intention to avail themselves of any of the powers given by this act, shall be held to have adopted the same, and thenceforth all the procedure of such company shall be carried on under and in accordance with this act only; and any such company which shall adopt this act as hereinbefore provided may, with the sanction of three-fourths of the shareholders present at an extraordinary meeting of the company specially convened for the purpose, execute or advance money for the execution of any improvement authorized by this act in any part of the United Kingdom, although not so authorized by any act or acts relating to the company.

55. The execution of the absolute order by the commissioners shall be conclusive evidence in all courts, and for all purposes, of the validity of the charge thereby expressed to be made, and no inquiry shall be permitted either into the title or estate of the landowner, or into the due performance of anything required to be done by this act, or as to any other matter on which the validity of such charge might but for this enactment have depended.

56. A memorial of every absolute order of the commissioners whereby a rentcharge is created on land in England and Wales, in pursuance of this act, shall be registered at the office of the land registry in England, and a memorial of every absolute order of the commissioners whereby a rentcharge is created on land in Ireland, in pursuance of this act, shall be entered in the proper office for the registration of deeds and wills, and such memorials respectively shall express and contain the date of the order, the name and address of the landowner, the particulars of the lands charged, the amount of the rentcharge, and the period during which the same shall be made payable; and the production of the absolute order, sealed with the seal of the commissioners, shall be a sufficient authority to the registrar for the entry of such memorial at the proper registry office; and all grants of rentcharges on lands in Scotland shall be registered in the general or particular register of sasines: provided that every rentcharge to which the present clause applies shall have priority as hereinafter declared, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

57. [Landowner may borrow the amount of certain public assessments, and charge same on inheritance;]

58. [In form specified, together with costs of application.]

59. From the date of the absolute order, the grantee thereof, and his executors, administrators, successors and assigns, shall have a charge on the lands therein comprised for the principal money from time to time remaining undischarged, by payment of the rentcharge, with interest, at the rates in the several cases hereinbefore respectively expressed, and such charge shall have priority over every other then existing and future charge and incumbrance affecting such lands or estates and interests respectively, whether created under the powers of any act of parliament or otherwise, except quit rent, crown rents, chief rents, feu duties, ground annuals, and other charges incident to tenure, tithe commutation rentcharges and teinds, charges created or to be created under any act authorizing advances of public money for the improvement of land, and any charges created under this act or charges of prior date created under any other existing act of parliament authorizing the charging of lands with the expense of and incident to their improvement: provided that in case a part only of the land charged is subject to a mortgage or other incumbrance, the charge created under the authority of this act shall have priority over the mortgage or other incumbrance only to the extent of a due proportion of such charge, when and so soon as the same shall be ascertained under and pursuant to the sixty-sixth section of this act.

Grantee to have charge for principal money from time to time unpaid, with priority over other incumbrances.

60. Every charge under this act shall, as regards the holder thereof, be deemed to be personal property, except that any holder of such a charge, who shall desire to extinguish the same by reuniting it to the land charged, shall have power for that purpose to direct by any deed that it shall be reunited to and merge in the beneficial interest in the said land, as if it were of the same nature and tenure therewith; but all trustees, directors, and other persons who may be directed or authorized to invest any money on real security shall (unless the contrary be provided by the instrument directing or authorizing such investment) have power, at their discretion, to invest money in such charges, or on mortgages thereof.

Charges to be personal property, but money authorized to be invested on real security may be invested therein, or on mortgages thereof.

61. No charge on land made by any absolute order by virtue of this act shall be deemed such an incumbrance as shall preclude a trustee of money, with power to invest the same in the purchase of land or on mortgage, from investing it in a purchase or upon a mortgage of the land so charged, unless the terms of his trust or power expressly provide that the land to be so purchased or taken in mortgage be not subject to any prior charge.

Charges not to preclude trustees from investing in purchase or on mortgage of lands.

62. [Proprietor of Scotch entailed estate may avail himself of act, and rentcharge to be charge on such estate]

63. Every rentcharge on land by virtue of this act may be recovered by the person or company for the time being entitled to the same, as to lands in England or Ireland, by the same means, and with the like powers, and in like manner in all respects as a rentcharge in lieu of tithes would be recoverable if charged on the same land under the act of the seventh year of King William the Fourth for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales, or under the act of the first and second years of the reign of her present Majesty to abolish compositions for tithes in Ireland and to substitute rentcharges in lieu thereof, and the several acts passed for amending the same, as the case may be, and as if such rentcharge by virtue of this act were a rentcharge in lieu of tithes made payable to such person or company under the said acts respectively, and as to lands in Scotland by the same means and in the like manner in all respects as any feu duties or rent or annual rent or other payment out of the same lands would be recoverable.

Rent-charges to be recoverable as tithe rent-charges or feu duties.

64. If any rentcharge payable under this act shall be in arrear, such arrear shall not bear interest for a longer period than six months, but interest at five pounds per centum per annum in respect of the same, for any period not exceeding six months, may be recovered in the same manner as the sum in arrear: provided that if, at the expiration of six months from the time of any payment falling into arrear, there shall not be upon the land charged a sufficient distress to answer and satisfy the said payment and interest thereon for the said period of six months, together with the costs and charges of such distress, then the arrears of such payment shall continue to bear interest at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum until payment or satisfaction thereof, and such interest may be recovered in the same manner as the sum in arrear.

Interest on arrears of rent-charges.

65. The grantee or other person for the time being entitled to any rentcharge created under this act may assign the same by deed duly stamped, and wherein the consideration is truly stated; and such assignment may be according to the form in schedule (C.) to this act annexed, or to the like effect; and all assignments made in such form, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, shall be effectual to vest, both at law and in equity, the charge thereby assigned, and all the powers, authorities, rights and remedies of the assignor with reference to such charge, in the assignee, his successors, executors, administrators and assigns respectively, and notice of such assignment shall be sent to the commissioners at their office in London.

66. Every landowner on whose land a charge shall have been made under this act, and every succeeding tenant for life, tenant in tail, and other person having a limited interest in the land so charged, shall, as between himself and the persons in remainder or reversion, be bound to pay the yearly or other periodical payments of such charge which shall become payable during the continuance of his interest; and in case he be in the actual occupation or entitled to an apportioned part of the rents and profits of such land up to the time of the termination of his interest, he shall also be bound to pay an apportioned part of the yearly rent or other periodical payment of such charge which shall become due next after the termination of his interest, proportional to the time which elapsed between the day for the previous payment and the day of such termination: provided that no person becoming entitled in possession to any estate or interest in the land shall be liable, as between himself and the persons entitled to the rentcharge, to pay any arrears of the charge remaining unpaid at the time of his becoming so entitled in possession beyond the amount of two years payment of such charge: provided also, that the amount paid by any person in respect of such arrears, and any costs occasioned by nonpayment thereof shall be a debt from the person who in the first instance ought to have paid the same, or from his estate, to the person who paid the same, and shall be recoverable accordingly.

67. If any tenant or occupier at a rent join in the application for an improvement, or by writing under his hand signify to the commissioners, or to an assistant commissioner or engineer, his consent to become charged with the charge, or an apportioned part thereof, as hereinafter mentioned, such tenant or occupier shall during his tenancy or occupation be liable to pay the charge, or an apportioned part thereof, as hereinafter mentioned; and in case the charge be made in respect of the improvement as well of other land as of the land included in such tenancy or occupation, the commissioners may, upon such consent of the tenant or occupier, declare in the absolute order what portion of the whole charge payable in respect of the improvement shall be payable by such tenant or occupier during his tenancy or occupancy in respect of the probable improvement of the land included in his tenancy or occupation; but, except as aforesaid, every tenant or occupier who pays such charge shall be entitled to deduct the amount thereof from the rent payable by him to the landowner, and shall be allowed the same in account with him.

68. If at any time land charged under this act, or under any other act authorizing the creation of charges by the commissioners, is occupied in separate farms or other holdings, or has become the property of separate owners, or the owner thereof is entitled thereto under separate titles or for distinct and separate interests, or is desirous to sell or dispose of part of such land, or part only of such land is subject to any mortgage or other incumbrance, or for any other reason it would be desirable that the charge should be apportioned or a part of the land charged released therefrom, the commissioners may, with the consent of the landowner, or if the land has become the property of separate owners, or a part thereof is subject to any mortgage or incumbrance, then upon the application of any one of such owners, or of such mortgagee or incumbrancer, but in every case with due notice to the grantee or assignee of the charge, or the husband, guardian, tutor, curator, committee or trustee of such grantee or assignee, if a married woman, infant, lunatic, idiot, or furious or fatuous person, and to such other parties (if any) as the commissioners think right, either release from such charge any part of the land charged therewith, or apportion such charge so that a separate and distinct charge may become charged on each separate farm or holding, or on the land of each landowner, or on the land held under each separate title or for each distinct and separate interest, or on the part or each part which the landowner is desirous to sell or dispose of and the part intended to be retained by him, or on the part subject to such mortgage or other incumbrance and on the residue, or on any other separate parts of the land, but so that no charge charged under such apportionment shall be less than twenty shillings for each half-yearly payment: provided that no lands shall, in consequence of any such apportionment or release, become charged with any greater amount than that to which, in the opinion of the commissioners, they have been durably benefited by the improvements in respect of which such charge was created.

69. Every such apportionment or release shall be made by an order under the hands and seal of the commissioners, and shall be in the form set out in Schedule (D.) or (E.) to this act, as the case may be, or as near thereto as circumstances will permit, and as to lands in England and Wales, or in Ireland or Scotland, shall be registered in the manner mentioned in the fifty-fourth section hereof, or as near thereto as circumstances will permit; and a copy of every such order shall be authenticated by the seal of the commissioners, and shall be kept by them; and such copy, or any copy thereof authenticated by their seal, shall be conclusive evidence in all courts and for all purposes of the contents and purport of the same order, and of the validity of the apportionment or release thereby expressed to be made; and such order shall take effect from the date thereof, subject to the continuance of all rights and remedies for the recovery of monies which before the date thereof may have become payable out of any lands under the charge so apportioned or released.

70. Every charge apportioned or released as aforesaid shall be recoverable out of the lands on which the same is charged by the order of apportionment, or which shall not by the order of release be released therefrom, in the same manner as if the same had been originally charged on such lands respectively, and shall, for all the purposes of this act, or of the act under which the original charge was created, be deemed to be an original charge on such lands by absolute order.

71. Where any lands are charged by more than one absolute order, any order of apportionment or release under the preceding sections hereof may comprise all or any number of the rentcharges existing by virtue of such absolute orders.

And with regard to the upholding Improvements under this act, be it enacted as follows:

72. So long as any land shall continue charged with any charge hereunder, the person for the time being bound to make the periodical payments of such charge shall uphold the improvements and works in respect of which such charge is made, and shall keep clear and open the outfalls and watercourses of all the drains (if any), and shall, if required either by the commissioners or by any person who shall for the time being be interested in such charge under any assignment or mortgage thereof, once in every year certify to the commissioners the state of such improvements and works, and of such outfalls and watercourses (if any); and if such person shall not so keep and uphold such improvements and works, and such outfalls and watercourses (if any), or shall fell, or cause or knowingly permit to be felled, except in proper thinning, any trees planted under the authority of this act as an improvement, he shall be liable to an action on the case, in the nature of an action of waste, for the damage thereby occasioned, at the suit of any person entitled to any estate in remainder and reversion in such lands.

73. Every person for the time being bound to make the periodical payments of any charge may from time to time, by himself, his engineers, surveyors, agents, servants and workmen, enter upon any lands in, through or upon which any of the works have been executed, to ascertain the condition of the works, and to maintain and repair the same, nevertheless paying to the person for the time being enabled by this act to sell or grant any easement in such lands, in case the parties differ about the same, such compensation as shall be determined by two justices or the sheriff, as provided by "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or "The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," for settlement by justices and sheriffs respectively of questions of disputed compensation: Provided that, as to any lands adjoining or near the land improved, to which the provisions of the acts of the tenth and eleventh years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapters thirty-eight and one hundred and thirteen, and those of the third part of "The Land Drainage Act, 1861," are hereinbefore respectively made applicable, the powers of entry upon such lands for any of the purposes aforesaid shall be subject to and be regulated by the provisions of those acts respectively.

74. When any farmhouses, farm buildings or works susceptible of damage by fire shall have been erected, improved or added to under this act, then, so long as any land shall continue charged under this act in respect thereof, the person for the time being bound to make the yearly or other periodical payments of such charge shall insure and keep insured against damage by fire all such farmhouses, farm buildings and works in an amount equal to the principal amount originally secured by such charge at the least; and such person shall once in every year certify to the commissioners the fact of such insurance, and the particulars thereof, and that the premium and duty for such insurance for the year then current have been duly paid; and if such person shall not insure or keep insured such farmhouses, farm buildings and works, or shall not duly certify the matters aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the person entitled to the charge for the time being, with the assent of the commissioners, to insure against damage by fire the said farmhouses, farm buildings and works in an amount not exceeding the principal amount originally secured by such charge, and either in the name of the person by whom such default shall have been made, or in the name of the landowner mentioned in the absolute order, and thereafter to keep the same insured during the continuance of the said charge; and the person for the time being bound to make the periodical payments of such charge shall from time to time, on the day on which the next payment shall become due on the said charge, repay to the person for the time being entitled to the said charge any sums so paid by him for premium and duty on such insurance; and in default of such payment, the amount of such premium and duty, with interest thereon at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum from the time of such default, may be recovered by the last-mentioned person by the same means and in the like manner as if the same had been payable as part of the said charge.

APPENDIX.

Charges apportioned, or from which part of the lands have been released, to be deemed original charges.

Several charges may be dealt with in one order of apportionment or release.

Upholding Improvements.

Improvements to be upheld, and condition thereof certified, if required.

Power to enter on neighbouring lands for repair of works, making compensation.

Farmhouses, &c. to be insured: power to insure in case of default.

APPENDIX.

Inclosure commissioners may compel maintenance of improvements.

75. If it shall be represented to the commissioners that the person for the time being bound to make periodical payments of any charge created under this or any other existing act authorizing the advance of money for the improvement of land has neglected to uphold and maintain the improvements in respect of which the charge was executed, or any of them, the commissioners may, upon security being given for such an amount as they may consider necessary to cover any expenses that may be incurred by them, cause an inspection of the works to be made by an assistant commissioner, engineer, or surveyor.

After such inspection, if the commissioners are satisfied that the improvements have not been upheld and maintained, they shall cause notice to be given to the person bound to make the said periodical payments requiring him to execute the works necessary to uphold and maintain the same within three calendar months from the time of giving such notice.

If such works shall not be executed to the satisfaction of the commissioners within such three months, they may cause such works as in their judgment shall be necessary to uphold and maintain such improvements to be executed by a person appointed by them.

The costs thereof, including the expenses of the assistant commissioner, engineer or surveyor, shall be repaid by the person bound to make the said periodical payments to the person entitled to the charge, on request, and in default thereof the amount so certified may be recovered, with all expenses incidental to the recovery thereof, in the name of the person for the time being entitled to the charge, by the same means and in the like manner as if the same had been payable as part of the said charge.

Inclosure commissioners may give relief from maintenance of improvements.

76. If it shall be represented to the commissioners that it is not expedient or necessary that any works for the cost of which there shall be a subsisting charge, or any part of such works, should be upheld or maintained, the commissioners may, on having deposited with them a sum to be fixed by them, to cover all expenses, cause the said works to be inspected by an assistant commissioner, engineer or surveyor.

If after such inspection and notice to the parties who were served with notice of the application to charge the land or their representatives, and such other persons, if any, as the commissioners may direct, the commissioners shall find and certify that it is not expedient or necessary that the works or any of them should be upheld or maintained, thereupon the person for the time being bound to make the said periodical payment shall be relieved from all liability in respect of the maintenance of the works referred to in the commissioners' certificate.

Admiralty may remove works abandoned or fallen into decay.

77. If any embankment or work constructed under the powers of this act in, under, over, through or across any tidal water or navigable river, or if any portion of any embankment or work which affects or may affect any such water or river, or the access thereto, shall be abandoned, or suffered to fall into disuse or decay, it shall be lawful for the Admiralty or the Board of Trade, as the case may require, to abate and remove the same, or such part or parts thereof as he or they may at any time or times deem fit and proper, and to restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the cost and charge of the landowner, the amount of which cost and charge shall be a debt due from the landowner to the crown, and be recovered accordingly, with costs of suit.

Subscription to Railways.

Conditions for application to commissioners.

And with regard to charging Lands with money subscribed for the Construction of Railways, be it enacted as follows:

78. In case any landowner shall be desirous of subscribing for any shares or stock in the capital, whether original or additional, of a company having power to construct a railway or navigable canal, or any branch or extension railway or navigable canal, or any deviation of a line of railway or a navigable canal already sanctioned, the works for which such subscription is to be made being unfinished, or in any additional capital to be raised for the completion of any such railway, canal, branch, extension or deviation, the same being upon or near to and which will improve or benefit the lands of such landowner, and who shall be desirous that such amount, or any part thereof, may be charged upon the lands so to be improved, it shall be lawful for him to apply to the commissioners for that purpose within the time limited by the railway or canal company's act or acts for the construction of the works in question.

Commissioners' proceedings on application.

79. If the commissioners shall think fit to entertain such application, they shall cause all such inquiries to be made, and take all such other steps, as shall seem to them expedient for obtaining information as to the circumstances; and all the provisions of the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fifth and fifty-first sections of this act shall apply to the case as though an improvement were to be made of the lands proposed to be charged.

Provisional order sanctioning charge.

80. If the commissioners shall be satisfied that the railway or canal, when constructed and open for traffic, will effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the lands exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon, they shall execute and deliver to the landowner a provisional order, under their seal and the hands of two of them, expressing their sanction of the charge proposed; and such order shall be made as near to the form set forth in the Schedule (A.) to this act as the circumstances will permit, and shall, with the right to a charge thereby created, be assignable by endorsement either absolutely or by way of security to any company or person that may agree to advance, by paying the same to the railway or canal company, the amount authorized to be charged, and notice of such assignment shall be given to the commissioners, and shall be registered by them.

81. Every company empowered by act of Parliament to lend money for the improvement of land is hereby empowered to advance, by paying the same to the railway or canal company, any money authorized to be charged in manner aforesaid.

82. When the railway or canal shall have been completed and opened throughout for public traffic, and as many shares in the capital of the railway or canal company subscribed for or held as aforesaid by the landowner as shall be equal in nominal amount to the money authorized to be charged shall have been fully paid up, and the certificates for such shares shall have been deposited by the landowner with the commissioners, the commissioners shall, by an absolute order under their hands and seal, execute to the landowner or his assignees a charge upon the inheritance or fee of the lands in question of the amount authorized as aforesaid to be charged, and may, if the landowner shall so desire, include, with the principal money so charged, the costs, charges and expenses of the application and orders, and of any advance which may have been made to him of the amount authorized to be charged, and such settled or taxed costs and interest as mentioned in the fiftieth section hereof, subject nevertheless to the proviso in the same section contained.

83. Such absolute order shall be made in the form in the Schedule (B.) to this act annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances will permit, and all the provisions of this act relating to absolute orders, whether in respect of the form or effect of such charges or orders or otherwise, except only the provisions for the apportionment and release of such charges, shall apply to absolute orders under the last preceding section as far as the circumstances admit.

84. The landowner shall forthwith give notice to the railway or canal company of the execution of such absolute order, and of the deposit of such certificates with the commissioners, and thereupon the company shall make an entry or memorial in their register of shareholders with respect to such shares of the fact of such absolute order having been executed.

85. From the time of such notice, and during the whole term of the charge created by such absolute order, the person who for the time being shall be bound to make the periodical payments of such charge shall be entitled to the said shares, and if the same shall not at the time being be registered in his name, the person registered as the holder thereof shall, as between himself and the person so entitled, hold them in trust for such last-mentioned person.

86. The person so for the time being entitled may at any time require the person registered as the holder of the said shares, or his representatives, to transfer to him the said shares, and such transfer shall thereupon be made accordingly, but at the expense in all respects of the transferee; and upon the production of such transfer duly stamped, and of a certificate by the commissioners under their hands and seal that the transferee is the person at the time being bound to make the periodical payments of the said charge, the railway or canal company shall register such transfer.

87. With the exception of such transfers as may from time to time be made for the purpose of transferring the shares to the person so for the time being entitled thereto, the said shares shall not under any circumstances be transferred or disposed of by the registered holder, whether he be the person for the time being entitled thereto or not, during the term of the said charge; but during the term of such charge the registered holder for the time being of the said shares shall have all the other rights and powers of a shareholder in the railway or canal company in respect of the said shares; and the railway or canal company shall not be bound to see to the application of any dividend received by such registered holder, but as between himself and the person or persons for the time being entitled to such shares he shall hold any dividend which may be received by him in trust for the person who, at the time when such dividend became payable, was the person entitled to the said shares.

88. Whenever any person or those whom he legally represents as their executor or administrator shall have been bound to make, and shall have made, such and so many periodical payments of the charge as to repay thereby principal money which, in proportion to the whole amount of principal money charged and the whole number of the said shares, shall correspond to any integral number of shares, with or without a fraction over, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, on the application of such person, made either during the term of the charge or within two years after its expiration, to certify that fact under their hands and seal, and by the same certificate to appropriate to such person certain specified shares to such integral number, and to deliver to him the corresponding share certificates; and upon the production to the railway or canal company of such certificate by the commissioners and share certificates, it shall be lawful for such person, if he shall not already be the registered holder, to require such shares

27 & 28 VICT. CAP. 120.

An Act to facilitate in certain Cases the obtaining of further Powers by Railway Companies. [29th July, 1864.]

"Whereas it is expedient that in certain cases railway companies be enabled to obtain further powers on complying with the conditions of a general act of parliament, without being obliged to procure in each case a special act:" be it therefore enacted by (&c. &c.) as follows:

Preliminary.

Short title.
Interpretation of terms.

1. This act may be cited as "The Railway Companies Powers Act, 1864."
2. In this act—
The term "railway" includes works connected with or for the purposes of a railway, and also a railway authorized to be but not actually constructed:
The term "Railway Bill" means a bill pending in or intended to be introduced into either house of parliament, having for its object or one of its objects to authorize the making of a railway:
The term "the Companies Clauses Acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England or Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in England or Ireland, "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845;" (a) and, so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845;" together with in each case "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863;" (b)
The term "the Board of Trade" means the lords of the committee for the time being of her majesty's privy council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations.

Description of Cases within this Act.

Act to apply in cases therein named.

3. This act shall take effect and apply in each of the cases following; namely,
 - I.—Where a railway company are desirous that authority should be given to themselves and some other railway company or companies to enter into an agreement with respect to all or any of the matters following (c); namely,
 - The maintenance and management of the railways of the companies respectively, or of any one or more of them, or of any part thereof respectively;
 - The use and working of the railways or railway, or of any part thereof, and the conveyance of traffic thereon;
 - The fixing, collecting, and apportionment of the tolls, rates, charges, receipts, and revenues levied, taken, or arising in respect of traffic;
 - The joint ownership, maintenance, management and use of a station or other work; or the separate ownership, maintenance, management and use of several parts of a station or other work;
 - II.—Where a railway company are desirous of obtaining an extension of the time limited for the sale by them of superfluous lands:
 - III.—Where a railway company incorporated by special act or by certificate under "The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864" (d), are desirous of obtaining authority to raise additional capital.

Application for Certificate.

As to application for certificate by company to
Board of Trade.

4. In any such case the company, if desirous to obtain a certificate under this act, shall proceed as follows; namely,
 - (1.) They shall apply to the board of trade for a certificate under this act:
 - (2.) They shall lodge at the office of the board of trade a draft of the certificate as proposed by them:
 - (3.) They shall publish notice of the application according to the general rules under this act (e).

(a) 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, ante, p. 24.

(b) 26 & 27 Vict. c. 118, ante, p. 224.

(c) See also 26 & 27 Vict. c. 92, s. 22 et seq., ante, p. 219.

(d) Post, p. 253.

(e) Post, p. 252.

5. As soon as conveniently may be after the time for completion of the required notice, the board of trade shall proceed to inquire whether the company have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting notice.

6. The board of trade, before settling a draft of a certificate, shall take into consideration any representation made to them, and shall duly inquire into the merits of any objection brought before them, respecting the application.

Opposition of Railway or Canal Company to Application.

7. If in any case any railway or canal company desire to be heard by counsel, agents, and witnesses against the application of the promoters, and (within such time as is prescribed by general rules under this act) lodge at the office of the board of trade a notice in writing to that effect (hereinafter referred to as a notice of opposition) in the form set forth in the schedule to this act (with such variations as circumstances require), in that case the board of trade, if the railway or canal company lodging the notice would be affected in any way by the proposed certificate, shall not proceed on the application of the promoters.

8. Where the board of trade do not proceed on the application they shall, not later in any year than the fifteenth day of February, if parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of parliament, lay before both houses of parliament a copy of the draft certificate lodged by the promoters and of the notice of opposition; and the promoters shall be at liberty to seek by way of bill in the same session, in such manner and on such conditions as the houses of parliament respectively by standing order or otherwise from time to time direct, such powers as were sought by them by way of certificate.

Settlement of Draft Certificate.

9. Where the board of trade proceed on the application, then, on being satisfied that the company have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting notice, they may, if they think fit, settle a draft of a certificate, certifying to the effect following; namely,

In the first-mentioned case, that the companies in the certificate specified are authorized to agree among themselves with respect to all or any of the matters aforesaid in the certificate specified;

In the secondly-mentioned case, that the time limited for the sale by the company of superfluous lands is extended as in the certificate specified;

In the thirdly-mentioned case, that the company are authorized to raise, as capital, for the purposes of the certificate, such additional sum of money as therein limited, by the issue of new shares or new stock, either ordinary or preference, or partly ordinary and partly preference, or partly in that mode and partly by borrowing on mortgage, at the option of the company, or as may be prescribed in the certificate, and with power to create and issue debenture stock.

10. The board of trade may (subject to the provisions of this act, and having regard to the provisions of any special act relating to any company empowered by a certificate), insert in the certificate such provisions as they, according to the circumstances of the case, deem necessary or proper for better effectuating the purposes of the certificate, and the same shall be deemed to all intents part of the certificate.

11. The certificate may be in the form set forth in the schedule to this act, with such provisions as aforesaid.

Submission of Draft Certificate to Houses of Parliament.

12. The board of trade shall lay the draft certificate settled by them before both houses of parliament within seven days after the same is settled, if parliament is then sitting, or if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of parliament, but not later in any year than the first day of June.

13. On the draft certificate being settled the promoters shall give notice thereof according to general rules under this act.

14. If either house of parliament within six weeks after the draft of a certificate settled by the board of trade is laid before that house resolves that the certificate ought not to be made, the same shall not be further proceeded with.

Issue and Publication of Certificate.

15. If neither house of parliament within the period aforesaid thinks fit to resolve that the certificate ought not to be made, then as soon as the period of six weeks after the laying of the draft certificate before both houses of parliament has expired the board of trade may make and issue a certificate in conformity with such draft.

16. The certificate shall be published as follows; namely,

Where one company only is thereby empowered, then in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, according as the head office of the company is situate in England, Scotland or Ireland:

APPENDIX.

Said Board to inquire if requirements have been complied with; and to consider all representations and objections.

On railway or canal company affected giving notice of opposition, proceedings before Board of Trade to cease.

Further proceedings to be in Parliament.

Power to Board of Trade to settle certificate according to nature of application as herein named.

Insertion of conditions in certificate.

Form of certificate.

Draft certificate to be laid before houses of Parliament.

Notice thereof to be given.

If either house resolve that certificate ought not to be made, it shall not be proceeded with.

If neither house resolve that certificate ought not to be made, Board of Trade may issue the same.

Publication of certificate in Gazette.

APPENDIX.

Where two or more companies are thereby empowered, then in one or more of the gazettes, according as the several head offices of the companies respectively are situate in England, Scotland and Ireland respectively.

Effect of Certificate.

Operation of certificate as special act.

17. As from the time (not being prior to such publication) in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then as from the time of such publication, the certificate shall have the same force and operation, and shall be as absolutely valid and conclusive to all intents as if the contents thereof (taken in conjunction with this act) had been expressly enacted by parliament; and the validity of the certificate shall not be impeached on account of any alleged informality in any court or elsewhere.

Judicial notice of certificate.

18. The certificate shall be judicially noticed without being specially pleaded.

Interpretation of certificate.

19. Terms used in the certificate shall have the same meanings as they have when used in this act.

Parts of 26 & 27 Vict. cc. 92 and 118, incorporated.

20. There shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall for this purpose be deemed the special act)—

In the first-mentioned case, Part III. of "The Railways Clauses Act, 1863" (b).

In the thirdly-mentioned case, the Companies Clauses Acts (c).

Rule as to short distances.

21. In the first-mentioned case, during the continuance of any agreement for the joint working of any two railways, in the calculation of tolls and charges for short distances in respect of traffic conveyed on both railways, the distances traversed shall be reckoned continuously on such railways as if they were one railway.

Restriction as to issue of shares.

22. It shall not be lawful for any company empowered by a certificate under this act to issue any share created under the authority of the certificate, nor shall any such share vest in the person accepting the same, unless and until a sum not being less than one-fifth part of the amount of such share is paid up in respect thereof.

Restrictions on company as to borrowing, &c.

23. In the thirdly-mentioned case the company, whether incorporated by special act or by certificate, shall be subject to the following restrictions; namely,

- (1.) They shall not exercise any power of borrowing money under the certificate until the whole of the share capital authorized by the certificate is subscribed for or taken, and until one-half thereof is actually paid up, and until they prove to the justice who is to certify under section forty of "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or (in Scotland) to the sheriff who is to certify under section forty-two of "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," as the case may be, before he so certifies, that shares for the whole of the capital are issued and accepted, and that not less than one-fifth part of the amount of each separate share has been paid up on account thereof before or at the time of the issue or acceptance thereof, and that all such shares are taken in good faith, and are held by the subscribers or their assigns, those subscribers or their assigns being legally liable for the same (of which matters the certificate of the justice or sheriff shall be sufficient evidence):
- (2.) They shall not borrow a larger sum in the whole than one-third of the amount of the share capital authorized by the certificate:
- (3.) They shall not, out of money raised under the certificate by calls or borrowing, pay interest or dividend to a shareholder on the amount of calls made on his shares, whether created under the certificate or otherwise (but this provision shall not prevent them paying to a shareholder under the certificate such interest on money advanced by him beyond the amount of calls actually made as is allowed by the Companies Clauses Acts):
- (4.) They shall not, out of money so raised, pay or deposit any money that may be required to be paid or deposited in relation to any application to parliament or the board of trade:
- (5.) They shall apply every part of the money so raised only for the purposes for which it is by the certificate authorized to be applied.

Miscellaneous.

Power of Board of Trade to reject application.

24. Nothing in this act shall make it obligatory on the board of trade to settle a draft of a certificate in any case, if it appears to the board of trade for any reason that the application for a certificate should not be complied with.

Nothing to exempt railways from operation of general acts.

25. Nothing in the certificate shall exempt any railway to which it relates, or the company to whom that railway belongs, from the provisions of any general act of parliament relating to railways, or to the better audit of the accounts of railway companies, passed before or after the issuing of the certificate, or from any revision and alteration under the authority of parliament of the maximum tolls and charges allowed to be taken in respect of that railway.

Certificate under this and railways construction act.

26. A certificate may be made under this act and "The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864," jointly, and in any such case the forms of certificate given in this act and the said act may be adapted to the circumstances of the case.

(b) Ante, p. 219.

(c) See ante, sect. 2.

27. Where, in case the company were proceeding by a railway bill instead of under this act, the approval of the bill in any manner by the members of the company would be required under the standing orders of either house of parliament for the time being in force, the board of trade shall not issue a certificate without being satisfied that the members of the company have in like manner approved of the application to the board of trade.

28. Subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, the board of trade on the application of the company may from time to time amend, extend or vary by certificate any certificate issued under this act, and may by certificate revoke a previous certificate issued under this act.

29. If in any case it is made to appear to the board of trade that any error has been committed in a certificate or in relation thereto, the board of trade may, subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, on the application of the company, body or person affected by the error, and on notice to the company or companies empowered by the certificate, correct the error by a further certificate.

30. A copy of the London or Edinburgh or Dublin Gazette containing a certificate or a copy of a certificate purporting to be printed by the printers of the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, shall be conclusive evidence of the certificate and of the due publication thereof, without any proof of the gazette or without any proof of the copy having been in fact so printed, as the case may be.

31. Every company empowered by a certificate shall at all times keep at their head office copies of the certificate printed by the printers of the gazette or one of the gazettes in which the same was published, in such form as general rules direct, to be sold to all persons desiring to buy the same at a price not exceeding one shilling for each copy.

If any company fail to comply with this provision they shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, and to a further penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such failure continues after the first penalty is incurred.

32. The provisions of this act relative to the first-mentioned case and to the secondly-mentioned case respectively shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to the proprietors of a railway although not incorporated as a company.

33. Penalties under this act or under a certificate, the recovery and application whereof are not otherwise provided for, shall be recovered and applied as penalties under "The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (d), and "The Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," as the case may require, are recoverable and applicable.

34. The act of the session of the seventh year of king William the fourth and the first year of her majesty (chapter eighty-three), "to compel Clerks of the Peace and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament," shall apply to documents required to be deposited by general rules under this act.

35. The general rules under this act shall in the first instance be those set forth in the schedule to this act; and the board of trade may from time to time, for the better execution of this act, make general rules adding to, altering or revoking any general rules for the time being in force under this act; but any general rules so made by the board of trade shall not have effect unless and until they are laid before both houses of parliament; and if either house of parliament, within six weeks after the same are laid before that house, thinks fit to resolve that the same or any part thereof ought not to take effect, the same or that part thereof (as the case may be) shall not take effect; otherwise all rules made by the board of trade under the present section shall be of the same force and effect as if they had been comprised in the schedule to this act.

All general rules which are to take effect under the present section shall be published in the London, Edinburgh and Dublin Gazettes.

36. Not later than the first day of July in each year the board of trade shall lay before both houses of parliament a report respecting the applications to and proceedings of the board of trade under this act during the year then last past.

11. From the time of the publication of the first advertisement the promoters are to keep in the office mentioned in this behalf in the advertisement a sufficient number of copies of the draft of the certificate as proposed by them, and are to furnish there copies to all persons applying for them at the price of not more than sixpence each.

12. From the time of the settlement of the draft certificate by the board of trade the promoters are to keep in the office aforesaid copies of the draft supplied to them for that purpose by the board of trade, and are to furnish there copies thereof to all persons applying for them at such price (if any) as the board of trade from time to time direct.

Printing of Certificate.

13. Copies of the certificate printed by the printers of a gazette are to be printed on ordinary white folio paper similar in size to the paper on which the public general acts of parliament are printed for public sale.

27 & 28 VICT. CAP. 121.

An Act to facilitate in certain Cases the obtaining of Powers for the Construction of Railways. [29th July, 1864.]

"Whereas it is expedient to facilitate the making of branch and other lines of railway, and deviations of existing railways, and of railways in course of construction, and also the execution of new works connected with or for the purposes of existing railways: And whereas the object aforesaid would be promoted if, where all landowners and other parties beneficially interested are consenting to the making of a railway or the execution of a work, the persons desirous of making or executing the same were enabled to obtain power to do so, on complying with the conditions of a general act of parliament, without being obliged to procure a special act:" be it therefore enacted by (&c. &c.) as follows:

Preliminary.

1. This act may be cited as "The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864."

Short title.

2. In this act—

The term "lands" includes any estate, right or interest in lands:

Interpretation of terms.

The term "the promoters" means in each case the company or persons intending to apply to the board of trade for such a certificate as is hereinafter provided for, and, after the application is made, the company or persons actually making the application, as the case may require:

The term "the railway" means in each case the railway and works intended by the promoters before the issuing of the certificate, and, after the issuing thereof, the railway and works therein comprised, as the case may require:

The term "the lands clauses acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England, or to a certificate to be operative in England, "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (a); and so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, "The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845;" together with, in each case, "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts Amendment Act, 1860" (b); and so far as the same relates to Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in Ireland, "The Railways Act (Ireland) 1851" (c), together with acts incorporated in or amending that act:

The term "the companies clauses acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England or Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in England or Ireland, "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (d); and, so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845;" together with, in each case, "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863" (e):

The term "the railways clauses acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England or Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in England or Ireland, "The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845" (f); and so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, "The Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845;" together with, in each case, "The Railways Clauses Act, 1863" (g):

APPENDIX.

The term "railway bill" means a bill pending in or intended to be introduced into either house of parliament, having for its object or one of its objects to authorize the making of a railway:

The term "the board of trade" means the lords of the committee for the time being of her majesty's privy council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations.

Contracts for Lands.

Power for promoters of railway and all persons interested in land to enter into provisional contracts for land required.

3. Where promoters of a railway intend to apply, under this act, for authority to make the railway, they and all parties seised or possessed of or entitled to lands required for the railway shall, in order to the purchase or taking and sale of those lands for the railway, have all such powers and capacities as, in order to the purchase or taking and sale of lands required for an undertaking authorized by a special act of parliament, are conferred by the lands clauses acts on the promoters of the undertaking so authorized and on parties seised or possessed of or entitled to lands, or any estate, right or interest in lands, required for that undertaking; all which powers and capacities shall be enjoyed and may be exercised by the promoters, and by all such parties as aforesaid, as fully and effectually in all respects as if the promoters had obtained a special act incorporating the lands clauses acts, and authorizing them to make the railway and to purchase or take the lands required for the same; subject, nevertheless, to the following restrictions and provisions, namely,

(1.) Nothing herein shall confer on the promoters and parties aforesaid any of the powers or capacities conferred by the part of the lands clauses acts with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement, or by the part of those acts with respect to the entry upon lands by the promoters of the undertaking, or by such provisions of those acts as provide for the determination or ascertainment of the amount of any purchase or compensation money, or the settlement of any apportionment or other matter, otherwise than by agreement (except only as to such of those provisions as provide for the determination of the amount of compensation to be paid for enfranchisement of copyholds; and for the purposes of the present section, section ninety-six of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," relating to the enfranchisement of copyholds, shall be read and have effect as if the limitation of time therein contained were omitted therefrom):

(2.) Any party under disability or incapacity, and not having power to sell and convey or release any lands, except under the lands clauses acts, as applied by the present section, shall have capacity only to contract with the promoters for the sale of those lands, and shall not (before such a certificate of the board of trade, as is hereinafter provided for, comes into operation) have capacity, further or otherwise than if this act had not been passed, to carry the contract into execution, or in pursuance thereof to convey or deliver possession of or release those lands:

(3.) The promoters (before such a certificate as aforesaid comes into operation) shall be empowered by this act only to contract for lands, and they shall not have capacity, further or otherwise than if this act had not been passed, to take or hold lands.

Contracts for sale of lands belonging to the crown or duchy of Lancaster or Cornwall.

4. Where lands required for the railway belong to or are enjoyed by her majesty the queen, her heirs or successors, in right of the crown, or form part of the possessions of the duchy of Lancaster or of the duchy of Cornwall, any contract for the purposes of this act may be entered into in respect of those lands as follows; namely,

In the first-mentioned case, by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests and Land Revenues, or one of them, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury;

In the secondly-mentioned case, by the chancellor of the duchy, by writing under his hand attested by the clerk of the council of the duchy;

In the thirdly-mentioned case, by the duke of Cornwall or other the persons for the time being empowered to dispose for any purpose of lands of the duchy.

User of or interference with public or turnpike roads.

5. Notwithstanding anything in this act, it shall not be necessary for the promoters, before applying under this act for authority to make the railway, to enter into any contract with respect to any part of a turnpike road or public highway intended to be taken or used, or to be diverted or otherwise interfered with, for the purposes of the railway; but the board of trade, before they settle a draft of such a certificate as hereinafter provided for, shall be satisfied that due provision is made for the interests of the trustees or other persons having the management of every such road or highway, and for the safety and convenience of the public in relation thereto.

Application for Certificate.

APPENDIX.

6. When the promoters have contracted for the purchase of all the lands required for the railway, and are desirous of obtaining a certificate under this act, they shall proceed as follows; namely,

After land contracted for, power for promoters to apply for certificate, publish notices, &c.

(1.) They shall apply to the board of trade for a certificate under this act:

(2.) They shall deposit maps, plans, sections and books of reference, and an estimate of the expense of the construction of the railway, and lodge a draft of the certificate as proposed by them, according to the general rules under this act:

(3.) They shall publish notice of the application according to such general rules.

7. As soon as conveniently may be after the time for completion of the required deposit and notice the board of trade shall proceed to inquire in such manner and to such extent as shall appear to them sufficient, whether the promoters have contracted for the purchase of all the lands required for the railway, and to inquire whether the promoters have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting deposit and notice.

Consideration of application by Board of Trade.

8. The board of trade, before settling the draft of a certificate, shall take into consideration any representation made to them, and shall duly inquire into the merits of any objection brought before them, respecting the application.

Board of Trade to consider all representations and objections.

Opposition of Railway or Canal Company to Undertaking.

9. If in any case any railway or canal company desire to be heard by counsel, agents and witnesses against the proposed undertaking, and (within such time as is prescribed by general rules under this act) lodge at the office of the board of trade a notice in writing to that effect (hereinafter referred to as a notice of opposition) in the form set forth in the schedule to this act (with such variations as circumstances require), in that case the board of trade, if the railway or canal company lodging the notice would be affected in any way by the proposed undertaking, shall not proceed on the application of the promoters.

On railway or canal company affected giving notice of opposition, proceedings before Board of Trade to cease.

10. Where the board of trade do not proceed on the application, they shall, not later in any year than the fifteenth day of February, if parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of parliament, lay before both houses of parliament a copy of the draft certificate lodged by the promoters and of the notice of opposition; and the promoters shall be at liberty to seek by way of bill in the same session, in such manner and on such conditions as the houses of parliament respectively by standing order or otherwise from time to time direct, such powers as were sought by them by way of certificate.

Further proceedings to be in Parliament.

Settlement of Draft Certificate.

11. Where the board of trade proceed on the application, then on being satisfied that the promoters have contracted for the purchase of all the lands required for the railway, and have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting deposit and notice, they may, if they think fit, settle a draft of a certificate certifying to the effect that the company, or persons therein specified, are authorized to make the railway therein described.

Power to Board of Trade to settle certificate.

12. The board of trade may (subject to the provisions of this act) insert in the draft certificate such provisions, as they, according to the circumstances of the case, deem necessary or proper for better effectuating the purposes of the certificate; and the same shall be deemed to all intents part of the certificate.

Insertion of conditions in certificate.

13. The certificate may be in the form set forth in the schedule to this act, with such provisions as aforesaid.

Form of certificate.

Submission of Draft Certificate to Houses of Parliament.

14. The board of trade shall lay the draft certificate settled by them before both houses of parliament, within seven days after the same is settled, if parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of parliament, but not later in any year than the first day of June.

Draft certificate to be laid before houses of Parliament.

15. On the draft certificate being settled the promoters shall give notice thereof according to general rules under this act.

Notice thereof to be given.

16. If either house of parliament, within six weeks after the draft of a certificate settled by the board of trade is laid before that house, resolves that the certificate ought not to be made, the same shall not be further proceeded with; and in that case all contracts for the purchase or taking of lands for the purposes of the undertaking shall cease to be binding on either party.

If either house resolve that certificate ought not to be made, it shall not be proceeded with.

Issue, Publication and Effect of Certificate.

17. If neither house of parliament within the period aforesaid thinks fit to resolve that the certificate ought not to be made, then as soon as the period of six weeks after the laying of the draft certificate before both houses of parliament has expired, the board of trade may make and issue a certificate in conformity with such draft.

If neither house resolve that certificate ought not to be made, Board of Trade may issue the same.

18. The certificate shall be published in the London or Edinburgh or Dublin Gazette, respectively, if the railway will be situate wholly in England or Scotland, or in Ireland; and shall be published both in the London and in the Edinburgh Gazette, if the railway will be situate partly in England and partly in Scotland.

Publication of certificate in Gazette.

19. As from the time (not being prior to such publication) in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then as from the time of such publication, the certificate shall have the same force and operation, and shall be as absolutely valid and conclusive to all intents as if the contents thereof (taken in conjunction with this act) had been expressly enacted by parliament; and the validity of the certificate shall not be impeached on account of any alleged informality in any court or elsewhere.

20. The certificate shall be judicially noticed without being specially pleaded.

21. Terms used in the certificate shall have the same meanings as they have when used in this act.

Duration of Powers under Certificate.

22. If the company, or persons by the certificate empowered to make the railway, do not, within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, or within any shorter period prescribed therein, complete the railway and open it for public traffic, then (subject to any provisions and qualifications in the certificate contained) all the powers and authorities given by the certificate shall, from and after the expiration of the time aforesaid, cease, except as to so much of the railway as is then completed.

Lands.

23. The lands clauses acts shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall for this purpose be deemed the special act) except as may be therein excepted, and except as to the following provisions, namely,—

- (1.) With respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement:
- (2.) With respect to the entry upon lands by the promoters of the undertaking:
- (3.) So much of those acts as provides for the determination or ascertainment of the amount of any purchase or compensation money, or the settlement of any apportionment or other matter, otherwise than by agreement (but excluding from this exception so much of those acts as provides for the determination of the amount of compensation to be paid for enfranchisement of copyholds).

Incorporation of Company.

24. Where the promoters are not a company incorporated by special act, or by previous certificate under this act, and are seven or more in number, a company shall be incorporated by the certificate for the purposes thereof.

25. Where the promoters are not a company incorporated by special act, or by previous certificate under this act, and are less than seven in number, a company may be incorporated by the certificate for the purposes thereof, if the promoters so desire.

26. Where the certificate incorporates a company, it shall contain proper provisions with apt terms for creating a body corporate, by an appropriate name, with perpetual succession and a common seal, and with power to take, hold, and dispose of lands and other property, for the purposes and subject to the restrictions of the certificate, and may confer on the company power to borrow on mortgage, and all other usual or proper powers.

27. In every such case the companies clauses acts shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall be deemed the special act).

28. It shall not be lawful for any company empowered by a certificate under this act to issue any share created under the authority of the certificate, nor shall any such share vest in the person accepting the same, unless and until a sum not being less than one-fifth part of the amount of such share is paid up in respect thereof.

29. Every company, whether incorporated by special act or by certificate, empowered by a certificate to borrow money, shall, as regards the money so authorized to be borrowed, be subject to the following restrictions, namely,—

- (1.) They shall not exercise the said powers of borrowing any money until the whole of the share capital authorized by the certificate is subscribed for or taken, and until one-half thereof is actually paid up, and until they prove to the justice who is to certify under section forty of "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or (in Scotland) to the sheriff who is to certify under section forty-two of "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," as the case may be, before he so certifies, that shares for the whole of the capital are issued and accepted, and that not less than one-fifth part of the amount of each separate share has been paid up on account thereof before or at the time of the issue or acceptance thereof, and that all such shares were taken in good faith, and are held by the subscribers or their assigns, those subscribers or their assigns being legally liable for the same (of which matters the certificate of the justice or sheriff shall be sufficient evidence).
- (2.) They shall not borrow a larger sum in the whole than one-third of the amount of the share capital authorized by the certificate:

APPENDIX.

- (3.) They shall not, out of money raised under the certificate by calls or borrowing, pay interest or dividend to a shareholder on the amount of calls made on his shares, whether created under the certificate or otherwise; (but this provision shall not prevent them paying to a shareholder under the certificate such interest on money advanced by him beyond the amount of calls actually made, as is allowed by the companies clauses acts):
- (4.) They shall not, out of money so raised, pay or deposit any money that may be required to be paid or deposited in relation to any application to parliament or the board of trade:
- (5.) They shall apply every part of the money so raised only for purposes for which it is by the certificate authorized to be applied.
30. Contracts relative to the purchase or taking of lands for the railway, entered into by the promoters before the incorporation of the company by the certificate, shall be as binding on the company as if they had been entered into by the company.

Contracts by promoters binding on company.

Construction of Railway.

31. The railways clauses acts shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall be deemed the special act), except as may be therein excepted, and except as to the following provisions, namely,—

Incorporation of Railways Clauses Acts in certificate, except as to compulsory powers, &c.

- (1.) Such of the provisions with respect to the construction of the railway and the works connected therewith as relate to the correction of errors and omissions in plans or to plans and sections of alterations:
- (2.) With respect to the temporary occupation of lands near the railway during the construction thereof:
- (3.) With respect to leasing the railway:
- and subject to the following provisions, namely,—
- (1.) Nothing herein shall confer power for the taking or using of lands for deviation or for any other purpose, otherwise than by agreement:
- (2.) Any provision referring to the datum line described in the section approved of by parliament shall be read as referring to the datum line described in the section approved of by the board of trade.

32. Where the promoters desire to make any alteration in the deposited plan or section, they may do so with the consent of the board of trade; but the board of trade shall not settle a draft of a certificate without being satisfied that all parties interested in lands liable to be affected by or in consequence of the alteration consent thereto.

Restriction on alterations of plan or section.

33. Every railway made under this act in England or Scotland shall be made on the gauge of four feet eight inches and half an inch, unless in any case the certificate prescribes the making of the railway on the gauge of seven feet or on both those gauges.

Provision respecting gauge.

Every railway made under this act in Ireland shall be made on the gauge of five feet three inches.

Provisions to secure Completion of Railway.

34. After the certificate is ready to be issued, and before the same is issued, by the board of trade, the promoters, unless they are a previously-existing company possessed of a railway open for public traffic, shall, within such time as general rules under this act direct, pay as a deposit a sum of money not less than eight per centum on the amount of their estimate of the expense of the construction of the railway, as follows, namely,— Promoters to deposit eight per cent. on estimate in Court of Chancery, &c.

Where the railway or any part thereof will be situate in England,—into the bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the accountant general of the court of chancery in England:

Where the railway will be situate wholly in Scotland,—either into the bank of England in manner aforesaid, or (at the option of the promoters) into a bank in Scotland established by act of parliament or royal charter, in the name and with the privity of the queen's remembrancer of the court of exchequer in Scotland:

Where the railway will be situate in Ireland,—into the bank of Ireland, in the name and with the privity of the accountant general of the court of chancery in Ireland.

35. The board of trade may issue their warrant to the promoters for such payment into court, which warrant shall be a sufficient authority for the persons therein named, or the majority or survivors of them, to pay the money therein mentioned into the bank therein mentioned, in the name and with the privity of the officer therein mentioned, and for that officer to receive the same, to be placed to his account there, ex parte the railway therein mentioned, according to the method (prescribed by statute or general rules or orders of court, or otherwise) for the time being in force respecting the payment of money into the said courts respectively, and without fee or reward.

Warrant of Board of Trade for payment into court.

36. Provided, that in lieu, wholly or in part, of the payment of money, the promoters may bring into court as a deposit an equivalent sum of bank annuities, or of any stocks, funds or securities on which cash under the control of the respective court is for the time being permitted to be invested, or of exchequer bills (the value thereof being taken at the price at which the promoters originally purchased the same, as appearing by the broker's certificate of that purchase); and in that case the board of trade shall vary their warrant accordingly.

Liberty for promoters to bring in exchequer bills, &c.

&c.

Mode of application to courts.

37. At any time when the office of the accountant general of the court of chancery in England or Ireland is closed, a deposit under this act may nevertheless be made, in such manner as general orders of the respective courts authorize and direct.

38. Where money is so paid into the court of chancery in England or Ireland, the court may, on the application of the persons named in the warrant of the board of trade, or of the majority or survivors of them, order that the same be invested in such stocks, funds or securities as the applicants desire and the court thinks fit.

39. In the subsequent provisions of this act, the term "the deposit fund" means the money deposited, or the stocks, funds or securities in which the same is invested, or the bank annuities, stocks, funds, securities or exchequer bills deposited, as the case may be; and the term "the depositors" means the persons named in the warrant of the board of trade authorizing the deposit, or the majority or survivors of those persons, their executors, administrators or assigns.

40. The court in which the deposit is made shall, on the application of the depositors, order the deposit fund to be paid, transferred or delivered out to the applicants, or as they direct, in any of the following events, namely,—

- (1.) If, within the time in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, the company, or persons thereby empowered to make the railway, complete it and open it for public traffic; or
- (2.) If, within the same time, they (being a company) prove to the satisfaction of the board of trade that one-half of their nominal capital authorized by the certificate is paid up, and that they have expended a like amount for the purposes of the certificate; or
- (3.) If, at any time after the issuing of the certificate, they execute and deliver to the solicitor of her majesty's treasury a bond with a surety or sureties (such bond being prepared to the satisfaction of, and such surety or sureties being approved by, the said solicitor) in a penal sum of twice the amount of the money required to be deposited, conditioned to the effect following, namely,—for payment to her majesty, her heirs or successors, of the amount of the money required to be deposited, if the company or persons empowered by the certificate do not, within the time aforesaid, either complete the railway and open it for public traffic, or (being a company) give such proof as aforesaid respecting their capital and expenditure.

41. If the company, or persons empowered by the certificate to make the railway do not, within the time in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, do one or other of the following things, namely,—

- (1.) Complete the railway and open it for public traffic; or
- (2.) Give (being a company) such proof as hereinbefore mentioned respecting their capital and expenditure; or
- (3.) Execute and deliver such a bond as is hereinbefore described,— then and in every such case the deposit fund shall, from and after the expiration of the time aforesaid, be forfeited to her majesty, and shall accordingly be paid, transferred or delivered out to or for the account of her majesty's exchequer, in such manner as the court in which the deposit is made thinks fit to order, on the application of the solicitor of her majesty's treasury, on notice to such parties (if any) as the court thinks fit; and the deposit fund, when so paid, transferred or delivered, or the proceeds thereof, shall be carried to and form part of the consolidated fund of the united kingdom.

42. Where any such bond as aforesaid is given, the amount recovered thereon shall be paid to the account of her majesty's exchequer, and shall be carried to and form part of the said consolidated fund.

43. The depositors shall be entitled to receive payment of the interest or dividends from time to time accruing on the deposit fund while in court; and the court in which the deposit is made may from time to time, on the application of the depositors, make such order as seems fit respecting the payment of the interest or dividends accordingly.

44. The certificate of the board of trade that such proof as aforesaid respecting the capital and expenditure of any company has been given to the satisfaction of the board of trade, and the certificate of the solicitor of her majesty's treasury that such bond as aforesaid has in any case been prepared, executed and delivered to his satisfaction, shall respectively be sufficient evidence of the matters therein certified.

45. The issuing in any case of any warrant or certificate relating to deposit or to the deposit fund, or any error in any such warrant or certificate or in relation thereto, shall not make the board of trade, or the person signing the warrant or certificate on their behalf, in any manner liable for or in respect of the deposit fund, or the interest of or dividends on the same, or any part thereof respectively.

46. Any application under this act to the court of chancery in England or Ireland shall be made in a summary way in such manner as general orders of those courts respectively direct.

47. The lord chancellor of Great Britain with the advice and assistance of the lords justices of the court of appeal in chancery and the master of the rolls and the vice-chancellors, or any two of those judges, and the lord chancellor of Ireland with the advice and assistance of the lord justice of the court of appeal in chancery in Ireland and of the master of the rolls in Ireland, may respectively from time to time make such general orders as seem fit for the regulation of the practice under this act of the court of chancery in England and Ireland respectively.

APPENDIX.
Power to courts to make general orders.

48. Where a certificate is obtained by a previously-existing company possessed of a railway open for public traffic, then, if the company fail to complete the railway and open it for public traffic within the time in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, the company shall be liable to a penalty of not less than twenty pounds and not exceeding fifty pounds for every day during which such failure continues, except only in respect of any time during which it appears from a certificate of the board of trade that the company were prevented from completing the railway or opening it for public traffic by unforeseen accident or circumstances beyond their control, but the want of sufficient funds shall not be deemed a circumstance beyond their control within the meaning of this provision.

Penalty on company failing to open new railway in certain cases.

Tolls and Charges for Use of Railway.

49. The proprietors of the railway may demand and take, in respect of the railway, tolls and charges not exceeding the sums specified in the schedule to this act, subject and according to the regulations therein specified.

Tolls, &c. in schedule.

50. The board of trade may nevertheless by the certificate vary the tolls and charges and regulations specified in the schedule to this act, or any of them, if in any case it seems to them necessary or proper under the circumstances to do so.

Power for Board of Trade to vary tolls, &c.

Application of General Railway Acts.

51. The enactments described in the schedule to this act, and any enactments amending, perpetuating or otherwise affecting any of them, so far as the same are in force at the passing of this act, shall extend and apply, as the case may require, to the railway, and to the company or persons empowered by the certificate to make the railway, and shall in all respects operate in relation thereto respectively as if they were expressly repeated and re-enacted in this act, subject, nevertheless, and according to the following variations and provisions; namely,

Enactments in schedule applied to the railway and company, subject to variations.

- (1.) For the purposes and within the meaning of any of those enactments, the railway shall be deemed to be a railway made and constructed and carried on under the authority of parliament and under the powers and provisions of an act of parliament, and the certificate (taken in conjunction with this act) shall be deemed to be a special act of parliament regulating or relating to the railway or the company, body or persons empowered to make the same (as the case may require):
- (2.) Such of those enactments as refer to the time of the passing of an act of parliament for the construction of a railway, or to the last day of the session in which such an act is passed, shall respectively be read and have effect as referring to the time of the commencement of the operation of the certificate:
- (3.) The terms "company" and "railway company" used in any of those enactments shall respectively include any persons empowered by the certificate to make the railway:
- (4.) Such of those enactments as refer to the directors or any director, or the secretary, chief or other clerk, accountant, treasurer or other officer of a company, shall extend and apply to every or any one of the persons (not being a company) empowered by the certificate to make the railway:
- (5.) Such of those enactments as refer to a writing under the common seal of the company shall be read and have effect as referring to a writing under the hand and seal of any one of such persons, as aforesaid:
- (6.) Such of those enactments, as impose any penalty or forfeiture, or any pecuniary liability or any obligation on a company, or give any right, remedy or process against a company, shall be read and have effect (so far as the nature and circumstances of the case admit) as imposing a like penalty, forfeiture, liability or obligation on, or as giving a like right, remedy or process against, every or any one of such persons as aforesaid, but not so as to authorize the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture from, or the enforcement of any pecuniary liability against, more than one of such persons in respect of the same offence, matter or thing:
- (7.) The amount of any compensation to be made to the owners and occupiers of any lands for loss or injury or inconvenience sustained by them respectively by reason of any works done under the authority of any of those enactments shall, in case of dispute, be settled in manner directed by the lands clauses acts and the railways clauses acts as respectively applicable to the case:
- (8.) Such of those enactments as provide for the case of the board of trade certifying that the public safety requires additional land to be taken by a company for the purpose of giving increased width to the embankments or inclination to the slopes of the railway, or for making approaches to bridges or archways, or for doing works for the repair or prevention of accidents or slips happening or apprehended to the cuttings, embankments or other works of the railway, shall be read and have effect, as regards such portions of land as are mentioned in any certificate so given by the board of trade, as if compulsory powers of purchasing and taking lands had been contained in the certificate under this act authorizing the making of the railway, and the provisions of the lands clauses acts and the railways clauses acts relative to the compulsory purchase or taking of land had been incorporated with that certificate:

- (9.) If the railway is in any respect constructed contrary to the provisions of the certificate, or of this act, it shall be deemed to be constructed contrary to the provisions of any of those enactments applicable in the case:
- (10.) Nothing herein shall extend or make applicable, for the purposes of this act, to or in any one of the parts of the united kingdom, any of those enactments not in force there independently of this act.

Miscellaneous.

Board of Trade may reject the application.

52. Nothing in this act shall make it obligatory on the board of trade to settle a draft of a certificate in any case if it appears to the board of trade for any reason that the application of the promoters should not be complied with; and in case the board of trade reject any application, all contracts for the purchase or taking of lands for the purposes of the undertaking shall cease to be binding on either party.

Saving for general acts, or revision of charges.

53. Nothing in the certificate shall exempt the railway or the company, or persons to whom it belongs, from the provisions of any general act of parliament relating to railways, or to the better audit of the accounts of railway companies, passed before or after the issuing of the certificate, or from any revision and alteration under the authority of parliament, of the maximum tolls and charges allowed to be taken under the certificate.

New works in connexion with railway.

54. All the provisions of this act which relate to the making of a railway shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to the making or executing of any work connected with or for the purposes of a railway (as distinguished from the construction of a railway).

Power to authorize joint work.

55. Subject and according to the provisions of this act, the board of trade may, on a joint application or on two or more separate applications, issue a certificate empowering two or more companies or persons respectively to jointly make or execute the whole, or to separately make or execute parts, of a work connected with or for the purposes of a railway, and to jointly or separately use the whole or parts thereof; and all the provisions of this act which relate to the making of a railway, or the making or executing of a work, shall extend and apply to the making or executing of the whole and the separate parts of such work as last aforesaid; and the form of the certificate may be adapted to the circumstances of the case.

Power to promoters, being a company, to raise additional capital.

56. Where the certificate is obtained by a previously-existing company incorporated by special act or by certificate, the certificate may authorize the company to raise, as capital, for the purposes of the certificate, such additional sum of money as therein limited, by the issue of new shares or new stock, either ordinary or preference, or partly ordinary and partly preference, or partly in that mode and partly by borrowing on mortgage, at the option of the company, or as may be prescribed in the certificate, and with power to create and issue debenture stock.

In every such case the companies clauses acts shall be incorporated with the certificate.

In every such case the restrictions by this act imposed on a company when originally incorporated by certificate, with respect to the exercise of their borrowing power and to the application of money raised under the certificate by calls or borrowing, shall extend and apply to such previously-existing company in respect of such additional capital.

Where promoters are a company, approval of application by a meeting.

57. Where the certificate is obtained by a previously-existing company incorporated by special act or by certificate, it shall be the duty of the board of trade not to settle a draft of the certificate without being satisfied that the members of the company have approved of the application to the board of trade, in like manner as, under the standing orders of either house of parliament for the time being in force, their approval of a railway bill would be required to be given in the same case.

Power to Board of Trade to amend or revoke certificate.

58. Subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, the board of trade, on the application of any company or persons empowered by a certificate, may from time to time amend, extend or vary by certificate the previous certificate, and may by certificate revoke the previous certificate.

Power to correct error.

59. If in any case it is made to appear to the board of trade that any error has been committed in a certificate or in relation thereto, the board of trade may, subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, on the application of any company, body or person affected by the error, and on notice to the company or persons empowered by the certificate, correct the error by a further certificate.

Proof of certificate.

60. A copy of the London, Edinburgh or Dublin Gazette containing a certificate or a copy of a certificate, purporting to be printed by the printers of the London, Edinburgh or Dublin Gazette, shall be conclusive evidence of the certificate, and of the due publication thereof, without any proof of the Gazette, or without any proof of the copy having been in fact so printed, as the case may be.

61. The company or persons empowered by a certificate shall at all times keep at their head office copies of the certificate printed by the printers of the Gazette or one of the Gazettes in which the same was published, in such form as general rules under this act direct, to be sold to all persons desiring to buy the same, at a price not exceeding one shilling for each copy.

If any company or persons fail to comply with this provision they shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, and to a further penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such failure continues after the first penalty is incurred.

62. Penalties under this act or under a certificate, the recovery and application whereof are not otherwise provided for, shall be recovered and applied as penalties under the railways clauses acts (a) are recoverable and applicable.

63. The act of the session of the seventh year of king William the fourth, and the first year of her majesty (chapter eighty-three), "to compel clerks of the peace and other persons to take the custody of such documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the standing orders of either house of parliament," shall apply to documents required to be deposited by general rules under this act.

64. The general rules under this act shall in the first instance be those set forth in the schedule to this act; and the board of trade may from time to time, for the better execution of this act, make general rules adding to, altering or revoking any general rules for the time being in force under this act; but any general rules so made by the board of trade shall not have effect unless and until they are laid before both houses of parliament, and if either house of parliament, within six weeks after the same are laid before that house, thinks fit to resolve that the same or any part thereof ought not to take effect, the same or that part thereof (as the case may be) shall not take effect; otherwise all rules made by the board of trade under the present section shall be of the same force and effect as if they had been comprised in the schedule to this act.

All general rules which are to take effect under the present section shall be published in the London, Edinburgh and Dublin Gazettes.

65. Not later than the first day of July in each year the board of trade shall lay before both houses of parliament a report respecting the applications to and proceedings of the board of trade under this act during the year then last past.

APPENDIX.

(v.)—GENERAL RULES.

Form of Application.

1. The application to the board of trade for a certificate is to be made by a memorial in writing, signed by the promoters or some or one of them, and lodged at the office of the board of trade.

2. Together with the memorial the promoters are to lodge—

(a) A printed draft of the certificate as proposed by the promoters:

(b) An estimate of the expense of the construction of the proposed new railway or work (if any), signed by the person making the estimate.

Plans, Sections, &c.

3. Maps, plans, sections and books of reference deposited by the promoters are to be such, in respect of scale and contents and otherwise, as, under the standing orders of either house of parliament for the time being in force, they would be obliged to deposit if they were proceeding in the same case by a railway bill.

4. The maps, plans, sections, and books of reference aforesaid are to be deposited at the office of the board of trade at the time when the memorial is lodged there.

5. They are also to be deposited for public inspection at the same offices of the clerks of the peace or sheriff clerks, at which, under the standing orders aforesaid, the promoters would be obliged to deposit them if they were proceeding in the same case by a railway bill.

6. Where any part of the railway will be situate within the limits of the metropolis, as defined by "The Metropolis Management Act, 1855," a copy of so much of the plans and sections as relates to that part is to be deposited at the office of the metropolitan board of works.

7. A copy of so much of the plans and sections as relates to each parish in which any part of the railway will be situate, or in which any lands intended to be taken for the railway are situate, together with a copy of so much of the book of reference as relates to that parish, is to be deposited for public inspection with the officer or person with whom, under the standing orders aforesaid, the promoters would be obliged to deposit the same if they were proceeding in the same case by a railway bill.

Advertisements as to Application.

8. After all the deposits aforesaid have been made, notice of the application to the board of trade is to be given by advertisement published as follows, namely:

Where the railway will be situate wholly in one county, city, or town, or county of a city or town, then once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of that county, city or town, or county of a city or town:

Where the railway will not be situate wholly in one county, city or town, or county of a city or town, then once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of the county, city or town, or county of a city or town, wherein the head office of the promoters is situate, and also once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of each county, city or town, or county of a city or town, wherein any part of the railway will be situate:

If in any case there is not any such newspaper as hereinbefore described, then in like manner in a newspaper of some adjoining or neighbouring county:

In every case, once at least in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, respectively, if the railway will be situate wholly in England or Scotland, or in Ireland; and both in the London and in the Edinburgh Gazette, if the railway will be situate partly in England and partly in Scotland.

9. The advertisements are to be published either in the month of June or in the month of November and not at any other time.

10. Each advertisement is to give the address of an office in London where copies of the draft certificate will be supplied as hereinafter directed.

11. Each advertisement is to state that all persons desirous of making any representation to the board of trade, or of bringing before them any objection respecting the application, may do so by letter addressed to the secretary of the board of trade, on or before the first day of August or first day of January next succeeding the date of the advertisement, according as the same is published in the month of June or in the month of November.

Deposit of Copies of Advertisements.

12. Within one week after the publication of the latest advertisement, a copy of each of the newspapers and Gazettes containing the several advertisements is to be lodged at the office of the board of trade.

13. Within the same time, a printed copy of the Gazette advertisement is to be deposited for public inspection in each of the same offices, and with each of the same officers and persons, in which or with whom the maps, plans, sections and books of reference or parts thereof were deposited.

APPENDIX.

14. The last-mentioned deposit of a copy of the Gazette advertisement may be made (if the promoters choose) by means of a registered post letter, and any deposit so made shall be deemed made on the day on which such letter would be delivered in ordinary course of post.

Note of Time of Deposit.

15. Where any document is deposited under these rules for public inspection, the clerk of the peace, sheriff clerk, or other officer or person, in whose office or with whom it is deposited, is to make thereon a memorial in writing denoting the time at which it was deposited.

Notice to Road Trustees.

16. Where any part of a turnpike road or public highway is intended to be taken or used, or to be diverted or otherwise interfered with, for the purposes of the railway, the promoters in the month of June or November (as the case may be) in which the advertisements are published are to serve notice of the application on the trustees or other persons having the management of such road or highway.

Notice of Opposition.

17. Notice of opposition by a railway or canal company is to be lodged at the office of the board of trade, not later than the first day of August or first day of January next succeeding the date of the advertisement of application, according as the same is published in the month of June or in the month of November.

Notice of Settlement of Draft Certificate.

18. On the draft certificate being settled by the board of trade, the promoters are to serve a copy thereof, with a notice that the draft has been settled by the board of trade, on every company, body, or person, by whom any representation or objection respecting the application was made to or brought before the board of trade, and are also to give by advertisement or otherwise such public or other notice (if any) thereof, as according to the circumstances of the case the board of trade direct.

Supply of Copies of Draft Certificate.

19. From the time of the publication of the first advertisement the promoters are to keep in the office mentioned in this behalf in the advertisement, a sufficient number of copies of the draft of the certificate as proposed by them, and are to furnish there copies to all persons applying for them at the price of not more than sixpence each.

20. From the time of the settlement of the draft certificate by the board of trade, the promoters are to keep in the office aforesaid copies of the draft supplied to them for that purpose by the board of trade, and are to furnish there copies thereof to all persons applying for them at such price (if any) as the board of trade from time to time direct.

Deposit of Money.

21. The deposit of money or government securities in court is to be made within one month after notice from the board of trade that they are prepared to issue the certificate.

Printing of Certificate.

22. Copies of the certificate printed by the printers of a Gazette are to be printed on ordinary white folio paper, similar in size to the paper on which the public general acts of parliament are printed for public sale.

REPORT of the Select Committee appointed to continue the Inquiry commenced last Session, and report as to what legislative Measures are desirable for the purpose of restraining Directors of Railway Companies from exceeding the Limits fixed by their Acts of Parliament, and from evading those Provisions of their Acts of Parliament which require that a certain Portion of their authorized Capital shall be subscribed and paid up before their borrowing Powers can come into Operation, and also to inquire and report what Securities can be given to the Holders of Debentures as to the Validity and Legality of the Issue of such Bonds. [21st July, 1864.]

1. The committee having examined witnesses, and considered the subject referred to them, are of opinion that a compulsory registration of debentures and debenture stock will afford means whereby the directors of railway companies may be restrained from exceeding the amount of their statutory borrowing powers.

2. It is the custom of Parliament, when granting to railway companies the powers necessary for carrying out their undertakings, to limit the amount of money they should be permitted to borrow, and to prescribe the conditions under which such borrowing powers should be exercised; and it is evidently the intention of the legislature that no bonds or other negotiable securities, other than those created under such limited and conditional powers, should be issued by the directors of railway companies.

3. This intention is, however, easily and commonly defeated by the issue of obligations (purporting to be for work done, or materials supplied for the purposes of the undertaking), commonly called Lloyd's bonds. The holders of these obligations can sue upon them and recover judgment against the companies; and success in any conflict for priority of claim between them and the holders of statutory debentures, would appear, from evidence given before the committee, to be only a question of more or less diligence.

4. The directors of some railway companies are in the habit of issuing securities of this description without consulting their shareholders, and without the knowledge or consent of the statutory debenture holders; and the gross amount of them which may be outstanding against a company is unlimited.

5. The committee are of opinion that holders of statutory debentures, duly registered as above recommended, should have a right to recover and secure the payment of all principal and interest due to them by the appointment of a receiver, in priority to the holders of Lloyd's bonds, or of any other obligations or acknowledgment of indebtedness not issued under the authority of Parliament.

6. Such an arrangement may, however, be defeated, or at all events materially interfered with, if a creditor is allowed to seize the stock of the company, and thereby stop the traffic on the line and the income derived therefrom. The property is of a different character to other property. The public have a right to the use of the railway, and would be seriously inconvenienced by the stoppage of even a short line. It appears, therefore, to the committee that this power ought not to be allowed to the creditors of railway companies.

7. The committee see no reason why railway companies should continue altogether free from the adjusting process to which other trading companies are liable through proceedings in bankruptcy. On the contrary, they are of opinion that the present practice, by which the affairs of companies practically bankrupt are patched up by successive acts of Parliament is injurious to the public, and too frequently of no real benefit to the shareholders. When a company pays little or no dividend on the original capital, the working expenses are often cut down injuriously, danger arises from insufficient service, and the risk of present loss attending any reduction of fares, even with the fairest expectation of future profit, is a bar to liberality of management. For the public advantage it is desirable that a railway should yield reasonable returns to those under whose control it is placed; and when a company becomes seriously embarrassed it is expedient that the concern should be transferred to others under whose management it may be efficiently conducted. The knowledge that such must be the result of mismanagement would probably have a most beneficial effect on the proceedings of directors, and subject the credit which they would be able to obtain to some useful restraint. With the present facilities for forming companies there would be no difficulty in finding purchasers under sound and just regulations to be provided in a public act, whereby Parliament would be relieved from having to deal with a class of private bills which are very troublesome to settle and are never of a satisfactory character. The rights of the holders of statutory securities, including the regular payment of their dividends, should of course be carefully secured throughout all the proceedings.

8. As an example of the extent to which some railway directors are disposed to infringe the restrictions and conditions of their acts of Parliament, the committee would call the attention of the House to the evidence given before a committee of the House of Commons during this session in the case of the Tewkesbury and Malvern Railway Bill.

The evidence will be found in the appendix to the report.

LETTERS and CIRCULAR issued by the BOARD of TRADE after receipt of the First Notice of Intention to open a New Railway (a).

Railway Department, Board of Trade,
Whitehall, S.W.

Sir,—I have been directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the _____ giving the first notice required by the 4th section of the 5th & 6th Victoria, cap. 55, of the intention of the Railway Company to open the line of railway named in the margin for public traffic.

My lords direct me to point out to the directors of the company that under the provisions of the 4th, 5th and 6th sections of the before-mentioned general act 5 & 6 Victoria, cap. 55, a further notice in writing must be given to their lordships of the day when the line of railway will be in the opinion of the company sufficiently completed for the safe conveyance of passengers and ready for inspection, and that the railway must not be opened for the public conveyance of passengers until the expiration of ten days after the day specified in such notice as that upon which the railway will be sufficiently completed for the safe conveyance of passengers and ready for inspection, unless the opening within such ten days shall have been previously authorized by their lordships.

When this further or second notice shall have been received, my lords will appoint an officer to inspect the line referred to upon the earliest convenient day within the ten days after the day specified in the notice.

My lords direct me to forward to you by this post a statement of the details with which the inspecting officer will desire to be furnished previously to making his inspection, and which should be forwarded to this department before the second notice above mentioned is given. The statement also contains certain regulations which my lords are desirous should be adopted in the case of single lines of railway.

The Secretary of the Railway Company.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

Railway Department, Board of Trade,
Whitehall, S.W.

Sir,—With reference to the proposed opening of the
I have to request that, previously to the second or ten days' notice required by the 4th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55 (b), you will be so good as to forward to this department the several documents named in the annexed list, marked A.; and as they will become official records of the line and works inspected, it is requested that each document may be signed by the engineer, or by some other responsible officer of the company whose duty makes him acquainted with its contents.

As inconvenience has frequently been experienced from the opening of new lines of railway having been postponed by the inspecting officers of this department, in consequence of the lines being incomplete in certain particulars, it has been deemed advisable to transmit, at the same time, a statement, marked B., of some of those requirements in which deficiencies have occurred.

If the line to be inspected is a single line, I am to request that you will forward through the inspecting officer a certificate, signed by the chairman and secretary of the company, and under the seal of the company, stating that one, and specifying which, of the three modes of working described in the accompanying statement, marked C., will be adopted.

I am further to transmit to you for the information of your directors the statement, marked D., of some of the precautions which the inspecting officers of this department have had occasion, in reporting upon accidents, to recommend for adoption from time to time in the working of railways.

The Secretary of the Railway Company.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

A.

- I. A copy of the parliamentary plan and section, with any deviations, which in the construction may have been made from either, marked thereon in red; the corrections in the distances, levels, inclinations, sections of ground and radii of curves, rendered necessary by such deviations, being also marked in red, as well as the positions of the several stations. The width of cuttings and embankments on each side of the railway also to be marked on the plan.
- II. A table of gradients and level portions, with the positions of the stations distinctly shown.
- III. A table of curves and straight portions.
- IV. A table of cuttings and embankments.
- V. A table of the bridges for roads crossed by the railway.
- VI. A table of the bridges and viaducts over watercourses and valleys.
- VII. A table of level crossings.
- VIII. A table of tunnels.
- IX. A table of aqueducts and large culverts.

According to the forms forwarded herewith, observing that the situations of works, &c. should be described in each by reference to the same fixed point; and that it will be convenient if the station nearest to the metropolis, for a main line—and the junction with the main line for a branch railway—be adopted as such point of reference.

(b) Ante, 11.

X. A statement affording detailed information under the following heads:—

- 1st. Permanent Way.—Whether the line be double throughout, or partly double and partly single, or single throughout with sidings; the distances from the fixed point adopted in the tables, at which the single portions commence and terminate—or, for a single line, at which the sidings commence and terminate; whether the land has been purchased, or whether any other arrangements have been made, with a view to adding an additional line at a future period; the width of the line at formation level; the gauge; the width between the lines where double; the description of rails employed, with a diagram section, their length and weight per yard; the description and weight of the chairs, where these are employed; the mode of fixing the chairs and securing the rails; the fastenings adopted for the joints of the rails; the description of sleepers, with their smallest and average scantling and length; their distance asunder if transverse, and, if longitudinal, the details of any ties by which they are connected; the nature of the ballast, and its depth below the under surface of the sleepers; the description of switches adopted, with the name of the patentee, if they are patented; and the names of the stations or other places at which engine-turntables are provided.
- 2nd. Fences.—Description of fencing adopted on each portion of the line.
- 3rd. Drainage.—General description of the drainage employed, and if on any part of the line it has been attended with peculiar difficulty, a detailed description should be given.
- 4th. Stations.—Their names, and their distances, at commencement and termination, from the fixed point respectively.
- 5th. Width of Line.—The minimum space allowed between the sides of the largest carriages in use upon the railway, at the level of their windows, and any fixed works, such as pillars at stations and bridges, telegraph posts, sheds, &c., along the line.
- 6th. Bridges and Viaducts.—Drawings of all bridges and viaducts, either over or under the railway, in detail, accompanied by sufficient information to allow of the probable strength of each being ascertained by calculation.

XI. Drawing and Description of Carriages to be used for the Conveyance of Parliamentary or Cheap Train Passengers under the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85.—The following minimum dimensions should be observed in the construction of these carriages:—They should contain 20 cubic feet of space per passenger; the area of the glass windows should afford 60 superficial inches per passenger; the seats should be provided with backs, should be 15 inches broad, and should afford 16 inches in width per passenger; they should be provided with proper means of ventilation, and with two lamps at least to each carriage.

B.

MEMORANDUM OF IMPORTANT DESIDERATA.

At the Stations.

1. The lines of railway leading to the passenger platforms to be so arranged that the engines shall always be in front of the passenger trains as they arrive at and depart from a station.
2. Platforms to be not less than 6 feet wide, at stations where the traffic is small; and the descent at the ends to be by means of ramps, and not by steps. Pillars or columns for the support of roofs not to be nearer to the edge of the platforms than 6 feet.
3. Clocks to be provided in a position where they are visible from the line.
4. Signals and distant-signals for each direction to be supplied.
5. The levers and handles of switches and signals to be placed in the most convenient positions, and to be brought close together, so as to be under the hand of the person working them. The switches to be provided with double connecting rods. The levers of the switches to be sufficiently long to enable the pointsmen to work them without risk or inconvenience, and not to be placed between the lines of rails.
6. No facing points, except on single lines or at junctions, or in exceptional cases. At all junctions, the signals and points should be worked as pointed out in No. 21. In other cases in which facing points are necessarily employed, and in which they cannot be kept locked, a low signal should be attached to them, to indicate their condition to the driver of an approaching train, showing not only whether they are set in the proper direction, but also whether they are completely turned over in that direction, and are in close contact with the standard rail.
7. Sidings to be supplied with locked chock-blocks, and, if they fall towards the main line, a blind siding or safety switch to be provided with the points closed against the main line.
8. Turntables for engines to be erected at terminal stations and at junctions and other points at which the engines require to be turned. Care should be taken to keep all turntables at a safe distance from adjacent lines of rails, so that an engine, waggon or carriage in the act of turning may not foul another line or endanger the traffic upon it.

9. Stations not to be constructed on a steeper gradient than 1 in 300, except under peculiar circumstances. When the gradient at a station is unavoidably steeper than 1 in 100, and the line is double, a catch-siding should be provided further down the incline than the passenger platform and goods-yard, to intercept runaway vehicles. When the line is single, a second line must be laid down and a catch-siding similarly provided.

As regards the Line generally.

10. For every cast-iron bridge the breaking weight should be equal to three times the permanent load due to the weight of the superstructure, added to six times the greatest moving load that can be brought upon it.

11. For every wrought-iron bridge, the greatest weight which can be brought upon it, added to the weight of the superstructure, should not produce a greater strain on any part of the material than five tons per square inch. The heaviest engines in use on railways afford a measure of the greatest moving weights to which the bridges can be subjected.

12. The upper surfaces of wooden platforms of bridges and viaducts should be protected from fire.

13. The joints of the rails should be secured by means of fish-plates, or by some other equally secure fastening.

14. In all cases, but particularly on curves, the chairs should be secured, at least partially, by iron spikes. With flat-bottomed rails, when there are no chairs, or with bridge rails, it is desirable that fang or other through-bolts should be used, at least at the joints.

15. No standing work above the level of the carriage steps should be nearer to the outer edge of the rail than 3 feet 6 inches, where the carriages are not above 7 feet 4 inches in width, outside measurement. When the carriages are of a greater width than 7 feet 4 inches, a proportionate increase should be made in the space between any such standing work and the rail. On Irish railways, the distance between the outside of the rail and the nearest standing work, should be at least 4 feet. On the broad gauge lines in England the distance should not be less than 3 feet 6 inches.

16. The intervals between adjacent lines of rails, or between lines of rails and sidings, should not be less than 6 feet.

17. When stations occur on or near a viaduct, a parapet wall on each side, 3 feet high, should be built, with a hand-railing or a fence on the top, sufficient to prevent passengers from falling over the viaduct in the dark. For the protection of the plate-layers, viaducts under the railway should be guarded by a hand-rail. Viaducts of timber and iron should be provided with man-holes, and with facilities for inspection.

18. At all level crossings of turnpike and of public roads, the gates should be capable of being closed across the railway on both sides as well as across the road; and a lodge or station-house should be provided, as is required by act of Parliament. When a level crossing occurs at a station, there should be a box, if there is not a lodge at the gates, for the use of the gate-keeper.

19. The fixed signals attached to the gates should be placed at the level crossings in convenient positions for being seen along the railway as well as along the road; and when a level crossing is so situated that an approaching train cannot be seen from a sufficient distance, distant-signals should be supplied.

20. At all junctions, main-signals and distant-signals for each line are required; and clocks should be placed in a conspicuous position for the use of the signalmen.

21. It is desirable that the signal-handles and the levers of the switches at junctions should be brought together upon a properly-constructed stage. They should be so arranged, that while the signals are at danger the points shall be free to move; that a signalman shall be unable to lower a signal for the approach of a train until after he has set the points in the proper direction for it to pass; that it shall not be possible for him to exhibit at the same moment any two signals that can lead to a collision between two trains, and that after having lowered his signals to allow a train to pass, he shall not be able so to turn his points in the wrong direction as to cause a collision between any two trains.

22. Mile-posts and gradient-boards should be provided along the line.

23. The junctions between the main line and any sidings which lead to ballast pits in use, or which are employed for colliery or other purposes, should be protected by a main signal and a distant signal in each direction; and the sidings should be so arranged that the shunting carried on at them shall present the least possible obstruction to the main line.

24. When a junction is situated near to a passenger station, or is connected with goods or mineral sidings, the platforms or sidings should be so arranged as to prevent, as far as possible, any necessity for shunting over the junction.

25. When two single lines meet, the junction should be formed on two lines of rails, either (when the traffic is expected to be considerable) as on ordinary double-line junction, or (when the traffic is not likely to be great) as a junction of a single with a double line.

26. Tunnels, and those portions of railway which are more dangerous, from obstructed view, steep inclines, heavy traffic, or liability to fog, should be protected by means of the telegraph, or some other system of communication between the signalmen. In the 7th paragraph of statement D. will be found certain recommendations as to the way in which the telegraph should be worked.

27. All signals which are worked by a wire should be weighted, so as to fly to "danger" on the fracture of the wire.

28. Tunnels should in all cases be constructed with man-holes for the escape of the plate-layers.

C.

MODES OF WORKING SINGLE LINES.

In the case of a line being single, a certificate, under the seal, and signed by the chairman and secretary of the company, should be sent to the Board of Trade through the inspecting officer, to the effect that one of the three following modes of working single lines will be adopted, namely:—

- I. That only one engine, in steam, or two or more engines coupled together, shall be allowed to be upon the single line, or upon portions thereof (which should be defined), at one and the same time.
- II. That a system similar to that in use on the North-Eastern Railway, of working by means of a train porter, and described in the accompanying Amended Regulations, shall be adopted, viz.:—

RULES FOR WORKING THE THIRSK AND MALTON BRANCH OF THE NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY.

General Instructions.

1. A time table showing* the working of all the trains on this branch, and a copy of these rules are to be furnished, through the respective departments, to every servant of the company employed on the branch.

2. A pilotman under the traffic department is to be appointed for working the branch.

3. He is to wear a red badge on his right arm, to signify that he is the person appointed as pilotman, and his name (and the name of the person appointed to succeed him, should any change be made), is to be given to the pointsmen at Malton and the Main Line Junction.

Instructions to the Pointsmen at Malton and the Main Line Junction.

4. You are required to have in your possession a time table showing the working of all the trains on the branch, as well as a copy of these rules, and to be acquainted with the pilotman appointed for working the branch.

5. You are not on any account whatever to allow any train or engine to move on to the branch at either end, unless the same be accompanied by the pilotman.

Instructions to the Pilotman of the Branch.

6. You are required to have on your person a time table showing the working of all the trains on the branch, and also a copy of these rules.

7. You are to wear a red badge on a your right arm, to mark that you are the pilotman of the branch.

8. The instructions given to the pointsmen at each end of the branch are, that they are not to allow any train to move on to either end of the branch, unless accompanied by you.

9. Your duty will be to travel over the branch with the various trains, and when it is necessary for a train to move on to the branch, you must always be at the junction to accompany it.

10. When there are two trains to pass over the branch in the same direction, you must accompany the first train on to the branch, and, having dispatched it, you must wait for the second, and then proceed with it along the branch to the other end, and until your arrival no train is to be permitted to enter from the opposite end.

11. In case the second train which you accompany shall be a goods' train, and you find by your time table that you cannot arrive at the junction or end of the branch in time to allow the passenger train to enter at its proper time, you must shunt the goods' train into a siding, detach the engine, and proceed with it to the junction in time to accompany the passenger train on its entering the line. You will attach both engines to the passenger train, and on arriving at the siding where the goods' train is standing, the goods' engine shall be detached and shall take on the goods' train to its destination accompanied by you, after the passenger train has proceeded on its journey.

12. In case the first train which you dispatch from one end should be a goods' train, you will wait, according to rule 10, and accompany the succeeding passenger train, and in case the passenger train should overtake and pass the goods' train, your duty will then be to remain with the goods' train and to accompany it to the terminal station or junction.

13. When an engine is disabled and unable to proceed to its destination, you are to go immediately for another engine; and before you go you are to instruct the engineman that should the disabled engine be got right again before you return, it is not, under any circumstances, to proceed along the line, but is to wait until you are present.

APPENDIX.
CIRCULAR.

14. When there are two engines attached to a train, they must not be separated, but must be considered as one with reference to these regulations.

15. If these rules are strictly obeyed, it will be impossible for two trains to meet each other when proceeding in opposite directions.

16. You are required not only to observe all the rules for working this branch contained in this paper, but to notice any infraction of them by other parties, and to report the same immediately to the head of your department.

III. That the line shall be worked by train-staff, in the mode adopted on many of the leading railways, and described in the following amended regulations:—

RULES FOR WORKING THE SINGLE LINE BETWEEN A., B., C., &c.

1. Either a train-staff or a train-ticket is to be carried with each engine or train to and fro, and for this purpose

[One, two or more] train-staffs and sets of train-tickets will be employed, viz.:—

	Colour of Staff and Ticket.	Form of Staff and Ticket.
One between A. and B.	Red.	Square.
One between B. and C.	Blue.	Round.
&c. &c.	&c.	&c.

2. No engine or train is to be permitted to leave either of the terminal stations, A., B. or C., &c. unless the staff for the portion of line over which it is to travel is then at the station.

3. If no second engine or train is intended to follow, the staff is to be given to the guard or person in charge.

4. If other engines or trains are intended to follow before the staff can be returned, a train-ticket stating "staff following" will be given to the person in charge of the leading train, and so on with any other except the last train, the staff itself being given to the person in charge of the last train. After the staff has been sent away, no other engine or train can leave the station under any circumstances whatever until its return.

5. The train-tickets are to be kept in a box fastened by an inside spring, and the key to open the box is the train-staff, so that a ticket cannot be obtained without the train-staff.

6. The train-staffs, the train-tickets and the ticket-boxes, are painted or printed in different colours, red between A. and B.; blue between B. and C.; &c., the inside springs and the keys on the staffs being so arranged that the red staff cannot open the blue box, nor the blue staff the red box, and so forth. This is to prevent mistakes.

7. The ticket-boxes are fixed by two brackets in the booking-office at the terminal stations, the brackets being turned up at the end to receive the train-staff when it is at the station.

8. The clerk in charge, the inspector or the person in charge for the time at a terminal station, is the sole person authorized to receive and deliver the staff.

9. A guard or engine-man taking a staff or ticket beyond the portion of line to which it belongs, or leaving a station without the staff, or without a ticket, as hereinbefore explained, will render himself liable to dismissal, although no accident may arise.

10. No engine-man is to start from A., B. or C., &c., with a train until the guard has shown him the train-staff or train-ticket, or with an engine, until he has received either the one or the other.

11. The usual special-train tail-signal, "engine following," is to be used when a ticket is given, for the guidance of the platelayers and gatekeepers upon the line.

12. When a ballast train has to work on the line, the staff is to be given to the guard in charge of it. This will close the line whilst the ballast train is at work. The ballast train must proceed afterwards to one of the terminal stations of the staff, to open the line, before the ordinary traffic can be resumed.

13. In the event of an engine or train breaking down between two terminal stations, the fireman is to take the train-staff to the terminal station in the direction whence assistance may be expected, that the staff may be at the station on the arrival of an engine. Should the engine that fails be in possession of a train-ticket instead of the staff, assistance can only come from the station at which the train-staff has been left. The fireman will accompany any assisting engine to the place where he left his own engine.

N.B.—The train-staff may either be fixed in a socket on the engine or tender, or carried over the shoulder by means of a cross-belt.

D.

PRECAUTIONS RECOMMENDED IN THE WORKING OF RAILWAYS.

1. There should be a break-vehicle with a guard in it at the tail of every train; this vehicle should be provided with a raised roof and extended sides, glazed to the front and back; and it should be the duty of the guard to keep a constant look-out from it along his train.

2. There should be a means of intercommunication, between a guard at the tail of every passenger train and the engine driver.

3. There should be at least one break-vehicle to every three or four carriages in a passenger train, a proportion which may be economically provided by the use of continuous breaks. On steep inclines, and with trains which travel at high speed, a larger proportion of break power is required.

4. The tyres of railway wheels should be so secured to the rims of the wheels as to prevent them from flying open when they are fractured.

5. The engines employed with passenger trains should be of a steady description, with not less than six wheels, with a long wheel-base, with the centre of gravity in front of the driving wheels, and with the motions balanced. They should not be run tender first.

6. Records should be carefully kept of the work performed by the wearing parts of the rolling stock, to afford practical information in regard to them, and to prevent them from being retained in use longer than is desirable.

7. When a line is worked by telegraph, the telegraph-huts should be commodious, and should be supplied with clocks, with record-books, with a separate needle for signalling the trains on each line of rails, and with an extra needle for other necessary communications between the signalmen. The telegraph-instruments and signal-handles should face the directions in which they work.

8. When drovers or other persons are permitted to travel with a goods or a cattle train, a suitable vehicle should be provided for their accommodation near the front of such a train.

A. and B. Railway Bill.

1. Petition to the House of Commons against a railway bill, ante, text, 20.

Against.

Petition of the undersigned against the said bill, praying to be heard by counsel.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the several corporations and persons whose seals and names are hereunto respectively set and subscribed :

Showeth,

That a bill is at present depending in your Honourable House intituled "A Bill to make a Railway from A. to B."

That the powers and provisions of the said bill are injurious to the interests of your petitioners, and injurious to public policy [if clauses only are objected to, say, "that the powers and provisions contained in certain clauses (specifying them) of the said bill"], &c.

That, &c. [here state grounds of objection, taking care that they are sufficient to give the petitioners a locus standi; see ante, text, 27].

That in these and other respects the said bill [or "clauses"] would be highly injurious to your petitioners, and the preamble of the said bill [or "the said clauses"] cannot be substantiated by evidence.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray that the said bill may not be allowed to pass into a law as it now stands [or "that the said clauses be not allowed to form part of the said bill"], and that they may be heard by themselves, their counsel, agents and witnesses against the preamble (b) [or "the said clauses of the said bill affecting their interests"], and that they may have such other and further relief in the premises as to your Honourable House shall seem meet.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

FORMS.

Sect. 44 (ante, App. 83) enacts that the amount of compensation in the foregoing cases shall be determined in the manner provided by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, for determining the amount of compensation to be paid for lands taken under the provisions of that act. Reference must therefore be made to sect. 21 and the following sections of that act (ante, App. 49). The result seems to be, that, unless the claimant has demanded an arbitration, the company, on the receipt of the Notices, Nos. 18 and 19, should, in pursuance of sect. 38 (ante, App. 51), proceed to issue a warrant to the sheriff, first giving notice of their intention to the claimant, and stating what sum of money they are willing to pay for the lands. The notice may be in the following form:—

20. Notice from the company to owner, &c. of lands which the company have been required to purchase under sect. 68, that they intend to issue a warrant to the sheriff, and stating the sum they are willing to pay for the lands. The — Railway Company.

[The name of the county] } To the Sheriff of the county of —.
to wit. }

Whereas, the — Railway Company, established and incorporated by an act of Parliament made and passed in the — year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled the — Railway Act, 18—, in which act are incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on or about the — day of — gave to and duly served upon A. B. [the owner], of, &c., a notice in writing, addressed to him and bearing date the — day of —, and signed by —, the secretary of the said company, which notice was in the words or to the effect following [here copy the notice]: "And on or about the — day of — the said company also gave to and duly served upon C. D. [the second party served], of, &c., a notice in writing addressed to him, and bearing date the said — day of —, and signed by the said —, as such secretary as aforesaid, which last-mentioned notice was in the words or to the effect following, that is to say" [here copy the second notice]: And whereas each of them the said A. B. and C. D. failed to treat with the said company in respect of the pieces or parcels of land and other hereditaments described or referred to in the schedule written under the notice to him given, and addressed as aforesaid, for the space of twenty-one days next after the service upon him of the same notice, and thereupon the said company, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, gave to and duly served upon the said A. B. and C. D. respectively the several notices next hereinafter mentioned or referred to, that is to say, on or about the — day of —, the said company gave to and duly served upon the said A. B. a notice in writing addressed to him, dated the — day of —, and signed by the said —, as such secretary as aforesaid, which notice was in the words or to the effect following, that is to say [here copy the notice of intention to summon a jury], and on or about the — day of — the said company gave to and duly served upon the said C. D. a notice, &c. [copying it]: And whereas on or about the — day of — the said A. B. and C. No. 26.

[The name of the county] } To the Sheriff of ———.
to wit.

Whereas, we the ——— Company, incorporated by an act of Parliament, intituled [insert title of special act], and by the said act authorized to purchase or take for the purposes thereof the lands, tenements and hereditaments hereinafter particularly mentioned, by a notice in writing, bearing date the ——— day of ———, duly given by us in pursuance of the said act, did inform A. B., C. D., &c., that the said lands, tenements and hereditaments belonging or reputed to belong to them [or "some or one of them"], or in which they [or "some or one of them"] claimed some estate or interest, were required to be taken and used by us the said railway company for the purposes of the said act; and that the said company were willing to treat for the absolute purchase of the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, and of the interest of them the said A. B. and C. D., &c., therein, or which they were by law enabled to sell and convey, and as to the compensation to be made to them the said A. B., C. D., &c., and all parties interested, for the damage or injury that might be sustained by reason of the execution of the railway works: And whereas the said A. B., C. D., &c., have, for the space of twenty-one days after the service of the said notice, failed to state the particulars of their claims in respect of the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, or to treat with us the said company in respect thereof. [Or, "And whereas we the said company, and the said A. B. and C. D., &c., have not agreed and cannot agree as to the amount of the purchase-money or compensation as aforesaid, to be paid by us to them."] And whereas we the said company, by a notice in writing, bearing date the ——— day of ———, duly given by us in pursuance of the said acts, did inform the said A. B., C. D., &c., of our intention to cause a jury to be summoned to assess such purchase-money and compensation as aforesaid; and also of the sum of money we were willing to give for the purchase of the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, and for the damage to be sustained by reason of the execution of the said railway works: Now we the said ——— Railway Company do, by this our warrant, in pursuance of the powers conferred upon us in that behalf by the said acts, require you the said sheriff to summon and return a jury of twenty-four indifferent men duly qualified according to law, to be and appear before you the said sheriff at some convenient time and place to be appointed by you (such time not being less than fourteen nor more than twenty-one days after the receipt by you of this our warrant, and such place not being more than eight miles distant from the lands hereinafter described), in order that you the said sheriff may cause to be drawn in such manner as juries for trials of issues joined in the superior courts are by law required to be drawn, out of the persons so to be summoned, and who shall appear, a jury of twelve men; or if a sufficient number of jurymen do not appear in obedience to the said summons, then that you the said sheriff may return a sufficient number of indifferent men duly qualified as aforesaid of the bystanders or others that can be speedily procured to make up the said jury to the number of twelve, you the said sheriff allowing all parties concerned their lawful challenges against any of the said jurymen according to law; and such jury summoned and drawn shall, upon their oaths, affirmations or declarations, as the case may be, inquire of and assess and give a verdict for the sum or sums of money to be paid by us the said company to the said A. B., C. D., &c., or other the person or persons interested therein for the purchase of the lands, tenements and hereditaments hereinafter mentioned, and for the purchase of every estate, share, right, interest or charge of them the said A. B., C. D., &c., each and every of them, in, upon or affecting the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, or which they, any or either of them are or is by the said act enabled to sell, convey or release [if the lands are to be severed, add the following: And also for the sum or sums of money to be paid by us the said company for the damage to be sustained by the owner or owners of the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, by reason of the severing thereof from the other lands, tenements and hereditaments of such owner or owners, or otherwise injuriously affecting such lands by the exercise of the powers of the said act of Parliament, or any act or acts incorporated therewith], that is to say, firstly, all that piece or parcel of land, &c., situate at a place called ———, in the parish of ———, in the said county, containing by estimation — A. — R. — P., or thereabouts, which said piece or parcel of land and premises are delineated and described on the map or plan and book of reference deposited in the office of the clerk of the peace for the said county of ——— [*or all those parcels of land, tenements and hereditaments mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed, &c., as in the form No. 3, ante, 274. D. and E. F., having valued the same pieces or parcels of land [or “and having ascertained the permanent damage which hath been and will be occasioned to such lands and to adjacent lands and property belonging to the said A. B. by the said railway”], are of opinion, and accordingly by this our valuation in writing determine, that the sum of £— sterling is the value and shall be paid by the said company for the purchase by them in fee simple in possession, free from all incumbrances, except the land-tax and tithe commutation rent-charge, of the pieces or parcels of land described or referred to in the schedule hereunder written, and the appurtenances to the same premises belonging or in anywise appertaining [or “and that the sum of £— sterling is the compensation money, and shall be paid by the said company for or in respect of permanent damage and injury which hath been and will be occasioned to the said lands and property adjacent thereto, and belonging to the said A. B., by the said railway and the works thereof”]; And we do declare that this our valuation is correct. In witness, &c.

35. Bond given by a railway company and two sureties to enable the company to enter on lands before the amount of the compensation or purchase-money is agreed upon. (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, ss. 85, 86, ante, App. 60, and see text, 194.)

No. 35.

Know all men by these presents, that we, the — Railway Company, incorporated by an act of Parliament, intituled “The — Railway Act, 18—,” and A. B., of &c., and C. D., of &c. (the said A. B. and C. D. being sureties approved of by E. F. and G. H., Esquires, two of her Majesty’s justices of the peace acting in and for the county of —, by writing under their hands bearing date the — day of —, pursuant to the statute in that case made and provided), are held and firmly bound to E. F. [the owner], of &c., in the sum of £—, of lawful money of Great Britain and Ireland, to be paid to the said [owner] or his certain attorney, executors, administrators or assigns, for which payment well and truly to be made, we the said company bind ourselves and our successors; and we the said A. B. and C. D. bind ourselves and each of us, and the heirs, executors and administrators of ourselves, and each of us respectively, firmly by these presents, sealed with the common seal of us the said company, and with the respective seals of us the said A. B. and C. D. Dated this — day of —, in the year of our Lord 184—.

Whereas, by virtue of the above-mentioned act of Parliament, or of the act or acts of Parliament incorporated therewith, the above-bounden railway company are authorized to purchase and take for the purposes of the said railway the lands described or referred to in the schedule hereunder written, of which the above-named E. F. is the owner or reputed owner; And whereas notice in writing bearing date on or about the — day of —, was duly given to the said E. F. [here shortly recite the notice]; And whereas the said E. F., on or about the — day of — last, made his claim in writing, whereby he demanded the sum of £— for the purchase by the company, in fee simple in possession, of the said lands, and as compensation to be made for the damage that would be sustained by him by reason of the making of the said railway; And whereas the said company disputed the said claim, and they have requested the said E. F. to abate the same, which he has declined to do, and has refused to treat further with the said company respecting the said premises; And whereas [here recite any steps which may have been taken for the purpose of determining, by arbitration or otherwise, the amount of the compensation]; And whereas the said company are desirous of entering upon and using the said lands before the purchase-money or compensation to be paid by them in respect of the same has been agreed upon or settled according to law: Wherefore, in compliance with and obedience to the act or acts of Parliament above mentioned, the said company, on the — day of — last, deposited by way of security the sum of £—, being the full amount claimed by the said E. F. as aforesaid, into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, to his account there, to the credit of the said E. F., and subject to the control and disposition of the said court, as appears by the receipt in writing of the cashier of the said bank: Now, therefore, the condition of the above-written bond is such, that, if the above-bounden company shall hereafter well and truly pay unto the said E. F., or shall deposit in the Bank of England for the benefit of the parties interested in the said lands, as the case may require,

(c) If the valuation be made by the surveyor appointed by two justices, as in Form, No. 33, the above precedent may be easily adapted by inserting the necessary recitals.

under the provisions contained in the said act or acts of Parliament above mentioned, all such purchase-money or compensation as may, in manner in the same act or acts provided, be determined to be payable by the above-bounden company in respect of the said lands so to be entered upon as aforesaid, together with interest on such purchase-money or compensation, at the rate of 5*l.* per centum per annum from the time of the entry of the above-bounden company upon the said lands until such purchase-money or compensation shall be paid to the said E. F., or be deposited in the bank for the benefit of the parties interested in the said lands, as the case may require, as aforesaid, then the above-written bond or obligation shall be void and of no effect, otherwise the same shall be and remain in full force and virtue.

Sealed with the common seal of the said company, and sealed and delivered by the said A. B. and
C. D. in the presence of —.

[Here describe the lands.]

No. 36.

Whereas differences have arisen between the — company on the one part and — of — on the other part, with respect to the compensation claimed by the said — to be paid to — by the said company, for the purchase of certain lands in — required to be taken by the said company for the purposes of the — Act, 18—, and also for the damage to be sustained by the said — by reason of the execution of the works authorized by the said act; and whereas in pursuance of the said act, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, incorporated therewith, the matters so in dispute have been referred to two arbitrators; and whereas the said arbitrators have, for seven days after request made to them by the said —, neglected to appoint an umpire; and whereas the said — applied to the Lords of the Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations to appoint an umpire in the matters of the said reference: Now therefore, the Lords of the said Committee, in pursuance of the said hereinbefore-mentioned acts, do hereby nominate and appoint — of — to be the umpire to decide on any matter so referred to the said arbitrators, on which they shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under the provisions of the said acts.

Signed by order of the Lords of the said Committee, on — day of — 18—. —, one of the Secretaries of the said Committee.

36. Appointment of umpire by the Board of Trade (d).

No. 37.

To all to whom these presents shall come, I (A. B. of —) send greeting:

Whereas under and by virtue of a certain act of Parliament intituled [insert title of special act], and of certain acts of Parliament incorporated therewith, a certain railway company was incorporated and authorized to make and maintain a railway from — in the county of —, to — in the county of —, and to purchase and take certain lands which were requisite for the purposes of the said undertaking; and whereas under the powers and provisions contained in the said acts, or some or one of them, the said company were authorized to purchase and take for the purposes of the said undertaking, the lands hereinafter particularly mentioned in the schedule hereunder written, and described on the plan hereto annexed, and coloured green on the said plan; and whereas the said C. D. and E. F. were entitled or claimed to be entitled to sell and convey and release the said lands to the said company under the powers and provisions contained in the said acts, some or one of them; and whereas on or about the — day of —, A.D. 18—, notice in writing was duly given to the said C. D. and E. F., as being the owners or reputed owners of the said lands, by the said company according to the provisions contained in the said acts, some or one of them, that the above-mentioned lands were required to be taken and used for the purposes of the said railway, and that the said company were willing to treat for the purchase of the respective interests of them the said C. D. and E. F. therein, and as to the compensation to be made to them for the damage that might be sustained by them by reason of the execution of the said railway works; and in and by the said notice of the

37. Award under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, made by an umpire appointed by the Board of Trade (e). (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, ss. 25 to 37, ante, App. 50, and see text, 282.) (f)

(e) This form may easily be adapted to an award made by a single arbitrator, or by two arbitrators appointed under sect. 25, or by an umpire appointed by the two arbitrators under sect. 27. It will be prudent in each case to state every fact which is necessary to show jurisdiction.

said company required the said C. D. and E. F. to deliver a statement in writing of the particulars of their respective estates and interests in the said lands, and of the claims made by them respectively in respect thereof; and whereas in pursuance of the said last-mentioned notice, the said C. D. and E. F., on or about the — day of —, 18—, by a statement in writing under their hands, informed the said company, that they the said C. D. and E. F. were seised and possessed to their own use and benefit of an estate in fee simple in the said lands, and that they claimed the sum of £— as compensation for their estate and interest in such lands, and for the damage they might sustain by reason of the execution of the works authorized to be executed by the said railway acts; and they the C. D. and E. F., (the said company not having then issued their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury in respect of the said lands) also signified their desire to the said company to have the said question of compensation and damage settled by arbitration, conformably to the directions of the said hereinbefore-mentioned acts, some or one of them; and whereas they the said C. D. and E. F. and the said company did not agree and could not agree as to the amount of compensation and damage to be paid as aforesaid, neither did they the said company offer any sum of money to the said C. D. and E. F., as and for such compensation as aforesaid; and whereas they the said C. D. and E. F. and the said company did not concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator: whereupon the said railway company, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the said acts, some or one of them, duly nominated and appointed, in writing under the hands of two of the directors of the said company, H. J. of —, land surveyor, to be an arbitrator to whom the question of such compensation as aforesaid should be referred, and requested the said C. D. and E. F. also to appoint an arbitrator; and whereas the said C. D. and E. F., in pursuance of the provisions contained in the said acts, some or one of them, and of the said request so made as aforesaid, duly nominated and appointed, by writing under their hands, K. L. of —, land surveyor, as the other arbitrator to whom the question of such compensation as aforesaid should be referred; and whereas the said arbitrators, before they entered into the consideration of the matters so referred to them as aforesaid, duly made and subscribed, in the presence of a justice duly authorized in that behalf, the declaration required by the said acts, some or one of them; and whereas the said arbitrators entered upon the matters so referred to them as aforesaid, but did not, in pursuance of the said acts, some or one of them, nominate and appoint an umpire to decide on any matters in which they might differ, or which were referred to them as aforesaid, but on the contrary they the said arbitrators altogether refused to appoint an umpire within the time prescribed in the said acts, some or one of them: whereupon the said railway company, on or about the — day of —, duly made application in writing to the Lords of the Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations, requesting them to appoint an umpire, in pursuance of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, being one of the said acts incorporated with the said act intituled [here state the title of the special act]; and the said lords thereupon, in pursuance of the said request, and of the provisions contained in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, by writing signed by —, duly appointed me (g), the before-mentioned A. B., to be the umpire in the matter of the said arbitration; and whereas the said arbitrators, by reason of a difference between them, failed to make their award within twenty-one days after the day on which the last of the said arbitrators was appointed, and no extended time was appointed by them for the purpose of making their award, whereby the matters referred to the said arbitrators as aforesaid, and on which they so differed, duly came before me, as umpire: Now know ye that I the said (A. B.), having taken upon me the burthen of making the said award, and having, before taking into consideration any of the matters referred to me, duly made and subscribed, in the presence of a justice duly authorized in that behalf, the declaration required by the said acts, some or one of them, and which said declaration is hereunto annexed; and having been attended [by the said arbitrators, and] by the said parties and their witnesses, [and having also viewed the said lands,] and having also in making this my award regarded not only the value of the land to be purchased or taken, as aforesaid, by the said company from the said C. D. and E. F., but also the damage to be sustained by them, by reason of the severing the said lands taken from the other lands of the said C. D. and E. F., or otherwise injuriously affecting such other lands by the exercise by the said company of the powers contained in the said acts, or either of them, do make this my award in writing concerning the premises, in manner and form following, that is to say, I do award, decide, order and determine that the said company shall pay the sum of £— for the absolute purchase of the fee simple in possession free from incumbrances (save and except the land tax and tithe commutation rent-charge) of all those pieces or parcels of land particularly mentioned and described in the said schedule hereunder written, and also delineated in the said plan hereunto annexed, and numbered respectively 2, 3, 4, 6, &c. to 18, on the said plan, and coloured green; and that the further sum of £— shall be paid by the said company as and for compensation for all damage which will be sustained by the owners of the said lands by reason of the execution of the said works, and by reason of the severing of the said lands from the other lands of such owners, or otherwise injuriously affecting such other lands by the exercise of the powers of the said acts.

And I the said A. B., in pursuance of the powers contained in the said acts, some or one of them, do hereby declare that I have settled the costs of the said C. D. and E. F. incident to this arbitration at the sum of £ —, and the costs of and incident to my umpirage and award at the sum of £ —, which said sums are to be paid by [as the case may be] (h). Witness my hand and seal this — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18— (i).
